The congregation of the Christian Temple, of Norfolk, is surprising themselves, as well as other people, in the erection of the handsome Church building now in course of erection. How they stand up to the load they have taken upon themselves, we do not know. We understand that they have raised, and will yet add to what they have already in hand, this year enough to run the sum up to $100,000. That is giving till they must feel it; but they are in earnest, and they mean to do their part to see the building completed. Any people who will give as liberally as they are doing, should have the hearty appreciation and help of their friends. We understand that the work of building is going forward splendidly, and they are hoping to get to occupy the new edifice in good time, perhaps before the coming winter is gone.

We wish to adopt as our own the expression of the editor of the Religious Herald in giving a word of caution to such as may write letters to the editor. We wish our people, in writing to the editor of THE SUN, would take the suggestions the same as if they had been originally addressed to them. Here is what he says, and he is right: "Quite naturally, many of our brethren write to us about matters which are under discussion. Quite a number of them fail to indicate whether their communications are intended for the public or only for the editorial eye. This is a perilous thing to do. If a letter to the editor is intended to be personal, always mark it personal, so that if by any chance the editor should be out of commission and some one acting as locum tenens should come across it, he may not make a mistake and publish what the writer would not have published under any consideration. Write as freely as you please in personal correspondence, but be sure always to identify it both on the envelope and on the letter itself as personal."

We are undoubtedly living in a remarkable period of the world. These days are remarkable in many ways, but perhaps in none more so than in the fact that so many unexpected things happen, some good and some bad—very bad. Here is one of the latter class. We clip the facts from an exchange:

"This is a big country of ours, and all sorts of things happen in it. We doubt if anything more singular in its way has happened for a long time than the killing of a Catholic priest in Kalamazoo, Mich., by his assistant pastor. Three priests were having their evening meal when the superior told his assistant to go upstairs and pack his grip. Instead of doing this, he went to his room, got a revolver, returned to the place where they were dining, and, as he entered with the revolver extended, the priest who had given him the order, started to throw a salt cellar at him, whereupon the priest with the revolver shot him. Then as the slain man slipped to the floor, the slayer, according to his own story, handed to the third priest 'a phial containing holy oil and told him to administer the sacrament of extreme unction at once.' What a remarkable story, from every point of view!"

ON TO THE CHAUTAUQUA!

By Rev. B. J. Earp.

It was a part of my experience during my vacation last summer to go to the Chautauqua and School of Methods at Elon College. I went to every class and meeting of the school that it was possible for me to attend. The attendance was not as large as we had hoped for, but the work that was accomplished was worth while. Our Church leaders and workers need just such a school as is offered at the Elon Chautauqua.

It is useless to say that we have not the money to send representatives from our Sunday Schools and Christian Endeavor Societies. We have the money! It is spent for most everything else that the young people decide they want. We find money for hay-rides, picnics, truck-rides, outings, campings, hikes, social features, etc., and our Church leaders need not come with the plea that it is too far and my school is too poor to send a representative. Each Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Society owes it to itself to send representatives to the School of Methods at Elon. I feel that there is no better investment a school can make than to send its delegates to the Chautauqua. If you spend your money for an outing, you get one day's pleasure, and then it's gone; if you send a boy or girl to the Elon Chautauqua it may mean the saving of a life for Christ and the Church. Any way, if that boy or girl be a leader in their Church, there will be inspiration and methods of work brought back to the Church that are worth while, and perhaps can never be forgotten. As a pastor, I most heartily commend to our young people the Elon Chautauqua.

Newport News, Va.

FOR THE BOYS AND GIRLS.

For one week last summer, over fifty boys and girls met every morning in the old administration building at Elon in their own Chautauqua session. This year, in the graded school building, the program committee is arranging for even more interesting sessions for boys and girls, combining the program of a daily vacation Bible school and a children's Chautauqua. There will be a worship period, a music time, stories and games and handwork, all together to make a pleasant kind of a time for the younger members of the Chautauqua while their mothers and fathers are attending classes and lectures. The committee hopes to have Mrs. Robert Harden, of Greensboro, to help in planning and conducting the work. Mrs. Harden is trained in music and kindergarten work, and is now in daily vacation Bible school work in Greensboro, and if her plans for that time can be arranged, she will be at the Elon Chautauqua. Mrs. J. W. Patten, of Elon College, will have charge of the music, assisted by Miss Mary Graham Lawrence as pianist. Miss Lucy M. Eldredge, field secretary of religious education, will participate in the work. Miss Emma G. Lemen will assist in the story hour. A number of others will be there to take charge of the different classes and phases of the work, including a number of Elon College students trained for and interested in the work with boys and girls.

FIELD NOTES.

Amelia.

The people at Amelia seem to be taking new interest in the work of God. A marked increase in attendance is an evidence of this new interest. The members have recently decided to replace the old organ with a new piano. The cemetery is being surveyed and layed off systematically, and a new iron fence put around it. The memorial service was held on the second Sunday in May. The service was well attended, and a spirit of loving-fellowship was felt by all. "Children's Day" exercises will be held on the second Sunday in July. Rev. G. O. Lankford, pastor of the First Christian Church of Burlington, is to do the preaching in the revival meeting, which will begin the fourth Sunday in July.

Pleasant Ridge.

Pleasant Ridge is wide awake and very active. The interest in the Sunday School and Missionary Society is very high, and they are both doing splendid work. Plans are being made to organize a Christian Endeavor Society in the near future. A special series of meetings will begin the second Sunday in July, with B. J. Howard, of Chapel Hill, doing the preaching.

Salem Chapel.

Due to several different reasons, the people of Salem Chapel seem to have been, for the most part, in a dormant state for some time. However, with the coming of spring and summer, new interest seems to be stirring. All-day memorial service was held there on Sunday, June 3d. Rev. J. W. Patton preached two inspiring sermons. Plans are being made to organize a Sunday School at once. A fine new piano was placed in the Church early this spring, and a good start has already been made toward paying for it. Rev. C. R. Kegerice, of Winston-Salem, is to assist in the revival meeting which starts the first Sunday of August, during which meeting we trust and pray that God will be glorified by the conversion of many souls.

OUR CHAUTAUQUA NUMBER.

This issue of THE CHRISTIAN SUN is given over largely to the Chautauqua, which is to be held at Elon College, N. C., beginning July 30th and running to August 5th. The Chautauqua is a child of the Southern Christian Convention, it having taken it over a year or so ago.

Maybe many of our readers do not know just what is the purpose of the Chautauqua. Its real purpose is a worthy one, although it is possible to introduce in it features which may not seem to include its real purpose.

The great majority of our Church people do not have much advantage in the way of study, and the purpose of the Chautauqua is to put within the reach of the people instruction that may help them in their Church work. If you will turn to the program, you will see there are several courses of study that deal directly with the practical side of the work of the Church, and these are designed to help those who have no other means of acquiring information along these needed lines.

For instance, Dr. Staley is to give a course of study especially to help the pastors to get a better grasp on their special lines of work. Then Dr. Chas. H. Rowland is to give a course of study on the Church. Miss Emma G. Lemen is to give a course on children's work. Mr. Hermon Eldredge is to give a course on youth and the Church. Dr. Harper gives a course on social service. Rev. J. H. Lightbourne gives a course on Bible and young people. Mrs. Alice V. Morrill is to give a course on missions. Dr. Atkinson will give a course on stewardship. Rev. J. F. Morgan will give a course on Christian Endeavor.

There is also a special course in Sunday School organization and administration by Rev. E. B. Flory. Many of our Sunday School workers ought to find this a most attractive subject. Rev. Thomas Opie is to give a lecture on "God and Education." Rev. W. D. Parry will discuss the "Great Game of Pretend." We do not know what that means, but, doubtless, they will make it plain. Rev. I. W. Johnson, D. D., will give a lecture on "Virginia's Gift to Religious Freedom." Rev. J. G. Truitt will speak on "We are Debtors," besides some others. Let those who attend, go armed with pencils and tablets to take notes as these lectures are given. Surely, with all of these subjects and speakers before you, it will stir you up to have a desire to go—it will, we believe, be a feast to as many as shall avail themselves of the opportunity. We know of no other way our people can get so much instruction in so short a time, if they will use the occasion well. Try to be present at the opening and remain till the close, and so get all you can hold of the good things which may be given out during the entire series.

ANOTHER NEW-FANGLED NOTION GOING TO PIECES.

This is an age for something new, especially if it can by any means make it appear that it is an improvement on what went before it. It is not necessary to make sure that it really is an improvement over what went before it; if it seems to be something out of the ordinary, then that is the thing, no matter what its predecessor was or did.

We remember that as the great World War was coming to a close there were some of our far-seeing moderns who thought that such a change had been wrought in humanity, at least in that part of it that had been in the war, that the Church could not minister to the soldiers when they should get home—they would be so up-to-date that the old, slow-going Church would not be able to command the attention or the support of the men who had just been through the war—it would take something better than the Church to command the sympathy of the soldiers who had come home alive. It was declared that the Y. M. C. A. had done such great things for the men in service that no old way of service would be acceptable to them. Alas! we did not know but that the bottom of the bucket had dropped out, and henceforth we should find the Church a back number, but when the soldiers got home—well, they were the same specimens of humanity they had always been, and the dear old Church of Christ was just as necessary as it ever was, and seemed to be just as effective in ministering to the spiritual wants of men as ever. Since then we have heard nothing further of the Y. M. C. A. going to supplant the Church—no, indeed! the Church of Christ is still doing business in the old way, and is likely to continue to do so.

Let us try to remember that a good old thing is better than an untried new thing. It is well to have a new thing now and then, but let us not lose our heads over a thing just because it is new. It will more than likely turn up a failure.

Now, one of the latest of these new things was but recently going to do big things, but it has been found to be essentially a failure as compared with the old standby. We refer to the new way of preaching the Gospel by radio. Oh, it was said that soon we would not have but a very few preachers, as a few of the ablest ministers could minister to the whole country by means of the method of broadcasting the sermons all over the country, that only a few ministers would be needed any more—we were going to save the world by broadcasting the sermons of a few men. Now, what of it? The bubble has already exploded, and now even the man who was the first to use the radio says it is a failure—that the world cannot be won to Christ by the preaching through the radio. God settled that thing long ago by the preaching of men, chosen men, He proposes to give the Gospel to the world, and God's way will succeed while man's way will fail because it acnnot move the hearts of the people.

In an article under the heading of "Radio and Religion," the Rev. Edwin J. Van Etten, rector of Calvary Episcopal Church, who is called the pioneer radio preacher of Pittsburgh, already confesses his disillusionment in this matter by declaring that the radio is one of the forces which makes for "arm-chair religion." He is already convinced that radio preaching cannot take the place of regular worship in the house of God. He now fears that broadcasting sermons may prove a disintegrating influence to the Church.

An exchange, remarking on this situation, says:

The eagerness with which some preachers have courted the radio is only another example of the poverty of a certain type of modern ministers. Missing the chief things, they are ever on the alert for some new fad by means of which they can get before the public. Utterly at variance with the New Testament spirit is egotism in the Christian ministry, a seeking after prominence, self-advertising. And much of the radio "preaching" is just this and nothing more, a hankering after notoriety. The more the preachers resort to worldly means, the less progress they make. At the same time, they play into the hands of money-makers as excellent promoters of shrewd business.

The Pittsburgh rector, when the clouds rolled away, discovered another danger. Radio preaching, often stupidly set at the usual hour for public worship, lends encouragement to the half-hearted Church members to stay away from God's house. Every earnest Christian knows that public worship conserves the finest elements of our religion. We cannot estimate spiritual things by material standards, and hence no one can define the value of public worship; but no one will question the power on human life which is generated in a company of devout souls humbly worshiping God in the sanctuary. The reading of the Bible in the public assembly, singing the great hymns together, the call to prayer, the personal and direct meditation of the Gospel of Jesus, the indescribable influence of the Lord's Supper—these are some of the forces which renew and inspire man's spirit at Church. Then there is the vague, intangible, but most real, power of that which is called fellowship, the influence of heart upon heart.

It looks as if man is finding it very hard to be satisfied with God's ways of doing His work, but maybe, by and by, he will learn better. It takes some of us a long time to learn that His ways are always best. Let us recognize the fact that man is limited in his power and sense, and when he undertakes to uproot the plans of God he must fail. Do not forget it—God's ways are always best. To say that twenty-five ministers will do the preaching for the whole country is to show one's self a back number indeed.

SEEN IN THE WRONG LIGHT.

The day was dark, the clouds were thick and heavy. Josephine was making a dress for herself, but before she had finished her sewing she had a sort of fear to come over her lest she had made the dress with wrong side of the material on the outside. She called her grandmother and her mother, and then her Sister Mary, and asked them to see if she had made a mistake, and had sewed the goods with the wrong side out. Each one, coming to her assistance, but in the room under the same light, declared that the right side was on the outside, so she went ahead and finished her dress; and as it was almost night, she laid the dress away till morning. The next morning the sun was shining brilliantly. She tried her new dress on, and then walked out into the full light of the golden sun, when lo and behold! it was clear enough that she and her helpers were mistaken. She had made her beautiful dress with the wrong side of the goods on the outside, and then—well, there was nothing else to do but to rip the dress apart and do the work all over again, as it would never do to wear the dress with the right side under cover. How she did regret her mistake! The thought of having it all to do over again made her sick at heart, and for the moment she felt like giving it all up and having no new dress, and then she rebuked herself for the thought, as "that will never do." "I must get it made right, for I must go to Church and I must have a new dress." She went to work and did it all over again, and she thought how silly it was in me to work in a poor light and do my work all wrong—just for the want of a better light.

But Josephine is not the only one who is working under a wrong light and then will have to regret the expenditure of time and strength and money, all because they did their work in the wrong light. We have hosts of men and women who are working hard and getting nowhere, except into wrong attitudes of mind and, maybe, of heart, too. We are having in these early days of the twentieth century very much work done, but some of it is done on the wrong side because the workers were working in a poor light, and that is why they got the wrong side out and the right side in. Jesus met this same class of people in His day (see Matt. 11:25). What a pity that so many of us work in the wrong light!—in the light of the wisdom of this world instead of working in the light of God.

There can be no question but that the average man of learning of today is depending on human wisdom to the neglect of the light that shines from above. Human wisdom has its place, and as long as it keeps its place no just complaint can be maintained against it. The wisdom of God can be given to men, unless they become self-exalted on account of their own wisdom and ignore the light of God. Too many are doing that way, we fear, in this day, and at the same time are trying to make their work complete in their own wisdom. Of course, all such efforts must fail in the end.

Referring to this view of the wisdom of men, the Central Christian Advocate puts the case none too strongly when it says:

"This is a scientific age. Even so. It is an age of negation, of denials, of reconstructions and explanations that evaporate faith and reduce ancient beliefs to shadows. Quite true. But is our age quite sure of itself? Is it not also true that, in the splendor of the light that breaks forth from our laboratories and museums and the heavy tomes of criticism, there possibly may be some glint of overconfidence, begetting here and there something like self-esteem, something that is scarcely of necessity either depth of intellect or breadth of charity. Is this age of science an age of faith? Will faith come back to earth? Is there not in every deed some wee bit touch of Phariseeism abroad in this wonderful age? Some liberalism that now and then becomes in essence liberal? Perish the thought that any who have drank a wee bit from the wells more or less deep of modern liberalism should become even a little furious if others whose duties have not led them to the identical results the liberals have reached, beg and implore that the liberals will, without sarcasm, extend to them somewhat of the liberty of thought they have appropriated to themselves."

Brethren, remember Josephine! Remember what doing her work in a wrong light cost her. Get the right light, and make sure that you have the right side of your work on the outside, and then do your work well, and it will pay, for time and for eternity. Do not forget to read Matt. 11:25. Then turn to 1 Cor. 2:4-8. The man who goes to his Christian thought in the light of science only must find, at last, that he had worked in vain, and for the reason that he did his work not in the light of God, but in the light of science. Beloved, let us do our best to work in the light of God, and then our work will be well done, and it will stand all tests, because done in the light of God. It is true that true science is in harmony with God, for He is the Author of it; but there is so much science that is not true!

A QUESTION AS TO "MOTHERS' DAY." IS THIS WOMAN RIGHT?

Mrs. M. S. Ruff, writing in the Presbyterian of the South, gives her opinion of "Mothers' Day," and it is so unusual for a woman to take such a view of that day we are led to publish what she says simply to give our readers a chance to see the other side of "Mothers' Day." Can it be possible that we have held a wrong view concerning this matter? If so, will some of our readers show us wherein we are wrong. We are prepared to admit that we could go too far in the observance of "Mothers' Day" by giving her the place which belongs only to God. Mother, as a god, would be as far from right and proper as a piece of wood and stone, such as the heathen bow down to. We ask the opinion of our readers as to their thought of the stand Mrs. Ruff has taken. If she is right, we ought to know it. If she is wrong, we ought to be assured of that fact. This is what she says:

The first day of the week is called the Lord's day, because on that day Christ arose from the dead.

By whose authority has one of our Lord's days been dedicated yearly as "Mothers' Day?" It seems to me a great usurpation and contrary to the plain teachings of Jesus, who would not grant that even His own mother should be especially honored. Jesus gave the place of honor to those who would do the will of His Father, regardless of human relationships. Can it be claimed that all mothers fill this requirement?

Then, when "Mothers' Day" comes, it mokes one sick at heart when we go to God's house on God's day to worship Him, and instead of singing, "No Other Name so Sweet as Jesus," we are asked to sing, "The Dear Name Prized Above Every Other—the Beautiful Name of Mother."

One more step and what protest can we make to the worship of the virgin mother? Where are we drifting? What does all this putting woman forward in Church and State mean?

Beginning with Genesis, when woman became man's tempter, God assigned her a place of subjection. There can be but one head, and God has wisely given to each his work, making them mutually dependent. Why try to change God's order of relationship?

The head of every man is Christ, and the head of the woman is the man.

The work of woman has always been, and still is, the most important of all. Christ was the seed of the woman, and all childlife is intrusted to her in the formative and constructive periods.

Upon woman depends the home, and upon the homes depend the Church and nation. The children of this generation are suffering for the lack of mothers who are willing to teach and train them in the way they should go. There is no sweeter work than that God has assigned to woman. Mothers are turning this precious work over to others, while they entertain themselves with clubs, cards and politics, and are even trying to be rulers in the Church of God, when He has said: "Let women keep silence in the Churches." "I suffer not a woman to teach nor to usurp authority over man."

Let us, as women and mothers, be content to trust the wisdom of God, who has planned all things for the good of mankind. It is when we cease to conform to His laws that we get into trouble. Let us return to the old paths. "To the law and to the testimony." "Let the aged women teach the younger to love their husbands, and children, and to be keepers at home." When this is done, there will be many more evils righted than woman can right by being in politics or trying to become rulers in Church courts.

There are so many artful ways the devil has of getting in his work that it is not an easy thing to be sure of ourselves in many instances. The Rev. J. S. Hardway, writing to the Biblical Recorder, says this of the work of the radio, and we commend it to the consideration of our many readers:

A few weeks ago a man said, in the hearing of another on a train: "I was in Atlanta last Sunday, and did not have to go to Church; I caught a sermon over radio."

The radio is a wonderful thing, and is much in evidence just now. It is marvelous to hear the human voice over a distance of a thousand miles with the same distinctness as if speaker and hearer were in the same room. But this man is deceiving himself. Here is a man who is plainly a good man, who is satisfying himself with radio as a means of worship. He thinks that he can stay at home and "tune in" with radio, and fulfill his duty as to worshiping God. He is mistaken; he is fooling himself; he is lazily yielding to the flesh, and is not living in duty. The worship of God is a far more serious thing than sitting at a table and tinkering with a radio machine. Worship on the Lord's day means presence in God's house if we can be there; it means heart and voice engaged in God's worship; it means example and influence, speaking to others and calling on them to join in this holy exercise.

If the apostacy of worshiping by radio is kept up, the time may come when we may place a phonograph on the pulpit to proclaim the Word of God and to pray and sing for us, and worship will become what? Alas! it too often does become, even with the people present—a mere mechanical affair, without heart, soul, or reality, a mere empty sound, a form of worship without influence or power.

"God is a Spirit, and they that worship Him must worship Him in spirit and in truth."

The matter of union of the different denominations is a puzzling question. The old ship of Zion, with the union forces on board, seems to strike a snag in most unexpected places. We have heard that the union question was seemingly having fair sailing in heathen countries, that they were really leading the way to show us in Christendom how to be united in the cause of Christ, but now there comes a disappointing note, and it is from such a reliable source that we can but credit it as presenting the real situation. However, we must say it seems pretty narrow when we cannot work in fellowship one with another without feeling we cannot give expression to our honest convictions of truth. The Rev. A. C. Dixon, D. D., Baltimore, Md., in writing to the Watchman-Examiner, a leading Baptist paper, presents the union situation in the Orient this way:

"The Presbyterian ceases to emphasize the sovereignty of God; the Methodist is silent as to the witness of the Spirit; the Episcopalian avoids the mention of what he believes about worship and ecclesiastical order; the Congregationalist omits the discussion of personal liberty; the Quaker refuses to protest against outward forms; the Baptist does not insist upon obedience to every command of Christ; and now the fundamentalist must not obtrude his convictions as to the full inspiration of the Bible, the virgin birth, the bodily resurrection of Christ, the atoning blood, the second coming of our Lord, the supernatural origin and nature of the Bible, of the Church and of Christian experience. And when all these things are omitted, we have lost the truth that is really worth while. The revival of a healthy denominationalism is urgently needed."

How does this strike you? Is it right or not? "The morning congregation of a Church shows the popularity of the Church; the evening congregation shows the popularity of the minister; but the Wednesday night prayer-meeting congregation shows the popularity of Jesus in that Church." We believe that is true, and if it be, tell us how popular is Jesus in your congregation. Do you know how to make the report? Do it this way: See how many people attend the morning service, then see how many attend the evening service. Then when Wednesday night comes, see how many people attend the prayer meeting, and that will show you the popularity of Jesus in your Church. Please make the count and report to us just what the attendance is in your Church for these three services. Give each one independently, and that will indicate the popularity of the Church, of your pastor, and of Jesus Himself.

The Seaside Chautauqua and School of Methods.

This summer school of one week was conceived and guaranteed by five men who felt that a seaside outing under Christian educational conduct would cultivate a brotherly feeling and put their work on a more intelligent and uniform basis. Their purpose and hopes have not been disappointed. The sessions have continued with only the 1920 exception, from 1914 to this year, 1923, eight annual sessions in all. Six of these sessions were held at Virginia Beach, in the Baptist auditorium, at a reasonable rental; 1921 was held under a tent at Ocean View; and 1922 at Elon College. Those who attended the seaside sessions enjoyed the sea breeze, fishing and bathing; and, more, the splendid instruction in Sunday School, missions and Church methods, together with great lectures by famous speakers, and music. The sessions will be remembered by those who attended as social, inspirational and spiritual memories of delightful and recreational privileges.

Conditions in 1920 made it wise to omit that session, as opinions were divided as to the place of permanent sessions. The sea seemed too far away from ministers and Sunday School workers to attend in large numbers, and some thought that Elon College was the logical location as more central and freer from outside attractions. Hence, the 1922 session was held at that institution, and the conduct transferred from the voluntary management to the Board of Religious Education. So far as the present knows, it will continue its annual sessions. The pro and con arguments for location have sound reasons on both sides, while it is in its experimental stages; but the value of such an institution for permanent service to the Church is now admitted by all thoughtful people interested in Church and Sunday School progress. The elimination of local and personal interest and convenience should not enter the equation, but results will reveal the wisdom for permanent location and management.

The place of the Chautauqua in the work of the Chautauqua is threefold—it develops those who accept service in any department of its work; it enlightens and broadens those who attend its classes and lectures, and it improves the work of the local Churches through the new methods and inspiration which those who attend carry back into the congregations. It is really a school of methods, the word "Chautauqua" being derived from a town on Chautauqua Lake, in western New York, where like assemblies have been held since 1874. The word has found its place in summer assemblies for educational and religious meeting as fixed as the lake is in the Empire State, and this is hoping that our Chautauqua and School of Methods will find as permanent a place in the work and program of the Southern Christian Convention, and here is hoping that the 1923 session at Elon College will be the best attended and do the best work since the 1914 session.

ELON LETTER.

Two summer schools and Conferences on Christian education have already been held this summer, from May 28th to June 7th, in Palmer College, and from June 12th to 21st, in Union Christian College. Three others are to be held—Defiance College, July 16th to 26th; Craigville, Mass., July 30th to August 3d; and Elon College, July 30th to August 5th. Next year we hope to add three others to the list—Bethlehem College, Kirton Hall, and Starkey Seminary.

What do we hope to accomplish in these schools and conferences?

Many things. I will mention eight. The reader will think of others.

1. Give our educational institutions a splendid opportunity to touch in a vital way the workers in our local Churches who cannot go to college or whose college days are past.

2. Emphasize in group gatherings face to face the objectives of our department of Christian education.

3. Offer courses for credit on professional certificates for teachers and other Church workers.

4. Offer courses that our colleges will accept for entrance credit and later for college credit toward degrees.

5. Show by actual demonstration that devotion, diligent study, inspiration, and recreation constitute a symmetrical unity in life.

6. With experience as the basis, consider the perplexing problems of the local congregation and point the way to their solution.

7. Discover leaders among our young people whose opportunities are now circumscribed for lack of vision and induce them to go forward in preparation for larger service.

8. In good-fellowship sow the seed of a larger Church and a growing constituency.

How are these things to be accomplished?

(1) By selecting as speakers, lecturers, leaders, and teachers for these schools and Conferences persons who are authorities in their departments.

(2) By constructing a program that combines into a single unity all the elements of the religious life.

(3) By arranging for a wholesome social life in a common dining-hall and sleeping-quarters.

(4) By inducing various organizations to send their workers to the schools and Conferences.

(5) By keeping the cost so low that large numbers can attend.

Here is a sample, typical of all.

The Elon session this year begins at 8:30 A. M. and closes about 9:30 P. M. The daily program consists of an early morning hour of worship. Then come hour periods of methods, content, inspiration, missions, and recreation. From three till four in the afternoon is the program discussion period. From seven to eight P. M. is held a community sing and general recreation period. At night comes the lecture and entertainment period. Sunday is arranged for services typical of the local Churches as they ought to be. There is also a children's Chautauqua from 10 to 12:15 daily.

The faculty members of the 1923 session at Elon are Dr. C. H. Rowland, Miss Lucy M. Eldredge, Hermon Eldredge, Miss Emma G. Lemen, Rev. E. B. Flory, Dr. R. C. Helfenstein, Dr. J. O. Atkinson, Rev. J. H. Lightbourne, Mrs. M. T. Morrill, Rev. J. F. Morgan, Dr. G. O. Lankford, C. H. Stephenson, Dr. W. D. Parry, Rev. W. B. Terrell, Dr. Thos. F. Opie, Rev. John G. Truitt, and Rev. T. E. Beaman, W. A. Harper, Dr. W. W. Staley, Rev. I. W. Johnson, W. B. Truitt, Miss Pattie Coghill.

Seven days thus invested will bear fruit for eternity in our local Churches. We have not yet dreamed of the possibilities of our summer schools and conferences of Christian education. They are among our chiefest assets for the growth and development of our Church. The local Church that neglects them will regret it. The local Church that avails itself of them and of their inspiration—keep your eyes on that Church. It will grow and flourish and achieve the goals of an advancing kingdom.

W. A. Harper.

SHALL THE CHURCH OR THE WORLD MAKE RULES FOR CHRISTIANS TO LIVE BY?

By Rev. S. L. Baugher.

When the denominations adopted the phrase, "religious education," was there not a stepping up by the liberalist and thus weakening both the Church and the Sunday School in all our denominations by leaving out the phrase, "Christian education?" That term means so much more than religious education. For instance, the Mohammedans claim to be religious. Even some of our free-thinkers, the Mormans, the Adventists, agnostics, and so forth, all claim to be religious. As a fundamentalist, I am grieved at heart because many of our colleges and seminaries have teachers who no longer believe the Bible. When I see the heading in our Church papers, "The Department of Religious Education," when, in fact, all these great denominations should be standing for the old faith, coming out from the world and saying we will stand for the Bible and the Christianity of the Bible, even though we should stand alone in doing so.

In many of our religious papers no spiritual food is given to the people—at least, very little, if any. Seven such papers come to my table weekly, and I know whereof I speak. At the National Sunday School Convention, at Kansas City, Mo., for some reason, they adopted the phrase, "religious education." I presume the aim was to become so liberal as not to hurt the feelings of the sinner or of any worldly organization. It was possibly a short cut to greater popularity among worldly organizations.

Beloved, where are we drifting? I am sure it seems to me we are not drifting toward God. There is some work done outwardly and on the surface which looks quite nice from a human standpoint, but is it not very superficial? And if so, God is not satisfied with it. When we take up the old Book and hear God talk to us about salvation, and the work of the Holy Spirit, we get the facts straight. There are no "ifs" and "ands" about it. God means what He says to us, and we will do well to give heed thereto.

If parents can attend only one service on Sunday, let them take their children with them and have them sit with them in the house of the Lord through the hour for worship and preaching. If a real preacher is in the pulpit, he prepares his message for the people—not just to please the "itching ears," and not for mere popularity's sake, but for the glory of God in the salvation of souls. Many teachers talk baseball, motion pictures, etc. I would like to see a change made, and all our educational departments named "Christian Education"; that is, I would like to see all the departments now known as "religious education," made to stand out as "Christian education." Brethren, think of these things, and let us correlate all of our educational work, so that it may be truly known as Christian education—that is the great need of the world today: to be taught as Christians!

A GOOD REPORT.

There has fallen into my hands by chance a deacons' report, which, from my point of view, makes mighty good reading. So many deacons' reports are general rather than specific that this one, giving actual facts, seems not only different, but worthy of emulation. I am not sure that the deacons making the report will forgive me for publishing it, as they never had a thought that it would reach me, and so their individual names are withheld. The report reads as follows:

Report of Deacons to Quarterly Conference, First Christian Church.

Winchester, May 2, 1923.

DEAR FELLOW-WORKERS:

Our present pastor, Rev. J. F. Morgan, has been with us one year. It is, therefore, with pleasure that we can report an excellent year's work in our Church under his efficient pastorship.

Just briefly, we wish to mention a few things that have been accomplished during the past year.

The adoption of a constitution for the guidance of the Church in the conduct of her business, and the creating of an official board to look after the business of the Church between the meetings of the quarterly Conferences.

Creating of the office of mission treasurer and using the duplex envelopes for current expenses and missions. In former years it has been necessary for us to put on a drive before the close of the Conference year in order to raise our Conference apportionments. This year we will have this raised before Conference; in fact, we already have more than the amount, now in the treasury.

This is a forward step in the right direction. The setting of a time—the third Sunday in July—for the every-member canvass, making it an annual occurrence, is also a step forward.

The increased attendance at our Church services has been very marked. We give here a few figures that were secured by actual count:

1922, first Sunday in April—morning service, 53; evening, 40.

1923, first Sunday in April—early dawn service, 53; evening, 98.

1922, fourth Sunday in March—morning service, 40; evening, 53.

1923, fourth Sunday in March—morning service, 70; evening, 95.

1922, second Sunday in March—morning service, 55; evening, 40.

1923, second Sunday in March—morning service, 75; evening, 188.

During the year the following organizations have attended our services in a body: Red Men, Friendship Fire Company, Woodmen of the World, and Odd Fellows. We feel highly honored in having the presence of these organizations in our services. We cannot help but feel that the influence for righteousness our pastor has in our city was a factor in bringing them to our services.

Our pastor has worked hard and faithfully during the past year, and his close attention to pastoral duties is to be commended. His sermons have been of the very best. Many expressions of praise have we heard of his sermons, and they have been of great drawing power in bringing people to our services, besides the good they are doing for the advancement of the kingdom of God in men's hearts. There has also been a marked growth during the past year in the spiritual life of the Church.

We would like to take this opportunity to voice our praise and thanks to our choir director, Mrs. B. R. Richards, and her faithful co-workers. Our music has been real good, and we feel that the work of the choir is of great help in making our services helpful and uplifting.

The Sunday School is making rapid steps forward. Our superintendent informs us that our average attendance is higher than that of any other school in the city. The attendance a few Sundays ago was 121—the high mark for any regular session since we changed to the morning hour.

All departments of our Church have done good work the past year, and as we look forward to another year it is with a bright hope for a successful year if we will all do our very best.

The finances have been good the past year, and especially so when we take into consideration the financial depression in this community. We feel the greater part of our membership will give freely and liberally if they have the means to do so.

We have been able to pay the pastor's salary the first of each month, and have kept the interest on the parsonage debt paid, which amounts to about thirty dollars a month. We have also paid $140.00 on the furnace we had to put in the parsonage.

The most of our membership have worked hard and have been faithful to the Church this year. Some, we regret to say, have not been as zealous about the work as they should. This we do not feel is the fault of our pastor or those who are faithful to the Church. We believe it is a lack of interest on their part in the work of the kingdom. And our prayer is that they may, in some way, be led to a responsibility of their duty to their Church and to their God.

During the past year we have received into our membership thirty-five new members. This is more than a 20 per cent increase.

The writer joins all SUN readers in wishing that all our Churches this year may have 20 per cent increase—or more.

AN OCCASION AND SOME OBSERVATIONS

Is the work of the Church making proportionate progress with the country's material development? This is a question that often comes to my mind as I travel, nearly every Sunday, to some place to be of some service on some occasion. In my travels while editor of THE CHRISTIAN SUN it was almost necessary, with few exceptions, to leave home on Saturday in order to reach the place on time. For more than a year I have been making nearly all my trips the same day; at times, covering more than 200 miles.

I recall that Rev. P. T. Klapp was once my pastor. He lived at what was then a great distance from the Church. He would leave home Friday afternoon or early Saturday morning. Travel conditions made it necessary, of course. Sunday morning, July 1st, I left home to be in a service with Bro. Klapp, at Danville, Va. The distance is forty-five miles from Burlington, and I made the trip easily in two hours. I thought, as I traveled along, of the great change from the time that it took Bro. Klapp to reach my home Church from the time that it took for me to reach his Church.

The Church opened up the way for material progress. Material things have made so much more progress than was expected that too often the Church is inclined to be critical of this growth rather than to join in for a more rapid advance in everything. Can the Church ever adjust itself to speed and rapid advancement for the kingdom's progress?

But, about Danville Church. The occasion was "College Day." Though the morning's weather had been threatening, the attendance was gratifying. Pastor Klapp spoke first, and then the writer. The matter of Christian education for the masses was the thought, of course, presented in both addresses. The writer preached at night, and, unlike the attendance in many places, the audience was much larger than that of the morning.

The outlook at Danville seems to be healthy and hopeful. The Church needs a resident pastor, and it is a hindrance to the cause that we do not have one. The membership of the Church is loyal and devoted. Danville is a city of about twenty-five thousand people. Our Church is located in the northern section of the city, just a few blocks from the present corporate limits. It will be only a matter of time when that section will have to give way to city administration and become a part of greater Danville. The Church itself will profit by the encouragement of such a move.

I am glad that "College Day" has become a part of our Convention work. The occasion is not a "drive"; it is not a "special" occasion; it is not a day for Elon and Bethlehem Colleges alone—but a day of education for the Church. It is not a day of student-getting, but a day of seed-sowing for larger things that will come only through a more intelligent leadership from the smallest organization of the local Church to the highest functioning body of the denomination. The day is one glorious opportunity for every pastor and every leader in every local Church.

C. B. RIDDLE.

ELON CHAUTAUQUA

WHAT IS THE CHAUTAUQUA?

By Rev. W. T. Walters, D. D.,
Chairman of Board of Religious Education.

What is the Chautauqua and School of Methods, to be held at Elon College, July 30th to August 5th?

It is a leaders' training school. It is the culmination of the system inaugurated or fostered by the Board of Religious Education for a more efficient work among our young people.

It is impractical to attempt a system of bringing an organized field force in direct contact with every individual pupil. The nearest approach we can make to that is the occasional visit to the school; but if our secretary could give every Sunday to this work, visiting one school each Sunday, it would take four years to get around. The other method of direct contact is the daily vacation Bible school, but this phase of the work is limited from the standpoint of field workers. Therefore, the board must concentrate its efforts on training leadership. At present, we have three fields for this work, namely: The Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention, the Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Institute, and the Chautauqua.

The Convention is designed to be a meeting place of representatives from all the schools. The sessions are short and much of the time is taken with business and inspirational addresses, with only a limited time for open discussion or institute work in definite phases of the Sunday School and Christian Endeavor program. These Conventions have done much to stimulate a deeper interest in the work, and have inspired to new zeal and efforts. We may add to their effectiveness in the future by the addition of institutional features.

The institute reaches a smaller group of schools and concentrates on training leaders. It is the most effective method for reaching the workers in all our schools. It needs enlargement of scope and a deepening interest on the part of the schools represented.

The Chautauqua reaches a more select group and, owing to the length of time, does a much more effective work. This is the last step in the system carried out by the board. It is the school where we train leaders who, in turn, are to train leaders in their respective Churches.

Every Church should have a selected group of its brightest and best workers at the Chautauqua every year. This group should include the following: The pastor, the Sunday School superintendent, the president of the Christian Endeavor Society, the leader in the Woman's Missionary Society, and at least two Sunday School teachers. The management has endeavored to provide a strong, practical program and make the cost within the reach of all. We want to help your school by training two or more of your workers this year.

A SPECIAL MESSAGE.

By Rev. Warren H. Denison,
Superintendent of the Forward Movement of the Christian Church.

I rejoice that our Board of Religious Education is planning so thoroughly for this year's Chautauqua at Elon. I believe this to be one of the very important agencies in our Convention. It is not one of the enterprises that shows great things at once, but it is educational, and therein lies its power. I know the amount of patient work it takes, for I was president, and also chairman of the program committee for some seven years. I cannot but compare the Sunday Schools and Christian Endeavor Societies in their work now with that before 1914. Since that time, Eastern Virginia Conference has placed Mrs. Bullock in its field, and later she has become a general worker throughout the entire Church. In the same we now have our Religious Education Board in our Convention, with Miss Eldredge giving full time to the work. That Seaside Chautauqua has been the forerunner also of one in each of our District Conventions. Those Churches that had representatives at its first session were wise, and those Churches that have good delegations present at Elon this year will be wise, too. The great need of our Churches is just this kind of instruction. The institute work is an outstanding need of our congregations. Our instructors and specialists compare favorably with corresponding workers in other Churches. Let all our Churches be represented at the Chautauqua this year!

Dayton, Ohio.

THE HISTORY OF THE CHAUTAUQUA MOVEMENT IN THE CHRISIAN CHURCH.

By S. M. Smith,
Former Executive Secretary of the Chautauqua.

The first effort made to organize The Seaside Chautauqua and School of Methods was at the Sunday School Convention held at the Liberty Springs Church, in Nansemond County, Va., during the summer of 1912. A committee of representative workers, appointed by the president, met in the Church during the noon-hour and discussed the matter pro and con. The idea met with general approval, but there was a question as to whether the Christian Church was big enough to tackle such a big proposition. This sort of feeling has no doubt prevented the denomination from keeping pace with other larger religious bodies in years past. There is evidence, however, that this feeling has been rapidly giving way in recent years. The caucus at Liberty Springs did not result in definite action. At the next meeting of the Convention, held in Suffolk, Va., during the following summer, the matter was again presented, and the Convention was asked to take action. A committee was appointed and a meeting held in the basement of the Church during the noon hour. The proposition took definite shape when five men agreed to contribute one hundred dollars each as the beginning of a fund to guarantee the expense. If I mistake not, the five men were Willis J. Lee, Rev. C. H. Rowland, Rev. W. W. Staley, I. A. Luke and R. B. Odom. The committee reported favorably to the Convention at the afternoon session, asking its endorsement without financial obligation, which was given by unanimous vote.

Virginia Beach was selected as the place of meeting, option already having been secured on the Baptist Tabernacle there as the place for holding the sessions. The Convention appointed a central executive committee, with full power to act in all matters concerning the promotion of the Chautauqua. This committee elected Rev. W. H. Denison as president, and S. M. Smith as general secretary.

The first session held, July 20-26, 1914, was a big success. The enrollment was larger than it has ever been since, the representation being generally from the South. The two outstanding men on the program the first year, not members of our denomination, were George R. Stuart and Gypsy Smith, Jr. During the years that have intervened since the first session was held, the leading workers of the denomination—North, South, East and West—have been on the program and in every instance have served without pay. From among those outside of the denomination, prominent lecturers and Sunday School experts who have been on the program in past years, we note the following: Miss Elizabeth Harris, elementary superintendent New York State Sunday School Association; Hon. R. P. Claxton, United States commissioner of education; Rev. Peter Ainslie, D. D., of Baltimore; Marion Lawrence and W. C. Pearce, of the International Sunday School Association; Karl Lehman, of the United Society of Christian Endeavor; Miss Hazel Lewis, elementary specialist of Disciples Church; Mrs. Isaac Sewell, elementary superintendent of Southern M. E. Sunday School Board; Joseph Clark, general secretary of New York State Sunday School Association, and possibly others.

Each year since the Chautauqua was organized due recognition has been given to those who were present throughout the sessions and took the work outlined. There are many particularly in Eastern Virginia who have never missed a session and whose efficiency today as pastors and Sunday School workers can be justly credited to the Chautauqua. Its influence will be felt more and more as the years go by. Since the first session of the Chautauqua in the summer of 1914, sessions have been held every year except one during the war. At the session held at Virginia Beach in 1920, the place of meeting was changed by vote of the executive committee from Virginia Beach to Ocean View. Following the session at Ocean View, the Southern Christian Convention voted to become sponsor for the Chautauqua and the place of meeting was changed to Elon College.

In the organization and promotion of the Chautauqua, the denomination took an advance step in religious education. Its value cannot be estimated. It fills a need not met by any other agency. More and more, as the years go by, its place and purpose in the Church will be realized and recognized.

DR. W. T. WALTERS,
Chairman of Board of Religious Education.

No Church or Sunday School can make a better investment than to send their most representative workers each year.

Huntington, W. Va.

OUR PASTORS AND THE CHAUTAUQUA.

The Chautauqua, which is to be held at Elon College, July 30th to August 5th, will undoubtedly be of great interest and helpfulness, especially to all pastors who can attend. From advanced sheets of the program, one readily sees that almost every vital topic that the pastor has to deal with is to be treated. Dr. W. W. Staley, of Suffolk, is to conduct a pastors' class, and from the ripeness of his own experience and the breadth of his knowledge about the pastors' problems, this course alone will be worth all that it will cost any pastor to attend. Dr. Staley's saving sense of humor, his profound philosophic insight and his devotion to the pastor's task fit him peculiarly for the class-work he is to do.

Then it is noted that Rev. E. B. Flory, himself a successful pastor, but only recently out of the classic halls of Yale, is to give a course on "The Organization and Administration of Sunday Schools." The Sunday School problem is certainly a problem of every pastor, and all who attend the Chautauqua should be edified by Bro. Flory's studies.

Dr. Roy C. Helfenstein, of Dover, Del., is to give three lectures on "Evangelism." Every pastor goes up against the proposition of evangelism, and this proposition constantly recurs with increasing interest and difficulty. If the pastors can be helped in their solution of this weighty problem, it certainly will be worth their while to be at the Chautauqua and hear Dr. Helfenstein.

Then it must be noted with peculiar interest and appreciation to pastors that Bro. Herman Eldredge, our religious education field-man, and a live wire on all themes he touches, is to give a course on "Youth and the Church." This should be wonderfully appealing to our pastors in particular, since the future of the Church depends upon the youths now in and about the Church.

Rev. James H. Lightbourne, who always does well what he undertakes to do, is to give a Bible course in "Meeting the Master." This should appeal to pastors because the pastors' fundamental problem is that of leading people to meet the Master.

These are only some of the several topics that must appeal to our pastors. One is led to believe that it would be a fine investment on the part of any Church to send its pastor at its expense to attend the Chautauqua. He would certainly give back to the Church in increasing interest and information far more than the money cost of sending him to the Chautauqua.

Then it will certainly be worth while for all our missionary societies to have a leader or representative at the Chautauqua. Mrs. M. T. Morrill, of Dayton, Ohio, is to be present and teach a class, and there are many topics allied to missions that missionary workers should hear discussed and should study. It would be a fine thing if the pastors would urge their missionary societies to send one or more representatives.

The cost is exceedingly reasonable, and the meeting promises to be unusually interesting and helpful. Dr. Walters, Miss Eldredge and their co-workers have certainly built an inviting program which, if carried out as promised, will be worth while to every pastor and every religious worker who can attend.

OUR LOYAL TEACHERS.

By Rev. E. B. Flory,
Pastor of First Christian Church, Norfolk, Va.

Multiplied thousands of faithful teachers lovingly teach our boys and girls week after week, without remuneration and at times without appreciation. Many of them began their work under protest, knowing their inability and lack of training, but we just had to press them into service. In every Church each week they are doing noble work, with hearts aglow for the pupils under their care. They face a hard task because of the irregularity of the attendance and the lack of actual study on the part of the pupils and also because of the difficulties of Sunday School discipline. And then, too, the moral and spiritual development of the child is always a difficult work that needs the finest thought and the deepest workmanship.

MISS LUCY M. ELDREDGE, Field Secretary.

REV. E. B. FLORY,
Lecturer on S. S. Organization and Administration.

I want to sound the praises of all these teachers, and call attention of the Churches to the imperative necessity that they be furnished the best lesson helps, the finest physical equipment for the class-work, a good library of books for their help, and that they should have a good training class, always available for their growth. It is only fair to these loyal teachers, who care for the Christian teaching of our own boys and girls, that they be given the best assistance, not for their own sake, but for the sake of our boys and girls.

Then there is this supreme thing which they do need. The need to get away to a school of methods to give them for a week, a new atmosphere laden with inspiration and ideas. They need it far more than the day-school teacher who goes for six weeks each summer.

Our Convention owes it to the teachers, superintendents and department workers to provide a real school of methods, and this they have done and the program is par excellence.

At Elon, dear to all of our hearts, and itself laden with atmosphere of study and idealism, our loyal teachers, in the presence of as fine a galaxy of teachers as are in our denomination, will receive an abundant life. No one thing holds more of promise for the efficiency of our Church work than this inspirational retreat. There, with other Christian workers sitting at the feet of those who have a message, our loyal teachers can study for a week. Some of our very best teachers in our schools are very busy folks, who can get away only with difficulty, and to some of them it is a problem to meet the expense of the trip. The best single investment of any Church is to establish a precedent this year by sending at least two of its teachers and paying the car-fare for the trip. In just a few years every teacher will have had this wonderful privilege, and the school will be made new. No school in our Southern Convention has a right to ask children to be in its classes unless it makes those classes worthy. The teacher is the heart of the class, and that teacher needs to go to Elon July 30th, at the demand of the school.

INTERESTING AND SENDING YOUNG PEOPLE TO THE CHAUTAUQUA.

By Rev. J. H. Lightbourne,
Pastor Christian Church, Holland, Va.

(Note: Rev. Lightbourne attended the 1922 Chautauqua with three boys last August. One of these boys has already written that he would be at Elon July 30th this year. A number of groups like this are needed at the Chautauqua.—L. M. E.)

To begin with, I am going to arbitrarily define young people. In this article they are those girls and boys, or young men and young women, between thirteen and eighteen. The Chautauqua is for them. It is as much for them as it is for any age or group of adults. And they can mean as much to it and it can mean as much to them as can possibly be the case with any class of adults.

Thousands of amusement resorts are running in full blast. They are everywhere and convenient to everywhere. They have a place in our lives, and our young people are patronizing them. They go for a few hours, a few days, or for a few weeks. We also have a few institutions like our Elon Chautauqua in session for a week or two each summer. They have a place in our life, too, and this should be recognized. It should be impressed upon our young people. The place is a big one, for these institutions are recreational, social, educational and spiritual. They meet life at four vital points.

Can Young People be Interested?

They can.

If you question this, I challenge you to put it to trial. Go to your young people and present the Chautauqua according to this fourfold program. Admit the recreational limitations of Elon. It has no bay or ocean. There are no amusement devices. There are, however, a large campus, a gymnasium and a nearby athletic field, and under the direction of a recreational officer, even superior amusement can be derived from these than from an abandoned indulgence in the bathing and the frolic of an amusement park or beach. Young people will make this allowance if the other three points—the social, the educational, and the spiritual—are given the emphasis and appeal they deserve.

REV. THOMAS F. OPIE.
Rector Burlington Episcopal Church.

There is, however, a catch to it. I imagine it has already been discovered. Some of the young people interested and anxious to go, do not possess the funds for such a trip. Others have the funds, but their parents are unwilling for them to go alone or inadequately chaperoned. If one could enlist the interest and the participation of adults, especially adults with automobiles, one could rally a splendid group of young people for the Chautauqua.

And so I must close with a word for the adults. Our Southern Convention needs, sorely needs, such an institution as the Elon Chautauqua and School of Methods. But the Convention will never have it as it should have it, well attended and substantially financed, until you become interested in it and shoulder the responsibility.

Beyond Elon rise the mountains, and in the mountains rest the lakes, but unless Elon is achieved they will never be reached. Let us make this second summer at Elon a memorable occasion.

THE CHAUTAUQUA AND YOU.

Frequently we are reminded that we should use our best judgment in selecting our companions. I see nothing wrong in such reminders, and, in fact, they are frequently helpful. But one asks: "Who are companions? Are they persons only?" It is likely that anything that is companionable—a person, a group of persons, an institution, a dog—may properly be thought of as a companion. If this be true, then Chautauqua is a companion to all who enjoy its association.

I am thinking just now of Chautauqua at Elon College last summer. It was enjoyed, so far as appearances told, by every person who attended. As an institution, it has a many-sided personality—it appeals to the best in physique, in mind and in heart. The meeting-place is naturally attractive, and Chautauqua's visit is at a time of the year when the loveliness of nature is most appealing; there are games and sports for the vivacious side; in books studied in class-room, in lectures given and in group discussion, there is richness and delight for the mind; then, in the devotional hour each day and in the frequent exchange of heart experiences in devotion, with this or that member of Chautauqua, all makes one delightful round of companionship.

If you have never met Mr. Chautauqua, suppose you arrange to do so this year, when he makes his annual visit to Elon College July 30th to August 5th. Those who know him can testify that his companionship can enrich and uplift your life personally; it will make you a more interested worker for the best things in the community; and it will make you a more serviceable person to the Church, whether you serve in pulpit or in pew. A WORK TO YOUNG FOLKS.

By Rev. J. F. Morgan.

Of all the institutions of our Christian Church, there is no one of greater value to our young people when we compare the expense and the length of time than the Chautauqua. It is largely because of this great value to the young people that our Chautauqua has come into being. It exists for our young folk, hence it is hoped that a large number of them will avail themselves of the opportunity that this school of methods affords. Of course, the older folk in our Church will also receive great benefit from the Chautauqua, but the vision of the Chautauqua is that of the future Church, in which our young people of today are to be the leaders.

REV. THOS. E. BEAMAN,
State Secretary N. C. Free Will Baptist Church.

The value to our young people is, in the first place, their opportunity to get acquainted with the leaders of our Church. No one can do his best service without knowing well those with whom he is to work, and there is no place where we can more easily acquire this knowledge of our Church leaders in the South than at the Elon Chautauqua. Then, too, our young people derive great help from the Chautauqua fellowship. It will be worth a great deal to any of our young people just to live at Elon from July 30th to August 5th. And, more than that, if young people are to be of the greatest service, and are to make their lives count for the most, they must have the training such as the Chautauqua gives. So, I am hoping that every young person who possibly can do so will attend the Chautauqua this year, and, with the older folk who are there, we will make it the best school of methods our Church has ever had. Come on, young people—let's go!

A SUNDAY SCHOOL SUPERINTENDENT'S VIEW OF THE CHATAUQUA.

By W. S. Johnson.

In my opinion, the Chautauqua held at Elon College yearly is one of the most forward, best and helpful movements we have in our Convention today. I would urge every pastor, Sunday School superintendent and teacher and all leaders to attend the 1923 Chautauqua. It will be time and money well spent, for there we learn of the need for better-prepared workers, and after meeting and mingling with the men and women who know the kingdom's needs, we can go home with a greater zeal and fervor to do our best in our own places. Surely, we cannot practice in our schools and Churches all that will be taught. But all can get ideas and ideals toward which to work, to make his or her Church or Sunday School a more effective one. The Church or Sunday School that is satisfied and needs no improvement is to be pitied indeed.

The prophet tells us that, "Where there is no vision the people perish." The Chautauqua is the place for one and all to get a broader, clearer vision of the great work waiting to be done. The great crying need of the hour is for better leaders.

While we would have all pastors and Sunday School workers attend the Chautauqua, it is also very important for the young to attend also. In a few years the young of today must carry on the work of the vineyard, and the earlier and better they are trained, the better leaders they will be, and where is a better place to train them than the Chautauqua? Let every Church or Sunday School in the Southern Christian Convention send at least one representative to the Chautauqua.

The spirit of brotherly love and fellowship manifested at the Chautauqua last year was the finest I ever saw, and I am sure that it will be just as good this year. The best and most experienced instructors obtainable will be there to do their very best, but unless we attend they cannot help us, no matter how much they may wish to.

All together for a glorious Chautauqua this year.

New Hill, N. C.

WHAT OTHER FOLKS SAY.

A number of letters have been received at the office of the Board of Religious Education, expressing gratitude for what the Chautauqua and School of Methods has meant, or asking for information, and, best of all, saying: "I'll see you at Elon July 30th. Save room for me"! Some of these letters we must share with The Christian Sun readers.

Miss Fleda Summers, of Raleigh, attended the session at Elon last August, and she writes in part as follows:

"The whole Chautauqua was fine, and I thoroughly enjoyed every bit of it. The only thing I regret is that more of our folks could not have attended. I suppose the part that meant most to me was the class in elementary work under Mrs. Bullock, for this is what I am most interested in in Sunday School work. I had been trying to teach for some time without any training whatever. I used the same literature with my juniors that the adult classes used, except, of course, in simpler form. Now, in spite of the crowded condition that exists in our school, I am using the graded lessons and find them very helpful indeed. In fact, I do not feel like I could use anything else. We not only studied the best kind of literature, but organization also. Then, the questions and discussions brought up by the different members of the class were very good also.

"Of course, too, we all enjoyed the social side of the Chautauqua. I'll admit when I went there I thought it was going to be mostly a week of work, and we did have to work some, but I think every one had a good time along with it. I am hoping that every one who can possibly get a week off this summer—and I believe every one can—will attend the Chautauqua. No matter whether you are a Sunday School superintendent, teacher, preacher or even if you do not hold any office at all, you will certainly be benefited by going."

Miss Summers is not only one of the active workers in the Raleigh Church, but also, as Junior Endeavor secretary of the North Carolina Convention, is doing splendid work.

Miss Christine Thompson, of Greensboro, superintendent of the primary department of the Sunday School of the First Church there, writes: "The Chautauqua of last year was splendid and helpful, and I thoroughly enjoyed every bit of it." Miss Thompson is one of the Chautauqua's faithful "boosters" at all times.

Rev. and Mrs. R. L. Williamson, of Sanford, N. C., were present throughout the 1922 session. Mrs. Williamson writes: "It was my privilege and pleasure to attend the last session, held at Elon College. I found there a company of earnest workers from various Churches. All met together to prepare themselves to do better work for the Master. I found a faculty prepared to do the work assigned them in an efficient way. I think the Chautauqua is very helpful to every one who attends, and especially is it helpful to young people in their Church work. I enjoyed all the sessions. The fellowship was pleasant and inspiring. I hope to attend the next session."

Rev. Williamson, who has been a leader in the work in North Carolina for a number of years, well expresses the purpose of the gathering when he says: "The Chautauqua and School of Methods goes far toward supplying a need that has long been felt by at least some of our leaders in Church work. Pastors, teachers and leaders in all departments of our Church work need to get new ideas of how others are doing things. They also need the stimulus that comes from contact of hand and heart in a meeting of this kind. I consider it would be money well invested for any Church to pay the expenses of one or more interested young people, that they may get the inspiration that comes from contact with the great hearts and minds of the leaders and others who come together in this great vacation school."

And Jack Dalton, Jr., a lad from Holland, Va., writes: "I'll see you at Elon July 30th."

That is the message we wish to see on about two hundred or more cards during the next two weeks.

3,000 THE CHRISTIAN SUN. 9,000

There are between 8,000 and 10,000 families represented in the Southern Christian Convention, which means if a copy of The Christian Sun is placed in each family, a possible subscription list of 9,000 copies. There are now circulated approximately 3,000 copies, or about one-third of our Church families are reached. Hence, there should be added to the list 6,000 new subscribers in order to have the Church paper placed in every family.

Now, the great personal effort required to do this must be rewarded. To compensate this labor, if premiums are given, it will take 20 automobiles, or 40 radio machines, or 50 to 60 talking machines, or 90 to 100 typewriters, or 200 to 300 watches, etc. Don't you think you will have a good opportunity to secure one of these prizes?

But you need not confine your solicitations to your Church alone. You have friends in other denominations who will gladly assist you by giving a subscription. Make your appeal in a straightforward manner. True men and women are interested in the success of their friends and will lend a helping hand.

Premiums Given for New Subscriptions.

The subscription price of The Sun, recently reduced, is now $2.00 per year—two six-month subscriptions at $1.00 each count as one year. One person may take as many as he may wish for himself or for others. Those in arrears should pay up and assist the solicitor by taking an advanced subscription.

Schedule.

1. To one securing 350 Subscriptions, a Ford Touring Car will be given ($298.00 f. o. b. factory).
2. To one securing 150 Subscriptions, one Radio Equipment—Westinghouse R-6 Set, complete with batteries, tubes, phone and aerial equipment, the price of which is $150.00.
3. To one securing 100 Subscriptions will be given one Victrola ($75.00), or cash prize of $50.00.
4. To one securing 75 Subscriptions, one Remington Portable Typewriter, with standard keyboard and case ($60.00 f. o. b. Richmond).
5. To one securing 30 Subscriptions, one Gentleman's or one Lady's Wrist Watch will be given, guaranteed by Jahnke Bros., Jewelers, of Richmond, Va. ($30.00).
6. For 25 Subscriptions, one Gentleman's or Lady's Watch ($25.00), likewise guaranteed by Jahnke Bros.
7. To one securing 20 Subscriptions, one Standard or International Dictionary will be given.

To all authorized solicitors will be paid 10 per cent commission on all renewals, and 20 per cent on all new subscriptions. Those receiving prizes will not be entitled to commission.

Two renewal subscriptions will be counted as one in determining the winners of prizes.

Send in your name and address and receive the necessary report blanks and receipt books.

The contest will close on October 31, 1923.

Remittances made on this campaign are to be net. Post-office money orders constitute a safe plan of remittance.

A Character Study.

The Beloved Disciple, John.

What's in a name?

As a babe, the disciple of Jesus was named "John," meaning "the favour of God," a name very popular at that time when all faithful Jews were eagerly watching for the coming of the Messiah. But even more significant were the names, or titles, gives to him later. A name given in affection, or in derision, by friend or foe often expresses best what we really are. Nicknames are expressive. No character study of John can be complete without remembering the titles which were given to him. "Son of thunder" and "the disciple whom Jesus loved" seem far different in their implications, yet both fitted the man.

John, the "Favour of God."

The son of Zebedee and Salome, grew up in a godly, Jewish home, probably in Bethsaida. His boyhood was spent on the Sea of Galilee, with his fisherman father. They were probably of a middle class, for they had hired servants to help in the work (Mark 1:20). "Ignorant and unlearned" he was called, and probably so in rabbinical lore, but he must have received from his home training a knowledge of the Scriptures, and in the synagogue something of the education of a boy of his day. John was attracted to the earnest preacher of the wilderness, and became a follower of John the Baptist. Like Peter, by him, John was pointed to the Lamb of God, and he also "left all and followed Him."

John, the "Son of Thunder."

This name was given him with his brother James, who seemed to be of like temperament. John was not always the gentle, mild, rather effeminate character that he is often pictured by artist and writer. He was full of zeal, and sometimes his zeal led him to go too far. The name may have been given as sort of a warning against a tendency which he must guard. His quick temper must be curbed. John was quick to rebuke. He hastily forbade the one casting out demons, but Jesus could see farther into the man's nature, and said, "Forbid him not." Upon the Samaritans, John would have called down fire from heaven, but in his attitude he showed a mistaken idea at the time of the spirit of the Gospel of Jesus Christ. How many "Johns" in their eager, zealous loving, concern for the cause, would take the wrong step, if not restrained by the Christ? His power and His wisdom and His guidance, and that of our Heavenly Father are needed to keep men serviceable.

"God is love; His mercy brightens
All the path in which we rove;
Bliss He wakes, and woe He lightens:
God is wisdom, God is love."

John, "the Disciple Whom Jesus Loved."

What greater title of honor could man desire! Back of the quick temper was a loving heart. Some one has said that Jesus loves men not only for what they are, but for what they may become. He could see this youngest of the disciples as one of the "inner circle" to share the experiences of the Mount of Transfiguration and Gethsemane. He could see that his love was the sort that endured; that it was more than an infatuation which might die, and He entrusted His mother to the loved friend's protection and care. John was the disciple whom Jesus loved, because he was the disciple who ardently loved Jesus. "Love begets love." "If a man would have friends, he must prove himself friendly." How much did the love of Jesus mean to John? How much it may mean to you and to me!

Know the Christ who died to see you free!"
And, best of all, He will love you, too!

John, the Apostle.

John was the intimate companion of Peter in the days following the ascension. Together they prayed in the upper chamber, and together they went to the house of prayer and met the man at the beautiful gate. Together they witnessed before the council, and preached to the Samaritan villages, upon which the fiery John would have called down the fire from heaven. No sermon of John is recorded, but we know that the early Church had him for a leader, that he was banished to Patmos, and that he spent his last days, probably still talking of God's love to the people of Ephesus.

John, the Writer.

John, the writer lives today for all of us. James McConkey tells of the sweet prayer of a young Christian girl: "Lord, fill me to overflowing. I cannot hold much, but I can overflow a great deal." And she was right, for, with many, the desire concerning the Holy Spirit is to hold, and to enjoy. Whereas, with God it is to give, and to overflow to others. This the writer, John, did. The best-known, most often quoted verse—John 3:16! The most comforting chapter—John 14! The great revelation and prophetic vision—Revelation! The great message—"God is love" (1, 2 & 3 John)! In all of these perhaps we may come to know him best. John overcame his weakness, and stays in our minds as the loving disciple. "Be loving followers of the Master" is still his call to those who follow.

"Not with our mortal eyes
Have we beheld the Lord;
Yet we rejoice to hear His name
And love Him in His word.
And when we taste Thy love,
Our joys divinely glow
Unspeakable, like those above,
And heaven begins below."

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC.

July 22, 1923.

Subject: "What, in Present-Day Social Life Would Christ Approve? What Disapprove?"—1 Cor. 10:23, 24, 31-33, 11:1.

Thoughts for the Meeting.

"Am I my brother's keeper?" How far are we responsible for our brother's welfare and our neighbor's happiness? The social life which Jesus would approve must be based on two fundamental principles—love for God, and love for fellowman.

Many activities may not be wrong in themselves, but they do lead to wrong environment, bad habits, waste of time, degredation of character.

Temporary pleasure is a high price to pay, when it means harm and death in later days.

Jesus Christ approves the social life that edifies, that lifts up, that leaves one feeling better in body, mind and spirit the following day. This is a good test of our social life.

"Seek the other's good." This was the Jesus-way. This is the Christian way.

Religion is not only a Sunday Church service affair. As one may worship to the glory of God, he may do all in His name.

"What would Jesus do?" This is a fair test question for the Christian to put for the guidance of his social life. Jesus would never do anything that would cause another to fall, though it brought him great joy at the time.

"Imitate Christ." This is the Christian's privilege.

Play was once thought of as only a waste of time, or akin to idleness. Now it is enlisting the interest of thousands of people everywhere who see its value in character development. The right kind of play builds up, as surely as the wrong sort tears down.

Christ would approve efforts to provide the right kind of social life for boys and girls. This will begin in the home. W. Helleck Mansfield, in "Pictures of Memory," expresses the boy's desire:

"Most every evening after tea, I gets my ball to play,
And asks my paw to catch it, but he's allus sure to say:
'Don't bother, son; I'm busy now—go on to bed,' says he.
Then I go off awishin' that my paw could play with me.

"I ain't much on philosophy, but I got it on my slate,
Jist chalked it down in black and white, and feel compelled to state:
Of course, I loves my paw, and then he loves me, too; but we Could love each other better if he'd only play with me."

Margaret Slattery once said that if she were given the power to choose, as Solomon of old, one thing, she would choose the wisdom to provide for the youth of this generation safe and sane amusement above all else.

What responsibility has the Church for the social life of its members and the young people of its community?

What would Jesus do in your community? Would He approve? Would He disapprove? How can you best please Him?

Plans for the Meeting.

Place your social committee in charge of this meeting. Let them present some plan for improving the social life of the Church and community at this meeting.

"Resolved, That the Church has a responsibility for the social as well as for the spiritual welfare of its young people." Use this as the subject of a talk, or, better, the question for a debate, which will bring out in an interesting way the different ways in which the Church can uplift the whole community. Has the Church a right to continually blame young people for seeking pleasure elsewhere, when no plans are made for their social life by the Church?

Make this a friendly meeting, where every one may take part in a frank discussion which will lead to conditions which Jesus will approve, in Raleigh, and Norfolk, and the many other places where you are holding these meetings.

To the Church which has no Christian Endeavor Society, this subject in a prayer meeting or Church service, or private group may lead to the query: Would not a Christian Endeavor Society help to solve this problem here?

Suggested Hymns.—"Since I Found my Saviour," "You May Have the Joy-Bells," "A Charge to Keep I Have," "Help Somebody Today," "Sweet Hour of Prayer."

SUGGESTIONS FOR SOCIAL COMMITTEES.

From Amos R. Wells, in "Social Evenings."

The work of the Christian Endeavor social committee is to win and hold—to win souls for the Master, and attach them by delight to his service.

I believe that recreation is a Christian duty, and that all Christian duties fall within the province of the Church.

Do not try to get up the kind of social that best pleases you, but the kind that best pleases others.

Give your pastor, if you can, some definite part in every social. Always get your pastor's approval of the general scheme of the social before you enter upon your preparations.

Sing a song at the end of the social, and carry away a benediction.

If your social committee is unsuccessful, the probable reason is that it is not enough of a prayer committee. Isaiah has a motto for social committees: "Strengthen the weak hands."

Socials that Should be Held.—Socials carefully planned beforehand. Socials prayed over beforehand, opened with prayer, closed with a benediction in the air, and another in all hearts. Socials that win souls. Socials that break ice. Socials that destroy caste. Jolly socials, brainy socials, socials of winsome memory. Socials that cost little money, but much thought. Socials that make pleasant Christian acquaintances.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL IN THE CHURCH.

I am attempting to write an article for the readers of The Sun, which may be adversely criticized by experts in the field of religious education; nevertheless, I see the need on almost every hand for just what I shall say.

While I was engaged in college work, and had a great deal more time to read and specialize along certain phases than I have now, it was my pleasure to read a few books pertaining to religious education and allied branches. During the past two years, with the practical problems of vocational education, organizing for such, culling men, so to speak, for this and that vocation, I have come to the conclusion that we are no longer in a day of theorization, but one of practicalization, if my reader will let me use the term.

I propose here to discuss rather briefly three essentials in the life of the Sunday School and the Church in their relationship, one to the other. These essentials are: organization, co-operation and correlation. For some of the ideas set forth, I am deeply indebted to Henry F. Cope, who has written, "Organizing the Church School," "The School in the Modern Church," "Efficiency in the Sunday School," etc. I am also indebted to a few other writers in the field of religious education who have, in their magazine articles and elsewhere set forth a few very practical things worth following. There will be a few ideas of my own thrown in, which the reader will please overlook if they do not meet the demands of the times. But the idea is, as set out in the beginning, to lay down a very practical scheme that may be somewhat beneficial to the most of our Churches, seeking to have a real educational program and a practical means of presenting it in the Churches.

1. Organization.—No big project today, whether business, social, religious or educational, is being put across without, first, sound organization. It is like making up the mind to do a thing. We say the will to do is half the battle. Therefore, the organization, thoroughly ground out and systematized within itself, is even more than half the battle.

First of all, there should be a Church council in the Church, composed of from seven to twelve members. They should be among the older heads, composed of those who have, as far as possible, had a wide experience with the various organizations and associations of the Church. The minister should be an ex-officio member of this council, and, for that matter, it might be a wise idea to make him an ex-officio member of every council or committee concerning any phase of Church activities. He gives his full time to the Church and is, therefore, usually competent to give good advice along most lines.

This council should have general oversight of all religious, social, physical and educational activities, so as not to usurp the power of the deacons. I think it should be in their power to shape the budget of the entire Church, receiving from the deacons or finance committee of the Church their estimate for the year's expenses; from the Sunday School committee or council their estimated expense, and from all other organizations of the Church, through their councils, their estimated expenses and to shape the entire Church budget for the year. Then, when that is done, set about making the arrangements for raising the funds. If there is anything I hate to see in the Church, it is that every group, even down to the primary and kindergarten classes, are called upon to raise funds to buy song-books, to erect a partition so that they may have a classroom, or to have to put up the money to buy their own literature. Every item of expense can much better be handled through a single budget of the Church and from one treasury than it can through a hundred different channels which are calling for an extra collection every Sunday.

The Sunday School should have its council, subject to, and in co-operation with, the Church council. This council will, of course, as suggested above, co-operate in the matter of budget for the year, and all other matters concerning the co-operation of the Church and the Sunday School. It should have committees or councils from the various departments of the Sunday School to report its needs and activities to their council, who, in turn, will take up whatever matters necessary with the general Church council.

The departments needing these councils or committees, which are subject to the school committee or council, are, what Henry F. Cope suggests, the kindergarten, primary, junior, intermediate, senior, young people's, adult's. The most of these names for departments are rather old to us, but are, perhaps, most befitting until we can find something better to take their places. Each department should be thoroughly organized—some with a principal at the head, while others may have a president. I think, however, that in the two older classes it is better to head them up with an officer whose title is president. It seems to coincide with their ideas better than does principalship. These two older departments may have two or more classes each, in which event it may be best to have presidents for the departments and other officers for the departments as well as other officers for the various classes.

Every department should have its principal or president, teachers for the various classes, song leaders, secretaries-treasures or other similar officers, committees, etc., who are directly in charge of their various duties for their classes and departments, and whose councils are directly responsible to the Sunday School committee or council at large and who, in turn, are responsible to the council heading up the entire Church.

Furthermore, I would say that the Sunday School needs a personnel board, or an administrative board for personnel. The purpose of this board would be to study the teachers and officers of the school, fitting them into the places where they actually belong, and to classify the pupils of the school. The superintendent of the school should be an ex-officio member of the board on personnel, and not only that, but of the school council.

To go fully into the matter of Sunday School organization in the Church would make this article entirely too long. I have thus spoken as briefly as I could to make myself plain as to the salient points. There is no reason as to why a Sunday School of 300 pupils cannot have 250 or more actively engaged in a definite piece of work, either as a teacher, principal, councilman, officer, committeeman of some description, etc.

2. Co-Operation.—Space is, no doubt, limited for me to say much here. But co-operation is absolutely essential. It would not be a bad idea to have an officer in charge of co-operation for every department in the Sunday School whose business it is to study his or her department as thoroughly as possible, follow it up in the development and make it his business to work out a distinct co-operating relationship with every other department in the school. An officer in charge of co-operation for each department should seek to know his own department and the workings of every other department, thereby helping his own department as the boys and girls become of age, to fit adequately into the next department higher up.

It is the purpose of the school to co-operate with the other activities of the Church and the Church at large so as to drive home the ultimate aim or goal of the Church. Every organization of the Church is a means to the one end or aim—the salvation of souls. "No man liveth to himself"—a fundamental principle which should be appreciated today more than ever before, because we live in an age when it is so apparent to every individual that without others he could not live, to every industry that without others it could not thrive, to every nation that without others it would be greatly handicapped, and so on. A very cosmopolitan age in which we live, and it is impossible to go forward without co-operation of the highest type.

3. Correlation.—The final word which I shall have to say is relative to correlating the great fundamentals which come out from the Sunday School, the Church and the various organizations of the Church. I believe the Sunday School could do a better part along this line if it laid more stress upon review work and examinations or tests at the end of each quarter. I am not a great believer in examinations, as a rule, for the test of knowledge. But I do believe it would be an incentive to make more pupils fix facts about the Bible in their minds, even if we had to offer prizes or special mention to those who did the best work on the examinations. The better knowledge pupils have of the subject, the more able they are to correlate the facts learned. This, after all, is the true educational process and the means by which we mark advancement.

Christian Orphanage

OUR ORPHANAGE WORK.

DEAR FRIENDS:

We were real glad last week to have two of our girls visit us. Miss Ella Frederick, who is in Watts Hospital, Durham, N. C., in training, spent part of her vacation at the orphanage. She is doing fine work in the hospital and makes fine marks in her studies. She said she made 98 on one of her studies and splendid grades on all others. Ella, as we call her, came to this institution when a little tot, father and mother both dead, and was reared here. We feel sure Ella will make good, as she has the energy and determination to win.

We were also delighted to have Miss Pearl Goodwin visit us last Saturday and Sunday. Pearl came to us when a little tot, and was a splendid little girl, and when she graduated here she went to Peace Institute, Raleigh, N. C., and took a business course and graduated in June and has accepted a splendid position with the State agricultural department, Raleigh, N. C., and when she drew her first salary check she bought her a ticket to Elon College to visit her old home and friends.

We have also been made happy by a visit from Mr. Earl Churchill, one of our old boys. Earl came to the orphanage when a small boy, and grew up to be a very useful and trustworthy boy. While he was not a prodigal boy, he did have charge of the hogs and looked after feding them. He raised the finest pen of hogs that the orphanage ever had in any one year, making more than 5,000 pounds of meat. When Earl reached the age limit here he accepted a position with an auto company in Durham, N. C., and now holds a nice position with a good salary attached.

We are very proud of these three children, as well as we are of many others who have gone out and are doing well. We feel a great interest in the children while here, and our interest does not weaken after they are gone; but it brings joy to us to see them make good.

Who would say to invest in orphanage work is a poor investment? I only wish I had a million to invest. I would invest it in little orphan girls and boys and give them a chance in life. We find some of the brightest minds in this class of children.

MOOD.

Mrs. Maggie Dick Mood, so long and favorably known to our people as "Aunt Maggie" while "Uncle Tangle" had charge of the "Children's Corner" in The Christian Sun, and as matron of east dormitory at Elon College, died at the rising of the sun June 3, 1923, at her home in Smithfield, Va.

She had been frail of body for many years, but strong of will and cheerful of heart. She had been sick for quite a while, but all that skill could do could not stay the hand of disease. She had been an active Church member from early life, filling many offices of trust and confidence in her local Church for many years. She leaves a splendid example of faithfulness to those who take her place. She was married, in 1893, to Deacon D. J. Mood, who, with their only daughter, Mary Pearl, survive her.

The entire community and many from a distance express their grief at this loss and extend sympathy to the bereaved husband and daughter, also to the aged mother, a brother and two aunts.

The burial services were held from the Smithfield Methodist Episcopal Church, where she held her membership, conducted by her pastor, Rev. W. H. Atwell, assisted by the writer. The floral offerings were numerous, varied and beautiful, the entire mound being covered with beauty and fragrance, emblematic of her life.

The choir sang sweetly these hymns: "Asleep in Jesus," "Abide With Me," and Mr. George F. Whitley sang as a solo, "Home of the Soul."

In the death of Sister Mood, we feel that a good Christian has gone to her reward; that a faithful wife and loving mother will be waiting at the beautiful gate the coming of loved ones.

JAMES L. FOSTER.

Waverly, Va.

DAUGHTREY.

Died, at the home of her brother, Mr. W. L. Harrell, Cypress Chapel, Va., Sunday, July 1, 1923, Mrs. Mary V. C. Daughtrey, aged 65 years 9 months and 27 days. She was for years a member of Cypress Chapel Christian Church.

After she married Mr. E. A. Daughtrey, she united with the Methodist Episcopal Church of South Norfolk. She was a good Christian and was greatly beloved by all who knew her. She leaves two brothers—Mr. W. L. Harrell, of Cypress Chapel, Va., and Mr. W. H. Harrell, of Suffolk, Va.—and sister, Mrs. G. W. Taylor, of Goldsboro, N. C., and many friends. Her funeral services were conducted at her brother's home in Cypress Chapel, Va., and her remains were laid to rest in Cedar Hill Cemetery, Suffolk, Va. God bless and comfort the dear bereaved ones. H. H. BUTLER.

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT.

Whereas, God in His wisdom saw fit to remove from our midst the beloved wife of Mr. J. T. Rawles and the beloved member of Liberty Springs Christian Church, truly it can be said a mother in Israel has reaped the reward of the blessed. A good wife, mother, and neighbor has left a vacancy never to be filled. But God called her, and she was ready when the summon came. Blessed are they which die in the Lord. Therefore, be it resolved:

First, That we bow in humble submission to God's will, knowing He doeth all things well.

Second, That we extend to her sorrowing loved ones the assurance of our heartfelt sympathy; that God's richest blessings may be theirs, and that He will sustain them with His love.

Third, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family, a copy be sent to The Christian Sun, and a copy put on the minutes of Liberty Spring Christian Church records.

DIED.

George Washington Sauls died at his late home, Elon College, N. C., June 11, 1923, aged 78 years 10 months and 7 days, and was buried in the family cemetery near Apex, Wake County, N. C. He leaves a widow, who was Miss Mary Ella May; his four children by a former marriage died many years ago. He was a Confederate soldier, Company C, Freeman's Infantry, and got his final discharge as prisoner from Camp Chase, Ohio, June 13, 1865. He was a member of Level Grove Free Baptist Church, Wake County, and lived and died in that faith. N. G. NEWMAN.

MARRIED

EDWARDS—MOSS.

A very pretty marriage took place in Sussex County, Va., on June 27th, when Miss Rebecca Moss became the bride of Mr. Wm. Epps Edwards, of Petersburg.

The marriage took place at 4 o'clock P. M., at the home of the bride's father, Mr. L. W. Moss, near Disputanta, Va., and it was celebrated by the writer and Rev. J. L. Foster, the former a chaplain in the United States Navy and located at Waverly, Va., who is the present pastor. The ring ceremony was used.

The bride wore a traveling suit of tricotine, and carried flowers. She was attended by a matron of honor, flower girls and a ring-bearer; and the groom was attended by his best man. The matron of honor was Mrs. Willard, of Suffolk, sister to the bride. Little Alva Lee and Eleanor Willard acted as flower girls, and Eleanor bore the ring in the heart of a rose. Mr. W. H. Moss, brother of the bride, served as best man. Only a few of the relatives and friends were present to witness the ceremony and bid them godspeed.

After the ceremony, Mr. and Mrs. Edwards left for their Petersburg home.

H. E. ROUNTREE.

SCOTT—CADDELL.

The home of Dr. S. W. Caddell was the scene of a lovely wedding Thursday evening, June 28th, when his daughter, Virginia Elise, became the bride of H. Lee Scott, of Richmond.

The ring ceremony of the Christian Church was used, with Drs. J. O. Atkinson and N. G. Newman officiating.

The bride and bridegroom were members of this year's graduating class of Elon College. Both were prominent members of the student body, and are popular and promising young people. After an extended bridal tour to Blowing Rock and other points, they will make their home in Richmond, where Mr. Scott is assistant pastor of the First Baptist Church.

C. M. CANNON.

MARRIED.

Stuart C. Deskins, of Parksville, Ky., and Julia Braxton, Raleigh, N. C., were united in marriage by the writer at the Christian parsonage, Elon College, N. C., May 29, 1923, in the presence of a few friends. Mr. Deskins is an alumnus of Elon College, and Mrs. Deskins the teacher of violin. These are fine young people, and may their wedded life be rich in joy and usefulness.

THE SUN'S OBSERVATORY

We Are Not By Ourselves.—

Siberia has its bootleggers and illicit stills. Of 1,120,000,000 pounds of corn harvested in the government of Omsk last year, 180,000,000 pounds were used for illegal distilling. Within a month, 900 stills were confiscated and more than a thousand persons were arrested for illicit traffic in liquor.—Exchange.

What Is The Answer?—

Thomas A. Edison says: "There is something wrong with the college system. I don't know what the trouble is—that's not my line. I can only judge by the results. But one thing is certain: the present system of education in the colleges does not train men to think. I am in favor of the college. That is where I get some of my best men. I have 60 of them now, but they are 60 culled out of 2,000. That's pretty low percentage, isn't it?" Mr. Edison, will you please tell us the percentage among the non-college-trained men?

Deaths by Accident.—

According to statistics given out by the National Safety Council, 76,000 people are killed in this country every year by accident, and 19,000 of these are children under fifteen years of age. For every death, there are 26 serious injuries, which means that nearly 2,000,000 are hurt, maimed or crippled annually. Many of these accidents are due to carelessness on the part of those who are killed or injured. Others are the result of inadequate provisions for safety on the part of employers. Some are caused by unfortunate circumstances for which no one is particularly to blame. But when we deduct the number of such fatalities which could be prevented by care and foresight, we will have accounted for the greater part of this 76,000. Life is too precious to be needlessly sacrificed.—Ex.

Talk on Taxes.—

Here is a clipping from the Saturday Globe, a great secular paper, which shows the drift of things in this country: "If we do not very shortly settle what we are going to do about taxes, taxes will settle us. They are already clutching at the American standard of living. We are busily devising immigration laws to bar from our shores those who are what they are principally because their rulers, for ages past, have specialized in government as something distinct from the welfare of the governed. We are barring as undesirable people who have never come into their own, because whenever a man showed enterprise enough to make a dollar, his government swooped down and took it away from him. And so he never had a chance to become desirable. At the same time, we are enforcing taxes to make our people just like them.

"We are exempting our great fortunes from taxation. We are forcing them out of productive industry and into piles of municipal brick and mortar. We are doing what we can to make this a great country to look at, but are we making it a better one to live in? In spite of the spectacle of bankrupt nations across the seas, we are actually doing what we can to overcome our national advantages and become like them. We are doing all this so innocently through taxes."—Biblical Recorder.

Taxation an Awful Burden.—

The question of taxation is bobbing up in all parts of the world. The world is money-mad, and the disease is showing itself in the form of taxing the people. If the tendency goes much further, a revolution will likely arise, and then something will happen. Even here in North Carolina, taxes are soaring, and the more they soar, the more the law-makers seem disposed to lay on taxes. For instance, before the last Legislature, the North Carolina State debt, as we understand it, was less than $10,000,000. The last Legislature added to the debt, till now it is said to be $110,000,000. Our next tax levy must of necessity soar away beyond anything we have known in the past, for the taxpayers must pay the interest on the $110,000,000. In Russia the tax on the common people is growing by leaps and bounds. It is striking the farmers heavily. The Literary Digest puts it this way:

As to the taxation of the agricultural population, this problem is described as follows by L. Kamenav in his speech delivered at the Congress of the Communist party and reported by the Economicheskaia Jizn for April 24, 1923:

"In the year 1922-1923, direct taxes levied on the peasants gave us 250,000,000 gold rubles; that is to say, about 17 per cent of the total receipt of the budget (which was equal to about 1,500,000,000 gold rubles). This is not all we took from the peasants; this is only what they gave us through direct taxation. What will be our budget in the year 1923-1924? Calculating very carefully and cutting away whatever it is possible to cut, we come to the conclusion that we shall need up to two billion gold rubles. * * * The peasants will be obliged to give us about 420,000,000 gold rubles in taxes and over 500,000,000 gold rubles in payment for different goods, such as matches, oil, salt, etc. Thus, out of four billions they will derive from agriculture, they will give us about one billion."

Something will have to be done to stop this overtaxing of the people, or we shall come to a situation to be dreaded. The people will endure some things for a time, but not always.

Can the Price of Coal be Reduced?—

It is hard to keep greed where it belongs. It shows itself in every place where it is possible to get its power upon whatever the people use. This is especially true of coal. For many years coal has been very high, exorbitantly high, and it will not be lower soon if the coal barons can prevent a fall in the price. The United Mine Workerss' committee puts the present situation and outlook as follows:

"We propose to eliminate a large part of the present mine cost of the smaller companies by guaranteeing that land-owners get a fair return on their investment, and no more. The result would be to decrease royalty charges drastically and to abolish the whole system by which prices to consumers can be raised beyond reasonable levels.

"Necessary new capital for additions and betterments should come, so far as possible, from reinvested profits. With interest instead of dividends to pay, profits may be expected to produce a sum sufficient for such additions and betterments.

"The fact that to 1920 four companies, mining together about 40 per cent of the total commercial production, had accumulated a book surplus of $74,000,000, leads to the belief that such new capital may be secured in adequate amounts from reinvested profits. Any surplus earnings over such needs would be devoted to reducing prices, paying better wages or hastening the amortization of bonds.

"Our proposals cover coal land companies as well as mining companies. This is a very essential provision. Many independent mining companies, because they pay high royalties, and because of their small size, feel free to charge in time of shortage as much as $5.50 a ton more than the large companies, and to make such charges regardless of the actual mining cost. The result is that the same size and quality coal reaches the big cities at prices which have, in time of shortage, a $5.50 range.

"Finally, we suggest that the control of the industry after capital has been retired or funded might rest with the management, the public, the miners or a combination of the three. Such control would be introduced concurrently with the conversion of capital stock into bonds. It is probable that such control would have to be exercised by a holding company under government auspices."

NOTES-PERSONALS

The North Carolina Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention was in session at Catawba Springs last week. We hope to have a good report from that meeting soon.

The Eastern Virginia Sunday School Convention is meeting this week at Mt. Carmel Christian Church, near Walters, Va. Rev. T. E. White is pastor of the Convention Church, and Otis V. Joyner superintendent of the Sunday School.

Rev. R. A. Whitten is now settled with the Rose Hill Christian Church, Columbus, Ga., and we wish for him great success in that work. It is a man's job to build up that work, but we believe it can be done, and may our Father enable our brother to do it to the praise and glory of His name.

Rev. Elisha Bradshaw, of Walters, Va., was in a series of meetings at Fuller's Church, Vance County, N. C., last week. He has a fine people to labor with, and we sincerely wish that he may have an ingathering in souls saved for Christ. Bro. Bradshaw is open to calls for revival work till November 1, 1923. He may be addressed at Walters, Va. He is a man of much spiritual enthusiasm and a hard worker. We understand he is open for a call to pastoral service for next year.

We must be permitted to tender a few words of congratulation to our beloved brother, Mr. D. R. Fonville, of Burlington, N. C., upon the occasion of his recent marriage, an account of which will soon appear in our columns. Miss Anne Watkins is the happy bride of our brother, and for them both we wish much happiness and large usefulness. Brother Fonville is chairman of the Board of Publications for the Southern Christian Convention and a member of the Burlington Christian Church.

That was a most touching incident in connection with a recent service in the Burlington Christian Church, in which a bronze tablet was unveiled in honor of the organization of the Church and the brother who organized it, now many years ago. Rev. J. W. Holt was the minister who organized the Church. It was a very beautiful event, and made the more so that Brother Holt, though aged and infirm, was able to be present. How beautiful is old age when it is the crown of a useful life. God bless Brother Holt and his companion in these days of age and affliction.

We are under special obligations to Bro. W. F. Hayes, Henderson, and to Bro. H. A. Carlton, Bro. D. I. Langston and Bro. J. E. Harward for kind assistance in moving from Henderson. Moving is a bad job at best, but the assistance of these friends helped us very much. We moved by truck and auto a distance of eighty miles. The day was clear and hot, but we got through it in pretty good time, leaving Henderson at near 10 o'clock A. M., we reached Elon College near 3 o'clock in the afternoon. We had good roads.

Rev. B. F. Black, Berkley, Va. (R. D., Rosemont), is a genius in his own way, and he does not ask the privilege of being all that, but simply takes the bit in his teeth and goes as to him seems wise, regardless of what others may say. By all this, we mean to say that he is as likely to say the most unexpected thing as otherwise, but in all of his sudden flights in this line, we doubt if he ever said a more beautiful thing than this: "Take all my faults and mistakes for love." Robert Louis Stephenson most likely never said a more beautiful thing than this. God bless the man who can say a thing that so overruns with beauty as that does. The thought is couched in few words, but very beautiful and so expressive.

You, now and then, hear some people who say they do not wish the saloon to come back into society, but they do wish to have beer and light wines restored to the people. You know that only means that they know if beer and light wines were permitted to come back, it would soon mean an open door for the liquor business. The truth is, the man who talks that way really wants the liquor business given another chance to pull down the life and property of the men and women who are addicted to its excessive use. You know the old fable about the camel which just wished to get its head in the room. Well, that is the man who wants beer and light wine to be given back to the people, so the whole body of the saloon camel may come in. The thing to do is, while we have the business down and out, let us keep it out and see that it no more strikes down the noble men and loyal women.

Rev. P. T. Klapp now becomes a veteran in the ministry. On July 26, 1923, he will reach and pass his seventy-fifth year. He has been in the ministry for perhaps fifty years or more, and he has been a faithful and earnest follower of the Master. He has been, in his day, a strong preacher and a regular house of worship builder. He has also been a revivalist of more than the average in that line. We suggest that all who have been blessed under his ministry write him a letter, reminding him of the good he has done under the blessings of God in his ministry. It would be a source of encouragement to him, and it will do you good to let him know, as he stands on the summit of life's journey, that the Lord has used him to help you to make preparation for both time and eternity. If you write to him so as to reach him by July 26th, you must act at once, as that date is almost here now. His address is Elon College, N. C.

In THE CHRISTIAN SUN of June 21, 1922, a most unusual mistake was made, to which our attention was called only on Saturday, July 7, 1923. In moving from Henderson to Elon College, we came across a copy of THE SUN of June 21, 1922, and in looking over it the eye fell on the last paragraph of page 2. It was a personal mention of the West boys and their sainted father and mother, of Sussex County, Va. The mistake came in the fact that we mentioned four members of the family of the boys when there were five—we omitted the name of the Benjamin of the family, Bro. C. D. West, of Newport News, Va., who is the youngest of the five brothers and a young man of real business ability and truly devoted to the Christian Church. He is now and has been from the beginning of the Men and Millions Movement, the treasurer of that fund. When we casually glanced over the stray paper and saw that we had omitted his name as one of the sons, we could not believe our own vision. So we read it again, and seeing the facts were against our memory, we determined to make, even at this late day, a correction. These five brothers constitute a little company of unusual men, and the youngest, Mr. Caleb D. West, is by no means to be left out, for as a young Christian business man, he stands along with his four brothers and ranks well with them. We beg pardon for this strange omission, for which there is no excuse except a singular freak of memory that we cannot explain, for we had known Caleb just as well as we did any of the other four. As soon as we discovered the mistake, we felt we must put the youngest of the family of boys in his rightful place along with his worthy brothers.

I wish to take this occasion to commend and compliment you for the editorial in last week's paper on "What Are We Coming To." I am certainly glad to know that there are still some of the ministry who have and believe in the faith of the fathers. The modernism and liberalism that is being injected into the Churches, and, I am sorry to say, into our own Christian Church, is, in my judgment, calculated to undermine the very foundation of our faith, to destroy our belief in the teachings of the Bible. These modernists and liberals make light of us who believe in the fundamentals. They call us out-of-date. They claim that the old Bible must be revised or destroyed. We must have a modern interpretation of it. I am sorry to know that some of our own ministers are teaching this very thing. Instead of giving us the Word of God, as taught in the Book, they give us what Fosdick says. I sincerely hope that more of our ministers will hold to the same view that you take, that our people may not be misled. Dr. McCartney, of Philadelphia, said a few Sundays ago in his sermon, the question is not shall the fundamentalists win, but shall they who deny the virgin birth win, who deny the Bible, who deny the resurrection, who deny the second advent? I hope you will give us more of the old-time faith of the fathers—we need it to hold us steady. If the flighty teachings of some of our young men are allowed to go on, I am afraid our people and Churches will be wrecked on the rocks of unbelief.

WILLIAM J. BENSON.

Dover, Del.

This note of alarm is timely, indeed. Bro. Benson has struck the keynote of the present situation. We have been giving the alarm for twenty years, and yet only a few believed there was any danger along these lines of thought. At least, the people are awaking to the dangers, and once fully awakened, they will sweep the deck till it is clean of modern unbelief, for that is just the right name to give it. As we see it, the spirit of this modern unbelief is contrary to the spirit of Christ. It is full of pride of the larger sort; it seems to glory in the fact a modernist or a liberal can do as he pleases, regardless of Bible teaching, and that is the fatal mistake of modernism.

THE CHILDREN AND THE PREACHING SERVICE.

It is quite a common thing today, indeed it is quite the rule in many Churches, to have the children go home, or elsewhere, after Sunday School is over rather than stay for the preaching service. This habit is resulting in much harm to the cause of Christ. It is weakening not only the Church, but the Sunday School as well. We have appealed again and again for a change in this way of doing, but it seems all appeals have been in vain, for instead of getting better under our appeals, the habit of the children in leaving as soon as school is out is growing, and more children go home today from Sunday School than did fifteen or twenty years ago. It is strange that this should be true, and naturally we are looking for the cause for such a situation. What can it be? We believe we know what the cause is, and we are going now to tell what it is. If any of our readers think we are wrong, we shall be glad to have them point out our mistake, provided they will prove we are mistaken by pointing out a better reason for this most unhappy situation.

We believe, and we believe it so strongly as nothing but facts will convince us of error on our part, in this idea, that the fathers and mothers and Sunday School teachers are to blame. If they would work together to have the children stay for the preaching service, the trouble can be corrected in two months' time. If the teacher will visit the pupils under his or her care, and show to the parents the necessity for the children to attend the preaching service, and then follow up the appeal to the parents by appealing to the children to remain, we believe a change can be accomplished in a short time.

We believe the most common reason given by children for not staying for the preaching service is this: "Mamma told me to come home." Now, Mamma, did you do that? Why did you do it, when you know, or ought to know, that when you gave the order to your child to come home from the Sunday School, you are becoming, in that act, an ally of the wicked one. The devil knows very well that if the child can be kept away from the preaching service that it will pave the way for that child to leave both the Sunday School and the Church, and that means, in most instances, the loss of the child to the cause of Christ. If the teacher will visit the children in his or her class and get the consent of the parents to have the children remain, then the next Sunday the teacher can plead with the pupils to remain and assure them that they have the consent of parents for them to remain to the preaching services. Of course, the parents should inform the children when starting out to go to the Sunday School that they are to remain to the service and hear the sermon. Then the follow-up work by the teacher may mean very much, and the children not only be saved to the Sunday School and the Church, but saved unto God.

The present plan of allowing the pupils to go home before the preaching service is simply a process of educating the children both to go out of both the Sunday School and to stay out the Church, for if children are not brought under the influence of the Church, it is only a little while till they will be grown-ups, and then, having no interest in the Church, they will leave the Sunday School, as well as the Church, and they will be lost to both. The process is a dangerous one, and should be carefully avoided, for if we educate the children out of both the Sunday School and the Church, they are most likely lost to the cause of Christ.

We know of no way to hold the children and keep them over for the Church service unless the teacher and parents will co-operate. It can be done in that way, if both the teacher and parents will faithfully make a determined effort to gain their attendance, and the children will at least have a good chance to become interested in the Church and in their own salvation.

In a recent issue of the Religious Herald, Miss Janie Pritchard Duggan, of Montvale, Va., in referring to the way the Sunday School children attended Church services fifty years ago, says:

"My brothers, my sister and I never thought of missing the 11 o'clock preaching service upstairs, and directly in front of 'our pew,' in the middle aisle, was Prof. ———'s, where his three mischievous boys endured the sermon to the end. The Dickinson family was across the aisle; a little beyond, the Sands had their pew, more than filled by boys and girls, but just ahead was Grandpa Goddin's pew, which might harbor one or two of these. On our left, somewhat later in the years, Dr. John William Jones and his little brown-eyed wife kept order among their four boys, 'Carter Helm' and the little brothers. And so it went, little heads anywhere showing above the backs of the pews."

We confess that is something like it used to be in the good old times, as we sometimes say. You may be a pessimist or an optimist, but we believe you will be compelled to admit that at least the old-time way, in this instance, of having the children remain for the preaching service was better than the new-time way of having the children leave the Sunday School and go home or elsewhere and into whatever mischief they might choose to go.

Let us plead once more for the keeping of the children for the 11 o'clock preaching service. We are quite sure it will not be a thing easily accomplished, but it is worth hard work and much patience and prayer. Do not rest contented till the children stay to preaching. No doubt, many excuses will be given, but in the face of excuses contend earnestly for the children in the preaching service. Get the pastor to help you out by preaching in the beginning of his service a sermon to the children of from five to ten minutes long. The five-minute sermon to the children, in view of the fact that they have to then listen to the sermon for the grown-ups, is to be preferred to the ten-minute sermon. It may be urged that the service is too long for the children, but tell them they stay much longer than that for the day school. Take no excuse, but plead and plead for the children to remain to the 11 o'clock service.

THE WAY BACKSLIDING COMES ABOUT IN ONE'S LIFE.

No doubt many a Christian has lost his or her hold on the Lord, but could not tell how it came about. It was done so unexpectedly that at first sight one is disposed to think it happened all of a sudden. But that is a mistake. Backsliding rarely ever comes all of a sudden. It may seem to do so, but the truth is the process had been going on so quietly that the person hardly realized it as going on at all. Suddenly, sin overtakes us and then we know that something has happened and that we hardly know what till after a little, we find that we have been overtaken in sin and that we are no longer in fellowship with God. It was that way with Samson. The Lord had left him and he said he knew it not. That is the experience of many of the Church members of today—we have allowed the process of backsliding to go on in the life till we do not realize that we are far off from the Lord till we fall into some sin, and then we find we are indeed in a fallen condition. Henry Ward Beecher tells how a man falls, and while what he says may not cover the whole question, yet it does include some of the danger points in experience. He says:

"Men never fall from a Christian life as a meteor falls through the sky, with a sudden flash. Men go down as stars do, gradually and quietly. The love of prayer becomes less. The neglect of prayer is occasion. The reading of God's Word is casual. Nothing is extracted from it. Men read it because it is their duty to read it. It is not food to them. Still less is its fruit luscious to their taste. They backslide, step by step, falling upon lighter sins, as upon a boulder, and then upon more of them, till at last they slip and spiritual death overtakes them."

In almost every case, backsliding comes as the result of the neglect of some rich Christian privilege. Ordinarily we begin to cool off in our Christian ardor, but that is practically always due to having neglected some Christian duty. For instance, when a man begins to neglect the reading of the Bible, then he gets spiritually blind, and then he begins to fall into the pits of sin. In the next step he goes off in the morning without a season of prayer, and then he is loose and open to all temptations, and, yielding, down he goes.

Beloved, if you do not wish to backslide, then do not neglect the reading of your Bible and do not neglect prayer. Do not forsake the assembling of yourselves together in the worship of God. If you quit your Bible, if you quit the privilege of prayer, if you stay away from the public worship of God, away from the Sunday School, and especially away from the prayer-meeting, then you may expect to fall from grace.

Do not neglect Christian privileges! Be instant in season and out of season, always abounding in the work of the Lord, if you wish to be thrifty in the Christian life.

Backsliding comes on unawares, and we are trapped before we know it.

"My soul be on thy guard,
Ten thousand foes arise."

THE TROUBLE WITH LITTLE BILL.

His Case Illustrates Wherein Social Regeneration Is a Failure as a Substitute for Spiritual Regeneration.

In recent years there has been raised the cry for social regeneration as a substitute for spiritual regeneration, but, so far, little, or rather no, success has been attained; but the friends of social regeneration are holding on to the thought as if all depended on it, but in time they will turn loose, for social regeneration, as a substitute for spiritual regeneration, can never succeed—certainly not till the Lord changes His plan of salvation, and that He is not likely to do during the Christian dispensation. It is wise for us all in forming new ideas to measure them every time by the Bible, and if they will not harmonize with the Bible, then you will do well to drop the new idea as not in keeping with the plans and purposes of God.

All this talk of social regeneration may be fanciful, but it is not practical—it can give a sort of social whitewash, but it cannot clean the hearts of men and women. Nothing short of the power of God is sufficient for that, and all talk to the contrary is but a ruse of the wicked one to side-track men and women to keep them from entering into life eternal through Jesus Christ. There may be, and doubtless is, a social regeneration, but its source is human and its work is superficial. It deals strictly with the outside, and not with the heartlife of the individual, and because this is a fact, social regeneration can never bring the individual to Christ for salvation.

But what about "the trouble with little Bill?" That is just what we are coming to—we wish you to read the story which follows, and then you may see more clearly what we mean by the failure of social regeneration as a substitute for the regenerating power of the Holy Spirit. The Methodist Protestant gives us that story as follows:

We found this story, copied from the Indianapolis News by the Evangelical, quite suggestive:

"Ye Must be Born Again."

The Indianapolis News carried the following news item recently. Barbers and tailors, and wash-rags and cakes of soap, good-smelling with plenty of lye in them, are all right in their place, but they just won't do when it comes to making a man new on the inside. Dr. Marcus Dods said once that it "takes more than an improved caterpillar to fly." So we must continue to preach, on the authority of Jesus and Paul and what we know as an absolute fact, "Verily, verily, I say unto you, * * * that which is born of the flesh is flesh, and that which is born of the Spirit is spirit. * * * Ye must be born again."

Another experiment intended to show that making a man over from the skin out will work wonders with his interior has come to an unsatisfactory end. The United Brothers, convened in Chicago, set out to prove that a "down and outer" could be made over by barbers and tailors. They did their best with Little Bill, a derelict, picked up somewhere west of the river. They treated him to a bath, and to a shave and haircut, with all of the trimmings invented by barbers to enhance manly beauty. They clothed him anew. They fed him well, and, for good measure, they got a job for him.

Little Bill should have been stimulated by this treatment to embark again on a career of honest employment, sober living and gentlemanly associates. Few things will buck up a man like a good grooming. The barbers had every reason to believe that they had made a man over. He looked and acted like another man. He seemed at home among the brisk, successful men in the lobby of the hotel to which he was taken. His health was good, for he ate heartily of a generous meal. A good job awaited his pleasure. There remained only the test of durability to determine the success of the experiment.

The harsh truth is that Little Bill's new career did not survive the night. Success was too much for him. He fled to his old haunts, and before daylight was found lying drunk on the sidewalk. Instead of going to work he went to jail. The barbers and tailors did their part well; food and a job helped as much as possible, but there was something wanting. Perhaps Little Bill needed spiritual guidance toward the end of the experiment, perhaps there was something queer in his makeup from the beginning, perhaps he craved the sympathy of an understanding woman. Whatever he needed, drink answered the purpose, and it was to drink that he resorted. But he is not lost. He is still available for experimental purposes, and he may yet fall into the right hands.

The trouble with this experiment is the trouble in all social regeneration. It tries to make a man over on the outside. The Evangelical is right—what the boy needed was to be born again. His trouble was in his heart; it was his training, it was his associations. The path he was treading was away from God and from the cleanliness that only comes when God cleanses a man. You might as well emphasize the facts in the case. A new environment helps perhaps. It is easier to save a man clean than to save him dirty; at the same time it is no use to try to make good men unless in some way you can reach the heart of them with the Gospel of the Son of God.

Little Bill is a type of a good deal of the work that is being done in this world today, and it is turning out very much in the same way. No social plan that leaves God and His redeeming grace out of it is going to make a new world or a new society.

SHOULD THE PREACHER BE ELECTROCUTED.

What a strange question, coming, as it does, from a minister about a minister? Should the preacher be electrocuted? The article below we clip from the Christian Evangelist. It was written by the Rev. G. H. Combs, who is a contributing editor to that paper. We will not prejudice the minds of our readers, for we wish our ministers to read the article in the light as Brother Combs sees it and presents it. We should like to have a half-dozen short letters from some of our best-qualified ministers, giving their views of Brother Combs' thought. Is he right or is he wrong? If he is right, what is the remedy? If he is wrong, show us wherein.

Under the heading given above, Brother Combs says:

I am by no means persuaded that the preacher nowadays is a blessing—rather, he is a curse. In iconoclastic moods at least—and it is my present mood—I feel just that way about it. It is not because I do not believe in preachers and in preaching—I believe in both. But both have been so warped from the New Testament ideals that it is an open question if the Church would not be the gainer if God should send his chariot and take the preachers all up to heaven—that is, if heaven be their proper destination. A divinely appointed minister and function, yet so perverted—and the Church is largely responsible for such perversion—that the harm they do is just as unmistakable as the good they do. Harm? Yes, friends, harm. But how? In this wise:

To begin, the preacher harms in that Christians take their theology, their doctrines of duty, their notions about things religious from the preacher rather than from the Living Oracles. Church-folk take their doctrines second-hand, and take them from the preacher. They do not go to the Bible for information, they listen to the sermon. And what the preacher says, they swallow whole. Let the preacher be a "radical," and within a decade his people will be radical. The preacher plumes himself on his open-minded, modernistic congregation, but nothing of the kind; that congregation is merely reflecting the preacher. Of course, in every such congregation there will be a few valorous souls who refuse to follow the preacher, but their number is small. If, on the other hand, the preacher is conservative in his views, his people will be conservative. Because they are "loyal to the Book," "to the faith once delivered to the saints?" Save the few again, not at all; they are simply loyal to the preacher and reflect him. Is there any doubt about this? Unfortunately none. Go east, go west and you can gauge in every Church in America the religious ideas and ideals of the people by the ideas and ideals of the preacher. And this ought not to be. I can see but little difference between following a pope and following a preacher if either pope or preacher is to be the sole interpreter of God's will and way. The folk in our own Zion make a lot of fuss about creeds—and rightly—but as well be bound by a creed as bound by a newspaper or a preacher. In fact, I believe I would take my chance with the creed—it is more carefully thought out, at any rate. Protestantism asserted the inalienable right of every individual to his own reading and interpretation of the word of God, but it is sorrily working out in practice that the pew is content to have the pulpit do the interpreting, and largely the reading. Hurt, hurt, hurt!

The preacher again is harming in that the Churches have come to think of the services in the Lord's house as chiefly linked with preacher, eloquence and entertainment. People nowadays —it is a grave statement, I know—do not go in large numbers to the Church to pray, to worship, to confess their sins to one another and to God—they go to hear the preacher. When the preacher is on his vacation, the Church is dark. Congregations fall off even when there is a substitute preacher. Of course, the opportunity to worship is still theirs, perchance God may be in that house, but even with the call to worship and the promise of God's presence, they do not go when "our pastor is away." When the dear pastor comes back, they come back—to meet their pastor, not their God. They love to hear their pastor preach and—is it too hard a word?—get their religion vicariously. Listening to the preacher pray, they get the notion that they are prayerful; hearing him talk about spiritual things, they conceive that they are spiritual. It's all a sort of substitutional business that blocks the way to the individual approach to God. Conceive the preacher as one Christian among many, one voice among many, one interpreter among many, and there is profit in his ministries, but the very moment he is conceived as a monopolist of either God's favor or God's grace, there is damage in both his words and deeds.

But greatest damage of all, the preacher is conceived as the sole agent in the witness-bearing ministry of the Church. There can be no question that in New Testament days every man who had seen his Lord felt moved to bring others into that adorable presence. Every Christian was a preacher. Every Christian was found a living witness for the Christ. Then came the professionalizing of certain witnesses and the mischievous notion that only such witnesses were in conscience bound to make disciples. Then came the day of specialization (as we are wont to call it), where the burden of evangelization was put only upon elect shoulders, and the "laity" went burdenless. It is so today. The chief business of the Church is to make disciples, but that business, as commonly conceived, is the preacher's business. Men and women are to be converted chiefly—or is it only?—by the sermon. And the preachers are the sermon-makers. So it falls out that, in a Church of one or two or three thousand Christians, that only one man—the preacher—is set to the evangelization of these without. To be sure, this has blessed exceptions, but how rare are those exceptions.

At bottom, most Christians cherish the delusion that the devil's forces are to be routed only by the banging of their single gun—the parson's. In all our Churches the majority will be found ready to give money, but few will be found ready to give testimony. Yet that, as Christians, is their chief business.

Now, this is a very distressful situation. It does not constitute an indictment of the sincerity of Christians. The majority of our Church-folk want to do their duty, their whole duty. They are not engaged in witness-bearing because witness-bearing does not seem to them to be their job. It is the preacher's job. This mistake is centuries old. It is deep-rooted. How it came to be and how it persists is matter for the historian, not for me; but I insist that it is the greatest single hindrance to the progress of Christianity today. There is a widespread conviction that Protestantism is not measuring up to its possibilities, a deep-rooted conviction that something is wrong. But the remedies proposed are, in the main, superficial, pallatives rather than cures. The seat of the malady is the artificial disjoining of "clergy" and "laity." All, or nearly all, of our ills flow from that fateful heresy. The Church of today bears little resemblance to the Church of eighteen centuries ago, and the change is not for the better. It's going to take a real revolution to set things right. Electrocute the preachers? The question, at the beginning, was self-whimsically asked, but I am persuaded that the way out is by a study, "de novo," of the implications of this question. Maybe there was more in Alexander Campbell's criticism of the "clergy" than we have been wont to recognize.

WILL DR. PITT ANSWER TWO QEUSTIONS?

In the Religious Herald of June 28th, in discussing what was done in the Northern Baptist Convention in May, Dr. Pitt says:

"The Convention and the denomination will know that the fight against heresy in our pulpits and against rationalism in our schools at home and abroad will go right on. Fundamentalism, or some other conservative movement, will keep the issue alive. Those who have put their hands to the plow will never turn back. On the other hand, there is general rejoicing that we have adopted a program for future work in which all can unite, for we are all Baptists, and all of us alike love our denomination."

Now, Dr. Pitt, we wish you to answer two questions:

(1) What makes a Baptist? Is it not what a man believes and practices as to the teachings of the Bible?

(2) You say, in referring to the fundamentalists and the liberals, "For we are all Baptists, and all of us alike love our denomination." Are we to understand that a man who repudiates the supernatural in Christianity, who denies the inspiration of the Scriptures, who repudiates the virgin birth of Christ, who rejects the performance of miracles by Jesus Christ, who believes that the Bible is not reliable, having in it many mistakes, I say are we to understand the Religious Herald to say that such a man is a good Baptist, and that the hosts of Baptists who stand true to the Bible can work with a man as a good Baptist who thus repudiates the great fundamental truths of the Bible, as held by Baptists? We are not a Baptist, but we are a friend to the great and good work they are doing for the spread of the Gospel in the many lands where they are at work, and I sincerely desire the Herald editor to celebrate the entrance upon his seventy-first year as a man—to tell in plain and unvarnished language just what the facts are which are involved in a true answer to the questions given above. Of course, we have in mind Dr. Harry Emerson Fosdick, who passes for a Baptist minister, and yet is counted as sympath'zing with the rejection of almost every fundamental truth of Christianity. Let us beg you, do not beat about the bush, but strike the bush squarely in the face and tell us if Dr. Fosdick is recognized as a good Baptist while he holds these extreme views of Gospel truth?

A NEW VERSION OF EVOLUTION.

Our friend and brother, the Rev. J. M. Rowland, D. D., editor of the Richmond Christian Advocate, has found out, in some way, that the Mohammedans have an idea of evolution which is altogether different from the Darwinian idea. He says:

"The Koran (that is the Mohammedan Bible) has the other end of evolution. Mohammed said monkeys used to be folks, and on account of some silly conduct were changed into monkeys. This makes us uneasy about some of our friends."

Well, it was Mr. Bryan who once advanced the idea that there was more evidence that some men had degenerated into monkeys than that monkeys had developed into men. That may be all true, but we find it hard to associate a man with a monkey, no matter which way he may be going. The Bible tells us that God made man in His own image. He did not make monkeys to be anything else but monkeys; and beyond all doubt He made man to be a man, that and nothing else. We do not see so much difference in the Darwinian theory of evolution and the Mohammedan theory—a monkey is at one end of the theory, no matter which way you take. We do not claim to make any connection at either end of the theory. Dr. Rowland may be a bit uneasy about some of his friends, but we do not think he has any need to be uneasy. No true man will be likely to let himself down to the level of a monkey—evolution or no evolution.

RIGHTEOUSNESS AND RICHES.

To the Reader: Here is one of the richest discussions of a theme all so vital to the life of Christian business men and women. Did you say it is too long? Oh, no, it is not—not too long for the value of the thought presented. We earnestly urge every Sun reader not to allow this article to pass without giving it a careful reading. It is rich, very rich, and we are conscious of giving real intellectual and soul food to as many of our readers as will give it careful and prayerful attention. It is the alumni address which was delivered at the late Elon commencement by Rev. Stanley C. Harrell, pastor of the Durham Christian Church. Mr. Harrell is a graduate of Elon, having finished his course there in 1909.—Editor.

In the very beginning of our consideration of this theme, I would call your attention to an ancient covenant made between Jehovah and the Israelites as they were about to enter the land of Canaan. Listen to the words of Jehovah to his people: "If ye walk in my statutes and keep my commandments and do them, then I will give you rain in due season, and the land shall yield her increase, and the trees of the field shall yield their fruit, and your threshing shall reach unto the vintage, and the vintage shall reach unto the sowing time; and ye shall eat your bread to the full, and dwell in your land safely. And I will give peace in the land, and ye shall lie down, and none shall make you afraid: and I will rid evil beasts out of the land, neither shall the sword go through your land. For I will have respect unto you, and make you fruitful, and multiply you, and establish my covenant with you. And ye shall eat old store, and bring forth the old because of the new."

Such was the promise God made to the Israelites. Briefly, God told them that if they should keep His commandments and walk in the ways of righteousness that they would prosper. The rains would fall in due season; the land would produce abundantly—so abundantly, in fact, that they would have to bring out the old stores to make room for the new harvest—and peace and prosperity would crown the land. On the contrary, however, should they walk in the ways of disobedience and unrighteousness, the land would not give her increase; poverty, want and famine would stalk through the land; and pestilence and the sword would lay it waste.

This covenant was made before the Israelites entered Canaan. What effect did it have on their national history? How did the principle laid down in this promise work out in actual experience? Time will not permit us to go into a detailed study of Jewish history, but as every one, who has even a slight acquaintance with the course of Jewish life, knows, their history is a succession of rises and falls; of periods of prosperity, when the land produced lavishly, followed by periods of privation and famine. Its history is a series of cycles of peace and plenty, and of warfare and want. Jewish historians not only record these successive periods of plenty and poverty, but they very explicitly state that righteousness was the producing cause of the periods of plenty, and that unrighteousness was the producing cause of the periods of poverty.

These are well-known facts of what is generally called sacred history. What has been the attitude of the modern scientific world toward these facts? Modern scientific criticism has pronounced the promise a religious myth that grew up around Jewish ideas of a national God. They say that the basis of it was superstition. They have pronounced the history the creation of religionists who interpreted the facts of history in the light of their religious superstitions about their God. Thus has the scientist disposed of the promise, the principle, and the record. It has fared but little better at the hands of devout theologians and consecrated Bible students. They have accepted it as true. But they accepted it by faith, without a thought that it might be a principle for accurate analysis and scientific investigation. They accepted it as a sort of special dispensation for a peculiar people, who were in the formative period of their national life, a dispensation for the purpose of teaching a religious truth. We have read it as something to teach religious truths and principles; something to build sermons upon; something with which to illustrate Sunday School lessons; never as a principle upon which to build national prosperity.

It is the thesis of this declaration that when God told the Jews that if they should walk in the ways of righteousness they would enjoy abundant wealth and peace, He was declaring a law as wide as creation, and as eternal as time. This law is written again and again in the Pentateuch. It is the heart and soul of the flaming messages of the prophets. It is exemplified a score of times and more in the experiences of the Jewish people. It is also one of the outstanding messages of Jesus: "Seek ye the kingdom of God; and all these things shall be added unto you." Jesus not only told them the proper attitude of mind and heart toward riches, but he told them the way to obtain riches. He even went further than that—He made wealth the earthly reward of a life of rightecusness. If we had not been so intent upon seeking the other-worldliness of the Gospel we should have discovered this fundamental law long ago. Briefly stated, it is this: Righteousness is the real producer of riches; religion is the creator of wealth. Let us stop thinking of this as merely a religious law. It is a religious law. Yes! It is likewise a scientific law. It is just as truly an economic law. It is a law as fixed and unchanging as the law of gravitation. The evidences of the operation of the law of righteousness and riches are as easily and as clearly seen as are the evidences of the operation of the law of supply and demand.

Strange to say, the modern preacher of this law is not a theologian, nor a Bible student, whose business it is to set forth the fundamental teachings of the Bible. Nor is he a professor of social or political economics, whose business it is to formulate and explain the principles that regulate the creation of wealth. He was not seeking the principles that may operate, but was gathering the figures of past achievements, when he became convinced that the real producer of wealth is righteousness. That we owe our riches not to industry and commerce, but that we owe our industry and commerce to religion. I refer to Mr. Roger W. Babson, to whom I am indebted for many of the facts contained herein. Mr. Babson is the apostle of the gospel that religion makes riches. And he is preaching this law not in the interest of religion, nor in the interests of business, but in the interest of humanity.

To those who have made a study of the position held by the Church in the estimation of the masses today, there can be no doubt as to the fact that the Church is tremendously undervalued. There are thousands who regard the Church as a sort of rich man's club—a place where the poor man is not welcomed. And even should he go and receive a welcome, he would receive nothing of value to compensate him for the time expended. There are thousands of very practical business men who regard the Church as an aggregation of religious enthusiasts, of superstiticus fanatics, and impractical dreamers, who, in their enthusiasm for other-worldliness, have lost all touch with the practical affairs of this world. From the viewpoint of the business man, they are idlers, entirely useless in the present scheme of things; and are to be tolerated only because there has been discovered no humane way to get rid of them. There are other thousands who regard the Church as the champion and defender of the capitalistic interests, and the enemy of the rights and interests of the working man. They regard the Church as a sort of institutional parasite, that takes much and gives little. Many of these, though not avowedly hostile, have evidently decided that the best policy toward the Church is to starve it to death. I sometimes wonder if a great many of these are not enrolled in our Church membership. I cannot here go into a discussion of the extent to which the Church is responsible for this attitude toward her, on the part of the outside world; but what I am trying to emphasize is that not the interests of the Church, but the financial and industrial interests of the world demand that the world must understand the potential creative power of religion.

There are no reasonable grounds upon which to question the claim that the United States is today one of the richest, and one of the most influential, nations of the world. The United States is recognized as foremost among the leaders in world industry, world commerce, world politics, and world finance. What has made the United States the power that it is today? The United States owes its power, its wealth, its industry, and its influence to the power of religion, which controled the hearts of the men and women who laid the foundations of our nation. Do you doubt this? Then you do not have to take the word of a clergyman, nor even the word of a citizen of the United States. Let me quote from Mr. Babson's personal experience, which he gives in his "Fundamentals of Prosperity": "Just before I went to Brazil I was the guest of the President of Argentine Republic. After lunching one day, we sat in his sun parlor, looking out over the river. He was very thoughtful. He said, 'Mr. Babson, I have been wondering why it is that South America, with all its great natural advantages, is so far behind North America, notwithstanding that South America was settled first.' Then he went on to tell how the forests of South America had two hundred and eighty-six trees that can be found in no book of botany. He told me about many ranches that had thousands of acres under alfalfa in one block. He mentioned the mines of iron, coal, copper, silver and gold—all those great rivers and waterfalls which rival Niagara. 'Why is it, with all these natural resources, South America is so far behind North America?' he asked. Well, those of you who have been there know the reason. But, being a guest, I said: 'Mr. President, what do you think is the reason?' He replied: 'I have come to this conclusion: South America was settled by the Spanish, who came to South America in search of gold; but North America was settled by the pilgrim fathers, who went there in search of God.' "

But, if you wish, we can come closer home for an illustration of the point we are making. Within the memory of you who are here tonight, North Carolina was so far down the list of agricultural States that no one took the trouble to count up just where she did stand. During the past few years she has suddenly forged into fifth place as an agricultural State. Why has North Carolina outstripped her sister States in the race for agricultural honors? I will tell you. It is not because of the introduction of modern machinery and scientific methods of farming—the machinery and methods used in North Carolina, when compared with those of the Central and Middle West, make us look like we are still in stage-coach days. The real reason lies in the fact that the fields of North Carolina are cultivated by the sons of the men who came to this country seeking religious freedom and God. And the feet that follow the plow in North Carolina during the week, turn on Sunday to the Church and the worship of God, rather than to the Sunday baseball game and Sunday movies, as is the case in many other States of the Union.

What is it that really makes for wealth and prosperity? If you listen to the materialist, scientist, and the political economist, they will try to convince you that it is natural resources and an abundance of raw materials, that make for wealth and prosperity. But what continent is richest in natural resources and raw materials? Is North America, on which that young stripling giant among nations, the United States, has sprung up, the richest continent in natural resources? Is Europe, which has been the scene of the development of modern political powers and modern civilization, the richest in natural resources? No! The continent that is richest in natural resources is Africa; and not only is it the richest continent in natural resources, but, even though it is one of the oldest inhabited continents, for it is the land of the sphinx and the pyramids, it is still the darkest continent and the most void of civilization. If you are still in doubt as to what is the matter with Africa, you need only to consider her sons who were brought to America. Negroes from darkest Africa were brought to this country and taught the white man's religion; and in two hundred years of slavery and a little over fifty years of freedom, the negro in America has made a thousand times more progress and accumulated a thousand times more wealth than all his brethren in Africa have made in the three thousand years since Tut-Ankh-Amen was laid to rest. And those who have made a careful study of the negro race in America are convinced that the future prosperity of the race will be proportionate to its real religious development.

There is an accepted law of economics that the wealth and prosperity of a nation is dependent upon its supply of available labor. Labor is absolutely convinced that it is the sole creator of wealth. It is not. Labor is but a factor in the production of wealth. The true motive power of labor is religion. There is no nation that has a greater available supply of man power than has Russia. And no nation today is poorer than Russia. May I again quote Mr. Babson, as to an interview with three Russian engineers, just returned from Russia, with fresh and first-hand information of the situation there. "They were pessimistic. When asked about Russia's tremendous natural resources and of its great available labor supply—near two hundred million men, physically strong, and capable of tremendous industrial energy—these engineers shook their heads in utter despair. 'Tell me,' I said, 'what is the real difficulty?'

"They replied, 'The real difficulty is that the Russian leaders have lost their faith in God. Our people have lost temporarily the motives, ambitions, faith, and desire to be of service which they once had. It makes no difference what are the natural resources of a country or the available labor supply, unless its people are actuated by the right motives and by the right purposes; unless they are grounded in the fundamentals of a true religion, there is no prosperity in a country.'

"They said nothing as to their ideas of religion or theology; but these three men, engineers, bore that testimony, individually and as a unit, at the Russian embassy on Sixteenth Street, Washington, D. C., in January, 1922. This only confirms the statement that available labor supply does not make industrial communities prosperous."

Nor can capital be considered as the true creator of prosperity. There may have been a time when it was so considered. There may be a great many men who still so consider it. But capital is only a tool that may be used either to build up or to tear down; to make the masses richer or to make them poorer. There was a time when men argued that the millions invested in the liquor business were indispensable to industry, and that the revenues and taxes paid by the liquor business were indispensable to the government. Some of them actually believed that we could not finance the government without taxes from the money invested in the liquor interests. But when the licensed saloon was abolished we discovered, many of us to our surprise, that the country was richer, rather than poorer; that the value of taxable property had increased, rather than diminished. What was the truth of the matter? The millions invested in the liquor business were making us poorer instead of richer. Poorer in money, I mean, to say nothing of other things.

The same thing applies to the millions invested in the moving-picture industry. There can be no doubt that the capital invested in the business has made money for some of the investors. But is it making the nation and the masses richer or poorer? That question is going to be decided on the basis of religion. And the question is going to be not, is it right or wrong to go to the movies, but is there enough religion in the industry to make it a source of wealth to the nation? Or because of the lack of religion in its purpose and product, is it making us poorer? Religion will dominate the moving-picture industry and make it a wealth-producer, or because of the lack of religion it will become so great a destroyer of wealth we will have to put it out of business to protect our industrial prosperity. Whether capital is a producer of wealth or a destroyer of wealth depends upon whether it is used for social service or for private gain. In other words, the producing power of capital depends upon the religion of those who control it.

Education has become a mighty factor in the development of the world. Trained intelligence is not only a power in the purely intellectual realm, but, within the past twenty-five years, it has come to be recognized as a dominating power in the world of industry. There was a time within the memory of this generation when the college graduate was the butt of many a joke in the business world. The older generation of business men regarded the college graduate as an impractical theorist, unable to hold his own before the keen competition of the business arena. Many of the same business men who but a short time ago lauched at the college graduate who came knocking at the doors of the business world, have lived to see the bulk of the nation's business activities pass into the hands of these same college men. Higher education has proved its worth by the achievements of the men turned out by our colleges and universities. And seeing the increased power and efficiency of trained intelligence, many men came to regard education as the panacea for all our industrial and social ills. They believed that, as the proportion of illiteracy decreased, our modicum of prosperity and happiness would increase in the same ratio. But experience has shown us the error of this assumption. Today our boys go to college, there to receive the best training of the intellectual powers that can possibly be given them. But we are by no means sure of the outcome. Will they come out with their ability as a producer of wealth increased manyfold, or will they come out with only increased ability to spend and waste? Far too many of them come out with expensive tastes and habits. But their ability to produce and, above all, their desire to produce has not increased in corresponding ratio. Our boys are being educated in chemistry, but we are unable to foretell whether they will use their knowledge to make a healthier and a happier world or whether they will sell their knowledge to the unscrupulous food manufacturer to help him disguise the adulteration of his products. Many of our cities are infested with lawyers—lawyers educated in schools founded by Christian men, and endowed with money produced by honest, law-abiding, God-fearing men. These lawyers can be hired to use their knowledge to uphold the honor and integrity of the law or to discover loop-holes and dig up technicalities to cover up the evading of the law and to defeat the purposes of justice. They turn the power of their trained intelligence in favor of the side that offers the largest fee. The only way in the world that you can tell the influence of higher education upon the life of a boy and whether it will make him a producer or a waster, is to know the religious foundation that has been laid for his character and to test the strength of his religious convictions. Education does not create wealth. Germany has a larger per cent of her population that has received higher education, and a smaller per cent of illiterates than any other nation; but its currency is so worthless than it would take a Samson to carry enough of it on his back to make him rich. Just as the colleges and universities proved the economic value of trained intelligence, even so it now remains for the denominational college to demonstrate to the world that religion is the one indispensable characteristic and qualification that makes for the production of wealth.

These things that the political scientist holds up to us as the producers of wealth are but tools. Their value as producers depends upon the character, upon the spirit, upon the purpose, or, call it by its true name, upon the religion of the men and women that use them. We must learn to think straight. What are the real forces that make men, communities, States, and nations prosperous? They are "integrity, justice, charity, self-control, faith and inspiration." And these fundamental forces that produce wealth are born, cradled, nurtured and perfected in the heart of religion.

We often hear business men say that "Business is business." So it is. But it is not successful business unless it is founded upon integrity. Many of you have heard of the Farmers' Bank of Nansemond, a banking institution which, under the administration of the late William H. Jones, became the foremost bank of its kind in the world. Mr. Jones declared that it was his business policy to make loans and investments for that institution, not upon security, but upon character, which was but another way of saying that he was banking upon the religion of the men with whom he did business. The president of a large banking institution, in going over the asse'ts of the bank with the board of directors, recently said that practically all of the losses that the bank had sustained in recent years had been on secured loans, while the unsecured loans had practically all been paid. What did he mean by that? He meant that when he had made loans that were secured by tangible assets, he had not inquired as to the character and religion of the borrowers; but when he had made loans that were not secured by tangible assets he had been very careful to make them only to men who had character and religion. And religion had shown itself to be the only secure security.

Why are the masses of poor people poor? Is it not because of their lack of self-control? Most of them are poor because they do not have sufficient self-control to take a task and stick to it diligently enough and steadfastly enough to accumulate a competency. Or they work hard enough and steadily enough to make sufficient money, but once they have made it they do not have self-control to hold on to it in the face of manifold temptations to buy. That can never be more conclusively proved than to consider what went with the high wages labor received during the war. Most of us who are poor owe our poverty to the fact that we are lacking in the power of self-control. The only power that can develop self-control is religion. In fact, do you know anything in all the world that even has for its purpose the development of self-control except religion?

If you were asked to name the foundation of all religion, you would answer without a moment's hesitation that it is faith. If you were asked what is the foundation of all industry, wealth, and prosperity, you would not be far from right if you made the same answer—faith. What is faith? Faith is that mysterious force that kindles the flame of ambition; that fires the spark of genius; that energizes the power of endurance so that men are driven on and on in the face of oft-repeated failures; that makes them keep on when every logical ground upon which to base a hope has been exhausted; that makes a man persist when all other men have given up; and which drives him to ultimate success—that mysterious power that we call inspiration and faith. It is not only the foundation of religion, but it is the foundation of every enterprise that has enlarged the wealth of mankind. And the religious atmosphere is the only atmosphere in which faith grows.

Take the three fine arts that have thrilled the heart of man, beautified his dwelling-places and his temples, immortalized his finest achievements, and inspired his noblest thoughts and ambitions —music, painting, and sculpture—whence did they come? Music was born of religion, and owes its perfection and power to the flaming power of religious passion. The old masters, who caught the glory of colors and immortalized their visions upon canvas, who made themselves and the countries that gave them birth famous so long as civilization shall endure—what inspired them to such achievement but the spirit of the religion of Jesus Christ? Religion has built the world's most beautiful pieces of architecture. Religion has painted the most beautiful pictures, and carved the noblest statuary that the world has ever seen. Religion is the world's master-builder.

We hear much today of the boasted glory and achievements of science, but if you will take the trouble to investigate the history of the sciences you will find that in most cases every true science was started in a monastery or developed under the wing of religion. The same is true of the industries that loom so large in the world today. The weaving industry was developed in a monastery. Chemistry and chemical science was the product of the studies of religious men. Burbank has only developed processes of horticulture commenced by the monks. Printing by means of moveable type was known and used in a small way in China two thousand years ago, but the printing industry was not established until a band of persecuted Christians, fired with the Spirit of God, wanted to spread the Bible over all Europe. When the power of religion took hold of the art of printing, then it became a producing industry. Religion is the mother of both science and industry.

The world today is hindered and harassed by the struggle between capital and labor. The warfare has been going on now for years, and is apparently no nearer a solution than when it began. Each side is contending for what it calls its inalienable "rights." Both sides seem to have forgotten their inalienable "duties." The trouble with labor is that it has lost its desire to produce. The trouble with the capitalist is that they have come to regard industry as a thing organized for profit, rather than for service. They are opposing one another. They are fighting one another. They are both losing heavily, and all of us are the losers with them. And it appears that "never the twain shall meet." And they never will meet until they come to the teaching of Jesus Christ concerning service. When both the capitalist and the laborer get religion and begin to practice it in their relationship one toward the other, then we shall have peace. We shall see them working together like brothers. And this great land of ours will enjoy the riches and prosperity that God intended for it to enjoy.

These are some of the arguments that go to prove that the ancient covenant which God ratified with Moses, as the representative of the Jewish race, was not a temporary promise, made to a peculiar people, for the purpose of impressing a religious truth. Nor was it the fancied favoritism, superstitiously ascribed to a tribal deity. But a fundamental law which forms the foundation of all economic science; a law that has left proofs upon the pages of history that are far more unmistakable than the proofs of the theory of evolution. The scientist may say that we have not given a logical explanation of why and how righteousness produces riches. Very true. Nor has the scientist explained to us what electricity is, or how and why it does all the marvelous things which it has accomplished. And we both know it would be foolish to refuse to make electricity our servant because we cannot explain its power. Then, let us be consistent. When we know that righteousness does produce riches, then let us practice it and grow rich, even though we may not know why and how it produces wealth.

If time permitted, we might go on piling up evidence of the verity of the law that righteousness is the true producer of riches. But we venture the prediction that just as surely as there has never been formulated a code of civil law that guaranteed true liberty and justice to humanity that was not founded upon the decalogue, just so surely will there be formulated no true science of political economy, but that it will have for its foundation the law that righteousness is the true producer of wealth. Nor will any community, people, or nation enjoy the full measure of material prosperity that a divine providence intended for them to enjoy until their conduct, policies, and practices are motivated and controlled by the principles of righteousness laid down in the religion of Almighty God as given in the Gospel of His Son, Jesus Christ.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

Suffolk Church observed "College Day" on July 8th. The day was fine, the congregation was good, and twenty-five Elonites sat in front of the pulpit. Elon graduates held the principal place in the service. Rev. B. F. Black, a graduate of Elon, and pastor of Rosemont and Berea, Norfolk, preached the sermon, and George F. Whitley, Commonwealth's attorney of Smithfield, sang "Hold Thou My Hand." The whole service was enjoyed by the congregation, and the recognition of Elon College as a Christian institution was the second observance of "College Day." Rev. B. F. Black is curator of the Elon Museum, and he is already working on the new to take the place of the old which was destroyed by the January 18th fire. Black had collected some rare relics and documents of Christian Church history that cannot be restored; but he will, with the co-operation of friends and the National Museum, build up a larger and more valuable museum in years to come.

"College Day" is in its infancy, and people are timid in taking hold heartily of untried occasions; but it surprises the most doubtful to see how all grow into interest that repeats itself before us. As Elon men and women are used on these occasions, the public will have an opportunity to learn the class of students that graduate from Elon. Even now, in the early stages of its history, comparison with older institutions is no embarrassment to Elon.

There are two things about students who graduate from a Church college—first, they understand better the genius of their own denomination; and they are more loyal to the local Church. They come back to their own. Besides this, they do not lose the simple faith in Christianity that fades out in the pursuit of learning in secular schools. Education of the head only leaves the heart without proper nourishment, while education of the heart only leaves the individual without the necessary equipment to cope with this present age. The development of both head and heart together is essential for true life in this age. When life was simple, emotional religion served human needs, but life is so complex now that simple goodness is the prey of designing spirits sharpened by intellectual training. The heart is wiser than the head, as love is supreme; and "out of it are the issues of life." Job raises the question: "Canst thou, by searching, find out God?" To put the answer in a simple way, one might answer: "By the head, man finds out nature; by the heart, man finds out God." No man hath seen God at any time, but may believe God. In the field of science we walk by sight; in the field of spiritual life we walk by faith. When the two work together, man understands, and understands God. W. W. Staley.

ELON LETTER.

It takes a great man to make a great mistake. History is replete with shining instances of this unhappy misfortune. And I say misfortune advisedly, because the great mass of people have the unfortunate faculty of accepting the views of men whom they esteem to be great in one field without question in all other fields.

We have two unfortunate situations of this character in our country today—Thomas A. Edison and Henry Ford. Unquestionably, these are great and successful men. As an inventor, as a man capable of harnessing up the forces of the material world in the service of man and of his life, Edison has no equal in all history, nor has a man yet appeared who can properly be said to be second to him. But Edison is a materialist only. He has no home life. He has no social life. Spiritually, he is a dwarf. Ideals and the broad sympathy of culture are strangers to his life concern. He moves in a narrow groove. But he is authority in his realm.

Now, this man has, in the last few months, been questioning college students, and pronounces graduates inefficient. A few years ago he propounded a foolish theory about a fundamental economic question. A college professor, fully possessed of the facts, ridiculed him. Edison tried to have the college professor dismissed. He is not only ignorant out of his own department, but intolerant and arrogant. Edison knows about as much about the college curriculum as a June bug does about the climate of the North Polar regions. As an electrician, he is a wizard. As a guide in matters of education, he is a bungling novice.

And Henry Ford is not any safer as an educational guide. Ford is a genius at organization. A man who can plan to keep seventy-five thousand men at work and produce three thousand six hundred cars in eight hours is no simpleton. His peer in business ability has not yet appeared on the planet. But Ford is ridiculous in other directions. We shall never forget that ill-conceived peace ship which, in 1915, he sent over the seas to end the World War. A man with any knowledge of history and any understanding of human passions under tense excitement could not have dreamed such a fallacious undertaking. But Ford has a contempt for history. He declares it is "all bunk." His lack of the knowledge of it made him act "punk" in 1915. Ford says college graduates also are bunk. He advises that a man learn a trade, as he did, and let college alone.

And now this same Henry aspires to be President. There is no questioning his patriotism. There is no questioning his business acumen and organizational ability. But how could he handle the astute statesmen of Europe? He would be like a candle-fly before a blazing torch, the easy prey and victim of every designing politician of pleasing mien the world over. With no basis of judgment rooted in the past experiences of the race, he would be at the mercy of faddists and reformers.

Now, it is pitiful that these two geniuses do not recognize their limitations, or rather that others do not! It is hardly to be expected that they would. They are doing the aspiring youth of our day more irreparable injury than their inventional and organizational abilities can ever compensate. One Shakespeare with his idealism is worth more to humanity than a Western range crowded with Edisons and Fords. It is ideals that make men and women, that make life worth while. One single soul even undeveloped is of more worth than all the material substance of the world, declared the man who knew. A developed, educated soul, who can estimate its worth?

Let those who will elect to do so take the advice of Ford and Edison and devote themselves to the material things of life. They will later on, when it is too late, regret it with abiding sorrow. Let all who aspire to the enduring service of our race follow the Nazarene in the fine estimate He placed on the soul and its developed capacity. Education is soul enlargement—that is all, and that makes it a priceless, an enduring possession.

Is college education worth while? It is if manhood outweighs materialism. It is if men are living spirits rather than phantoms of clay. It is if we have in God a Father.

MT. BETHEL AND THE MINISTRY.

Mt. Bethel is a little country Church twenty miles from Greensboro, N. C., twenty miles from Reidsville, N. C., and twenty-five miles from Winston-Salem. Indeed, it is about twenty miles from "everywhere"—but it is in reach of Sears, Roebuck & Co. and preachers from Elon College. When this writer was a boy, the community was famous for its "prayer meetings" and "illicit liquor." (That was not a long time ago!) The powers of good and evil clashed in a continuous struggle. Christians and sinners stood out so distinctly that you could distinguish them in the night without a lantern. Mr. A was a Christian, and nobody doubted it; Mr. B was a sinner, and he and everybody else admitted it. Everybody knew where everybody stood. There was no guessing. One could easily choose which side he preferred, and when he found his place, if he held it he had to go to work. (I was baptized one "meeting day," and my pastor called on me to lead in prayer the next. I was only a small boy, but everywhere the battle was fierce and the strategic generals lost no time anywhere.)

The preachers from Elon College were Rev. P. T. Klapp and the sainted Rev. L. I. Cox. They were wise unto their day. And, therefore, they knew how to apply the Gospel to the conditions as they were. They declared the whole Gospel—atonement, grace, regeneration, faith, conversion, justification, sanctification and glorification in an heaven eternal, or damnation in an eternal hell. (These strange words have been superceded by "social service," moral influence, humanitarianism, evolution, oblivion and molly-coddle!) Oftentimes the preaching of these two preachers was so plain that people either got up on their feet and came to the altar or got up on their mules and went home. In all reverence, I say their sermons were moving! They would not fit everywhere, but those brethren were not preaching everywhere. They fitted where they were preached, because they came out of hearts on fire for God and inspired by the Holy Spirit. They did not compromise with the world, and the worse sinner in the community knew he had no better friends than they were.

Their converts got religion enough to keep that country Sunday School going all the year and a mid-week prayer meeting every Wednesday and family prayers every night. When they came, few persons knew the difference between a college and a collared, and few (except, maybe, some mother) had ever thought that that struggling little Church, with its ever-growing graveyard, would give any one to the Gospel ministry. Within the last fifteen years there have arisen from that Church seven ministers, as follows, in chronological order: Rev. H. E. Truitt, George Williams (Methodist), John W. Knight, John G. Truitt, F. C. Lester, R. A. Truitt (Methodist), and Mrs. Cicero Jones (Wesleyan Methodist); and within that time the names of Revs. P. T. Klapp and R. P. Crumpler have been placed upon its roll. Also that little Church twenty miles from "everywhere" and in reach of Elon College (which is forty miles away—as I know, for I have walked it), has the distinction (which I mention humbly) of having a family of six children, all of whom hold bachelor degrees from Elon College.

Conclusion: Let us keep faith with Elon College; let us preach the Gospel, adapting it to our day as wisely as our predecessors adapted it to their; and let us keep faith with our country Churches and also those of our cities, for in many things our need is extraordinary, so that Christ may supply our every need according to His riches in glory. JOHN G. TRUITT.

QUIET TALKS.

BY S. D. GORDON.

A compass and an anchor aren't handy things to have at sea. They're essentials. No ship's captain will ever say that it's a good thing to have a chart and a steering apparatus. You've got to have them.

The old world is surely "at sea" just now. The statesmen agree on that much, and the international financiers and educators and others. A good many of the statesmen are decidedly shaky on their chart and compass and steering apparatus. The magnetic needle that ought to point north wobbles. The North Star—has it shifted? or gotten lost? or, is the bother with men's eyes, possibly?

That World War certainly did things, and big things, too. And, the bother is, it is still doing things. The backwash is still on, and on strong. The suction behind the big boat is terrific in its swirl, and sweep, and engulfing suction. Every one feels it—statesmen, publicists, economists, industry captains, teachers, preachers, and just we common folk earning roof and shoes, trying to get both ends together, somehow.

And the religious world is no exception to the rule. And, mark you keenly, this goes to the very root of things. For at heart every one has the religious instinct. There is a pull-up toward God inside every one. And if a man wobble here it affects his conduct. The moral fibre of life begins to unravel. And when that goes—what is left worth while? Or, what will be left at all in a little while? Ask Russia! Though you needn't go so far.

For conduct and creed are as Siamese twins. They can't live apart. You're intensely concerned with your fellow's belief about what is in your fellow's belief about what is in your pocket as you push through the thick crowd. Creed controls conduct. What does he believe about the sanctity of your home?

A man's inside heart-beliefs touch the very vitals of all life, of every sort, everywhere. Every man has a creed, a belief. And it controls him. Whatever controls his actions—that's his creed. At heart, it's really his religious belief. It's his response to that inside pullup toward God.

The Pendulum Swings.

And the pendulum swing is on in our religious thinking decidedly on, sometimes violently, unwisely, untactfully on. At one extreme are old statements of belief, sometimes very rigidly put, yet with utmost sincerity. The "i" must be dotted just so, and the "t" crossed at a certain angle. Else one is an outcast.

Some are so absorbed, hugging a certain-shaped anchor, with its flukes just so, that they don't see the poor fellow gasping and drowning right there at the side of the boat.

At the other extreme the anchor is dropped completely. The compass is overboard. The steering apparatus rusts. The boat's adrift. And the occupants are laughing gleefully. The rocks ahead, the storm gathering black on yonder near horizon, these go unnoticed. Dot your "i's" and cross your "t's" as you please, but don't bother us about it, these say.

Yet, all sane men are agreed that there must be an anchorage at shore, and compass and steering arrangements at sea. In business, in school, in fraternal and social intercourse, in finance, in international undertakings, in traffic, even in pastimes—golf and tennis and ball—there are certain fixed things.

They are simple essentials, commonly recognized and accepted and respected. Or else one is ruled out of the game. These are the compass, the anchorage, the things we steer and steady by. They are essential. They are simple and few. They never vary.

Once these are understood and accepted, there is the widest range of personal liberty in belief and action. Agreement on essentials gives freedom. Liberty comes only in obedience to a recognized sense of right. Creed, belief, controls conduct.

I want, in these brief "Quiet Talks" here in this neutral hall by the sea, these summer mornings, to talk in a very simple homely way about the really few essentials of our common Christian faith. By pretty common consent, our Christian teaching leads all others in its ideals, and, more, in its power—a thing distinctive to itself.

Then one can go out and think things through afresh for himself. I hope it may help us get our feet, and keep our feet, and stand steady, no matter how strenuously the crowds pull and push the other way.

Thinking Crooked.

A man in a small craft left his colored servant at the steering wheel with strict directions to steer by a certain fixed star. The servant wakened his master in the middle of the night, saying, "Give me another star; I've lost that one." It's nighttime, and a bit stormy, and there's only one North Star.

You can't think crooked and live straight. Loose beliefs lead to loose morals. The two are inseparable. We are intensely concerned with our fellow-man's morals. We must be. And he with ours. Morals make conduct. The State takes account of that. Every policeman silently tells of our intense concern about each other's morals and conduct.

There's a chain of five loose things that are tightly linked together. And conduct, moral fibre or the lack of it, hangs out persistently, insistently, like a clammy, clinging, chilling fog, at the lower end of the chain. Yes, it's the lower end.

AN UNUSUAL OCCASION AT BURLINGTON CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

From the Burlington News we are permitted to give the following very interesting account of a service that was not only infrequent, but full of tenderness and appreciation:

Following the morning service at the Christian Church yesterday, during which five members were received into the Church and one was baptized, occurred a very unique and unusual service, this occasion being the unveiling of the bronze tablet which has been placed on the corner of the building facing toward the intersection of Davis and Church Streets. This tablet carries the name of the Church, the date of its organization, the name of the organizer and first pastor, Rev. J. W. Holt, the date of the erection of the old building, and that of the erection of the present edifice.

As soon as the congregation had assembled outside the building, the pastor of the Church, G. O. Lankford, presiding, announced that Captain W. H. Turrentine, chairman of the board of deacons, would speak. The captain referred in the beginning of his remarks to the experience of St. Paul in Athens in finding an inscription to an unknown god. Continuing, he remarked that the inscription on the tablet that was about to be unveiled was in the name of the God that we know and worship. And in speaking of the Church, he said: "The Church is no place for loafers, but workers. It is God's workshop. It is the headquarters of the army of God. We have dedicated the Church to God, and now we name it for Him."

Following the remarks of Captain Turrentine, Rev. J. W. Holt was asked to speak. Although very feeble and barely able to stand, this veteran hero of the cross slowly rose from his chair, which had been placed beneath the tablet against the wall for his comfort, and, leaning on his cane, responded with a very tender and touching address. He likened this occasion in his life to a golden sunset of a day that had been filled with many clouds, saying that many things had come into his life recently that had comforted and cheered him greatly, but that this was one of the happiest experiences of his life. He expressed great appreciation for the honor the Church had bestowed upon him in inscribing his name upon the still covered plate of bronze above his head. In closing, he said: "I never expect to look upon the walls of this building again. Farewell!" He then stated that he knew, according to the rate of his physical decline, that it was only a short while before he would be called to his reward.

Mr. McBride Holt, who was himself a charter member of the Church and its first secretary, was asked to call the roll of the charter members and all those living and present were requested to take their stand to the left of the veteran minister. Then the members of the building committee of the present structure were asked to stand on his right. With this double line forming a kind of lane, Eleanor Fix, youngest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. M. Fix, and niece of Rev. J. W. Holt, was asked to come forward and unveil the tablet, which she did, amid the intermingled feelings of joy and sadness of those who were present—of joy because of the accomplishments of the past, and of sadness because of the consciousness that he who stood in their midst at that time would soon walk no more among us.

While the exercises were simple and brief, they were very touching, tender and impressive. Those present will not soon forget the scene they witnessed, and they will carry in memory the picture of a man who has served faithfully his fellowman and his God, the Rev. J. W. Holt, with the sunset glow of life upon his face.

VISIT THE CHRISTIAN ORPHANAGE.

The Christian Orphanage is an institution of the Christian denomination. It has been in existence for more than sixteen years and has cared for 215 children and has in its care at the present time 100 children. Yet we have many members in our Church who do not know anything about this institution, which is a part of the Christian denomination.

We have a great many members of our denomination who are not interested in the Christian Orphanage because they have never visited the orphanage and looked in the faces of our bright little boys and girls. Our people should avail themselves of every opportunity to visit our orphanage. It is your institution, and you should visit it and better acquaint yourself with it and realize the golden opportunity you have to serve helpless humanity.

We want to extend to all who attend the Chautauqua at Elon College this year an invitation to visit the orphanage while here. The doors will be open. A happy welcome awaits you. The children and the management will be glad to see you, and we feel that your visit will better acquaint you with the work here and you will be more interested in the work.

LETTERS OF INTEREST.

Not all the letters that come to us relative to Men and Millions are encouraging, but very many are. This movement has certainly found many faithful and hearty advocates who, at great personal sacrifice, show their loyalty not only to the movement, but to their God and their Church.

The following in today's mail represent a large class: "We were burned out since I made that pledge, and this has made it impossible to help any right now; but, God being my helper, I will pay some as soon as I can. Please believe me when I say that I will certainly do all I can for this good cause just as quickly as I am able to do so."

Another, with an enclosure of $20.00, closes his letter as follows: "I have been unable to send the amount I was due on my Men and Millions pledge until now. I enclose post-office money-order to cover amount due to date. I regard this pledge as a very sacred debt, and hope to be able to pay the balance as soon as, or before, it is due."

Such kindly expressions and heroic efforts for co-operation in this, our greatest Church task, are both encouraging and inspiring.

J. O. Atkinson.

N. B.: Any people who have among them such spirits as are the persons from whom our beloved fellow-servant, Dr. Atkinson, quotes, will accomplish something for the good of their fellows. God bless them in remaining so true and loyal to the cause which we love and for which we labor. Such loyalty and sacrifice must bring good fruit.—Editor.

A PLEA TO PASTORS AND CHURCHES.

To Pastors.

The Chautauqua and School of Methods opens very soon—July 30th, at Elon College. This gathering is planned for all of our people who wish to "study to show themselves approved unto God." Every pastor sees the need of more workers and better-prepared workers. In the few days before the opening of the session, and throughout the week, may we have your prayers, that the week may accomplish much for the sake of Christ and the Church. May we count upon your interest, shown through your presence, and your urging people from your own Churches to attend?

To all Churches.

Have you appointed some one to go to Elon School of Methods to bring back to your Church and Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Society a message of inspiration? No better investment of funds could be made than to use a few dollars to send a Church leader, a bright young person for this week's association with many leaders of the Christian Church, thinking together, studying together, and playing together. Many Churches will benefit by this opportunity. Will yours be one?

To Churches Near Elon.

Especially to the North Carolina Churches is the Chautauqua and School of Methods a great opportunity. Many Churches could have all of their Sunday School teachers and workers there every morning for the class-work, and revolutionize their whole program of work by gaining a larger vision here. These classes are led by men and women of knowledge and experience. This week is for you, for every pastor, and more, for every interested Christian. Will you come?

PROUD OF HIM.

For four years Dr. P. H. Fleming has been welfare officer for Alamance County. He has also been pastor of three of our Churches. A change in the qualifications of persons eligible for county welfare officers made it necessary for Dr. Fleming to resign as pastor in order to continue in his county work. Without a moment's hesitation he withdrew his name, declaring he would not give up his right to preach the Gospel for the presidency of the United States. I was proud of him. Aren't you?

Of my own free will and accord, I am asking our pastorless Churches to get in touch with Dr. Fleming. Such a man deserves every consideration. Brethren and friends, see that he gets it.

W. A. Harper.

A DAY DREAM WHICH IS FAR MORE THAN A DREAM—A LIVING ACTUALITY IN THE CONCRETE.

By Sion M. Lynam.

The Elon College building program is at once the largest and most phenomenally successful which any Southern denominational college has yet undertaken. When, on January 24th, the board of trustees outlined their gigantic program for building and endowment, many were free in their expressions of surprise and openly doubted the possibility of its realization. They did not believe that so vast a program could be carried to completion by a college so small as Elon, and yet within less than six months of its creation the program is far toward completion. Doubts have been turned into confidence, and Elon has become one of the best-known colleges of the South.

This program grew out of the burning of the Elon College administration building on January 18th. Out of that smouldering mass of ruins, which faced students and faculty on that tragic morning, has come the building program of the college.

On January 18th the administration building was a heap of ashes and smouldering ruins. There was pain in the hearts of students and faculty alike, and there were tears in the voice of President Harper as he faced his students just following the fire and sounded even in the shadows of the calamity the high note of confidence and hope which he has made a reality in so short a while. There must be reasons for this rapid recovery of this little denominational college. Pain does not become ecstatic joy nor tears turn to songs without a cause. There is no one single man of wealth to whom the success of the program may be directly traced. Two there are who have made large contributions, it is true, but even they could not be said to have made the program the success which it has been. Mr. J. M. Darden, of Suffolk, Va., and Mr. P. J. Carlton, of Richmond, have given fifty thousand dollars each to the reconstruction program. The real secret lies deeper yet, and is traceable only to the love and loyalty of the small brotherhood who built and consecrated the college by which they now stand so unflinchingly in its crucial hour.

The Christian Church founded Elon College thirty-three years ago, and dedicated it to a high and holy purpose. That Church has stood steadfastly by its college from the hour of its birth, and has lent to it all the strength of a small, but valiant, people. They erected the building so lately a mass of ruins, brick by brick, with terrible sacrifice. They built it with sacrifice that most men would tremble at. Men and women have saved and contributed to its building, whose own boys and girls could never hope to obtain a college course. Its first president sold his own cows to complete the roof of the burned building that the college might open. It is out of such foundations of love and with such sacrifices that Elon College has grown, and there lies more than half the secret of its marvelous achievements at the present time.

The building program of the college includes seven buildings, five of which it was the intention of the board to build without delay. These buildings include an administration building which the people of Alamance County, in which the college is situated, are giving as a token of their high appreciation of the work of the college in their midst; a science building, which will adequaaely house the departments of science of the college, and give them space and facilities to function in the largest way possible; an auditorium building, the gift of J. M. Darden, of Suffolk, Va., and which will be the most beautiful auditorium building standing on the campus of any college in North Carolina; there will also be a library building, the gift of P. J. Carlton, of Richmond, Va., and a religious activities building.

The administration building, Alamance Hall, given by the people of Alamance County to show their appreciation of the fine work of Elon, stands at the center of the quadrangle. It is larger than the burned building, and will far more adequately care for the needs of the college. That which impresses one about this building is the source from which it came. It comes to the college from the hearts of the surrounding people, from those who have grown up with the college and who know its work. They know its failings and its achievings, and they appreciate the fidelity which it has kept to the high purpose to which its founders dedicated it. The true worth of an individual or an institution is the esteem in which the neighbors hold him or it, and the true worth of Elon is amply attested by this gift of a hundred thousand dollar building by its neighbors.

Colonel R. L. Holt, long a friend of the college, began the movement, and it was highly approved by the citizens of the county. The excellent example set by Colonel Holt and the citizens of Alamance County has done much to aid Elon elsewhere. This fine gift of the county, with the two large gifts of individuals, has been the whole of the large financial gifts which the college has received. The others have come as the gifts for the erection of the first building came, by the sacrifices of a loyal people.

Dr. Harper declared, as he faced the students on the morning of the fire, that the college was more than its buildings—it was a spirit—and he has gone on declaring and believing this. "I had rather have the spirit of the Elon students on the morning of January 18th than to have the administration building," he told the people of Burlington and Alamance County, and it is this spirit which causes it to stand so unswervingly behind its college in any stress, however terrible.

It is notable that, in spite of the fact that the building which housed nearly the whole of the equipment of the college, as well as the study halls of the college, lay in ruins, not one student left the campus because of it. They stood by their college in the darkness as they had stood by it in the flashing glory of its late successful football season. They carried into their work the same sort of spirit which they had carried into their play, and which had made them winners in contests against teams which surpassed them in strength.

The science hall, and the auditorium building (the Whitley Memorial Building, which Mr. Darden has given the college) will stand at the two southern corners of the quadrangle. Both of these buildings are now being erected, and construction is being pushed rapidly forward. The buildings of the quadrangle will all be of similar design, and will carry out a complete design.

The science hall will house the science departments of the college. Physics, chemistry, geology and biology will find a place in the building. The building is being so constructed that laboratories and class-rooms will be united. This will greatly facilitate the teaching of the sciences, since it will allow demonstrations during recitations which was not possible before in so large a way. The best science buildings all over the country have been studied, and the best points have been incorporated in the new science building at Elon. The professors of the various departments have outlined the floors which they will occupy after a careful study of the needs of their departments. This arrangement will give Elon one of the most up-to-date science buildings in the State.

The auditorium building will have a capacity of one thousand seats, and will house the large music department of the college. Much stress is laid on the music department, and adequate facilities are to be furnished in the new buildings. Studios and practice rooms have been carefully planned for convenience and the best work.

On the north of the quadrangle will stand the library (the Carlton Memorial Building) and the religious activities building.

The Carlton Memorial Building is to have a capacity of one hundred thousand volumes, and reading-rooms adequate for a much enlarged student body are to be equipped. Every library need has been carefully studied in the drawing of the plans for the Carlton building, and no feature which would add to the efficiency of the building has been omitted.

In the religious activities building, Elon will have a distinctive feature. For two years the religious organizations of the college had been correlated and so co-ordinated as to achieve the greatest results with the least use of time and energy. The religious education programs which the organization has already put on causes those in charge of the work to feel there are great possibilities for the movement. The religious activities building will care for these needs. It will provide space and equipment for the entire religious education program.

The leaders in religious education in the United States and Canada have been consulted in the drawing of the plans, and they have highly approved the scheme. So far, no college in America has just such a building, and the idea is original with the Elon religious education department.

The work of the religious activities organization has served as a laboratory of religious education for the past two years, and the new building will make the religious education department one of the leading departments of the kind in America. It will be able to successfully give laboratory work in connection with the study, and will give to the Church leaders equal to the task of facing the great need of the Church at the present time.

The other two buildings included in the architect's plan are dormitories, and will be constructed as they are needed to care for the student body.

The whole program includes a large expenditure of money. That which is to be completed at the present time will cost three hundred thousand dollars, and an equal amount will be added to the endowment fund of the college. A large part of this money has already been subscribed, and payments are being made rapidly so that the college can pay as it goes in the construction of the buildings.

The construction is in the hands of J. W. Stout & Co., of Sanford, N. C. The contractors express a confident hope of completing at least two of the new buildings by the opening of the fall term of the college, and others will rapidly follow.

Dr. W. A. Harper, Elon's well-known president, has given himself unreservedly to the great program which the board of trustees has outlined, and is bending every energy to its success. A large share of the success which the program has attained is due to his untiring efforts, and the fine way in which he has managed the campaign.

While Church and State marvel at the unparalleled achievement of this small denominational college, there is a confident assurance in the hearts of those who are guiding its destiny that the success of the program is a certainty. They feel that all which has gone before but presages a brighter day of usefulness to the Church which supports it, to the county and State within whose borders it stands, and to the nation and the world, is breaking in a resplendent dawn. They know that this new day brings to it new tasks, and they have dedicated themselves anew to the high and holy purpose on which the founders built the college thirty-three years ago. They will go on building men and women with stalwart Christian characters, competent to lead in civic and religious growth in any community in which they live.

Its record in the past has justified this expectation, and the improved facilities which have arisen from the ruins of the building which cost so much sacrifice makes certain the possibilities which await the coming Elon. An atmosphere of joy and prosperity pervades the campus, the community and the Church. Where tears were on January 18th are songs today, and despite the tired lines on the face of the president, lines which have come in the past few months, there is joy in his heart. He will not mind these, if the years will make his dreams of a larger and more serviceable Elon a reality.

3,000 THE CHRISTIAN SUN. 9,000

There are between 8,000 and 10,000 families represented in the Southern Christian Convention, which means if a copy of THE CHRISTIAN SUN is placed in each family, a possible subscription list of 9,000 copies. There are now circulated approximately 3,000 copies, or about one-third of our Church families are reached. Hence, there should be added to the list 6,000 new subscribers in order to have the Church paper placed in every family.

Now, the great personal effort required to do this must be rewarded. To compensate this labor, if premiums are given, it will take 20 automobiles, or 40 radio machines, or 50 to 60 talking machines, or 90 to 100 typewriters, or 200 to 300 watches, etc. Don't you think you will have a good opportunity to secure one of these prizes?

But you need not confine your solicitations to your Church alone. You have friends in other denominations who will gladly assist you by giving a subscription. Make your appeal in a straightforward manner. True men and women are interested in the success of their friends and will lend a helping hand.

PREMIUMS GIVEN FOR NEW SUBSCRIPTIONS.

The subscription price of THE SUN, recently reduced, is now $2.00 per year—two six-month subscriptions at $1.00 each count as one year. One person may take as many as he may wish for himself or for others. Those in arrears should pay up and assist the solicitor by taking an advanced subscription.

SCHEDULE.

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

July 29, 1923.

Subject: "Matthew, the Publican."—Matt. 9:9-13; Luke 5:27-32.

Golden Text: "I am not come to call the righteous, but sinners."—Luke 5:32.

Devotional Reading: Isa. 55:1-7.

Reference Material: Mark 2:13-22; Gospel of Matthew.

Matthew's Call and Response.

"To every man there openeth
A high way and a low,
And every man decideth
The way his soul shall go."
—Oxenham.

That day at his place of toll, Matthew decided to travel the high way. Only a few verses relate the deeds of his life. A great Gospel is his greatest bequest to man. The Gospel of Matthew presents parables and incidents, teachings and sayings which the other writers do not relate. Without this record, we would be immeasurably poorer, without the complete sermon on the mount, the parable of the virgins and the talents, and the hidden treasurer. Christ's great call to the weak and heavy-laden comes to us through this man who was sitting at the custom seat when Jesus saw him, and called, "Follow Me." Suppose Matthew had not listened to the call! His gospel would never have been written. But because he did choose the high way, his life still speaks.

"And as Jesus passed by * * * He saith, 'Follow Me.'" There is a day in every life when Jesus draws near. The great day for the life is when that call is heard and heeded. Matthew may have heard of the wonderful healing of the man with the palsy, and may have been wondering about those wonderful words, which roused the criticism of the scribes and the joy of the multitudes—"Thy sins are forgiven thee." As he sat there, a hated tax-gatherer, only Jesus could choose him as one of the twelve, one who should write of His words and deeds. For the publican was placed with the thief and murderer to whom a promise need not be kept. He was looked upon as a traitor, a Jew who cared nothing for the glory of Israel, as the tax was being collected for a heathen power. He was the degraded one, whose alms could not even be accepted in the synagogue alms-box. And so it was with surprise and scorn that the proud Pharisee saw Jesus not only call one of this degraded class to associate with Him, but even mingle socially with many of his friends in his own house. But Jesus saw deeper than they. His motive was far different. He divined the longing in Matthew's heart for the "high way," and Matthew was ready to follow Him at once.

How many may be waiting today for that invitation to follow Jesus? Who is looking to seek the "high way?" Perhaps a "Matthew" is waiting for the call through you?

"And it Came to Pass, as He Sat at Meat in the House."

The life of the Master was not all in the terms of sorrow and self-sacrifice. Here He is shown at a social feast given by Matthew, who wanted his friends to know Jesus. With Him and His disciples, publicans and sinners mingled. He is with His friends, and He is helping those who need help as well. The picture is a happy one. "The fruits of the Spirit are love, joy, peace," says Paul. Jesus places His divine approval upon a religion of good cheer and good-will, and He is ready to mingle with men, that He may uplift them.

Has the Social Life of Today an Opportunity for Christian Personal Work?

"I desire mercy, and not sacrifice; for I come not to call the righteous, but sinners."

Matthew was a great student of the Old Testament. Comparing this verse with Hosea 6:6, we find there: "For I desire goodness, and not sacrifice; and the knowledge of God more than burnt offerings." The outward form of the Pharisee is not the love which Jesus Christ came to teach. It is not the desire of the prophet of old. Jesus came to the needy, and all classes stand in need of Him. Jesus came to the sinful, that they might find the better way of life. Jesus Christ came to save men like Matthew and his friends, who were sincerely seeking Him. With no regard for outward surroundings, He was looking for men spiritually qualified for the task. The Pharisee is still about, insisting on ritual, praising his own merits, criticizing and condemning without suggestion for betterment. The unrighteous still stand in need of the message of Jesus. He is still reaching men in a marvelous way and changing their whole lives. Matthew's example has a timely message for today.

Matthew's greatest service was his written record of the life of Jesus. Only one great deed of his life is related, and that in the simple words, "He arose, and followed Him." His one idea was the Christ, His kingdom, His teachings, and he devotes no time to himself. It is such humble, unselfish lives that God can use best, and to serve thus is the privilege of the sincere Christian man and woman, for—

"Every man decideth
The way his soul shall go."

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC.

July 29, 1923.

Topic: "Industrial Missions at Home and Abroad."—2 Thess. 3:6-13.

Thoughts on the Topic.

Problems in industry have been increased by association with evil companions. Christian principles will solve these, while selfish, idle individuals will only make them more complicated. Vs. 6.

Examples of Christian leaders produce peace in industrial circles. This is the aim of industrial missions. Vs. 7.

Work is a necessary part of a man's life. Work brings bread, and work also develops the strength of the man. "Six days shalt thou labor" is a divine command, as well as "Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy." Vs. 8.

Pride in one's work is justifiable, that it may be done in the best manner possible, but not for idle boasting. It is well to imitate the good example of an industrious workman. Vs. 9.

Welfare workers have learned that the honest man is willing to work for his bread, and thus his independence is maintained. No true man wants to be a beggar. Vs. 10.

Idleness is wrong, not only because no work is accomplished, but because of the temptation to do evil, through word or deed, to stir up trouble. "The idle brain is the devil's workshop." Vs. 11.

Faithful labor brings its reward. "Be not weary in well-doing," is the Christian command. Vs. 13.

There is nothing demeaning in manual labor. The disgrace is in doing any piece of work poorly.

Industrial missions aim to make men able to live the best kind of a life by showing him the way to develop his powers, and to serve his country best.

Our missionary programs today include the sending out of agriculture experts to do missionary work. Read the account on this page of the young man who is to go out for the Christian Church this fall.

Much industrial work in cities is being done through the Y. M. C. A. and Y. W. C. A. industrial secretaries. Through their efforts, conditions are being improved, recreational facilities being offered, and opportunities for further training being given.

"Work, gainful work, is the salvation of any nation. The United States have the work and the opportunity."—Secretary of Labor Davis.

"Thoughtful people are trembling for the future of our civilization. The problems of the hour gather around such matters as international relationships, national responsibilities, industrial adjustments, between capital and labor, municipal government, civic and social morality. At bottom, these are all moral and religious questions."—Bishop Anderson, of Chicago.

"Looked at in the larger sense, the Golden Rule must dominate every office and every factory and every farm if there is to be honesty and honor among them. Only through a nation-wide and a world-wide revival of the religion of the cross can the world be saved from chaos."—Manufacturers' Record.

Readings for the Meeting.

Our Industrial Missionary—Bruce W. Morton.
(From "They are Ready.")

The youngest of a family of six, whose father and mother were brought up in the Christian Church and whose great-grandfather, Squire Morton, was an itinerant Christian preacher in Ontario, Canada, Bruce received a fine Christian training both in his home and in his early years at the Keswick Christian Church. Following his father's death, he completed his high school work at New Market, and entered the Ontario Agricultural College. After two years, he enlisted with the Canadian forces for the World War. at the conclusion of hostilities, he returned to the college and graduated in 1921 with the degree B. S. A.—bachelor of the science of agriculture.

During the last two years of his college work he fought the call and refused to face the challenge of the agricultural mission field. He says: "I tried in all known worldly ways to forget it. I succeeded, and for two years I felt I was enjoying myself; but by means of the prayers of those who loved me, I was led to see the error of my ways and to accept Jesus Christ as my personal Saviour. When I came to take stock of myself I found I was His debtor for the rest of my life, and I got down on my knees and asked Him how I might repay Him. The answer came almost immediately, 'Be an agricultural missionary.' Since then it has been my duty to prepare myself for wherever He wants me to go, and I feel the only work worth while is to serve Him anywhere any time."

Mr. Morton's training fits him well for the work among the laboring class. He is under appointment by our board to sail for Porto Rico in the fall, where he will begin at once the study of the Spanish language and plan to develop a much-needed industrial evangelistic work among the poor people of our field. He will attempt to train these people to raise food for themselves in home gardens, and will also teach them how to earn their own living. He will find a great field among the boys and young men especially, and his going will be a powerful addition to our work.

PLANS FOR THE MEETING.

Let the missionary committee have charge of this meeting, and if possible secure a Y. M. C. A. or Y. W. C. A. worker to tell something of their industrial work. Or ask your pastor or a member of the Woman's Missionary Society to tell something of the industrial missionary work of the Christian Church, writing to Rev. Omer S. Thomas or Rev. W. P. Minton, Dayton, Ohio, or to Rev. J. O. Atkinson, Elon College, for information.

Have a member tell the story of Bruce Morton, as recorded above, and tell how five young people are ready to go out under our Foreign Mission Board this year, and that the young people of the Christian Church are challenged to send them. Plan for a gift from your Christian Endeavor Society to help, and thus truly make them your missionaries.

Interest in and love for missions is a test of the depth of a person's love for Christ. To help folks in their every-day life is one of the highest forms of missionary work. Have the following poem recited during the meeting:

The Measure of a Man.

How high are you? Where is your thinking done?
Close to the earth, or upward toward the sun?
Do petty things absorb your ev'ry thought—
The game, the latest crime, what's sold and bought?
Do noble deeds and lives inspire your zeal,
Or are you more concerned about a meal?
How high, or low, is your most cherished plan?
The answer marks your stature as a man.

How broad are you? Where does your good-will end?
Does race or creed determine who's your friend?
To your snap-judgments do you cling with pride,
Or do you listen to the other side?
Quick to condemn, are you—prompt with the rod,
Or do you leave the chastening to God?
How loyal is your heart to all mankind?
The answer marks the broadness of your mind.

How deep are you? Where does your honor start?
Is it embedded in your inmost heart?
Do you count virtue a convenient thing
To practice, or, sore, tried, aside to fling?
Have you the courage by your code to hide,
And fight for right, though on the losing side?
'Tis thus God reckons, through life's little span,
The veritable measure of a man!

—Wallace Dunbar Vincent.

Christian Orphanage

ORPHANAGE LETTER.

DEAR FRIENDS:

Our long-wished-for rain came Saturday night, July 7th, and we had a splendid season. It was beginning to look very discouraging on the Orphanage farm, and our vegetable garden was in a bad way. We feel that the Lord has been very kind to us and has visited us with a great blessing.

The writer attended the "Children's Day" exercises at New Lebanon Church, N. C. Conference, on Saturday, July 7th. It was a splendid program, and the children rendered the program well, showing splendid training and much care in the selection of readings. One feature of the program struck me very forcibly. Every member was given something to do, and they did it and were happy because they did their part. I know they have a live Sunday School there, and it is alive, because each child is given a part.

I sometimes think all children are alike, and I believe most of them are. I find in my work to keep the children interested I have to give them something to do. I have three little boys at the Orphanage who feed and look after the hogs. They are very much interested in their work, and do it well. On the Fourth of July I gave the children the day off; some of them went to town, some to the ball game, some fishing, and some to the moving-picture show. I asked one of the little boys who looked after the hogs if he did not want to go. He said to me: "I cannot go, Mr. Johnston, because my hogs might get out." Not many little boys twelve years of age, having an opportunity to go to town and get a squawker or see a picture show would even think of his work; but this little boy did, and so he did not go. He may be Governor of North Carolina some day.

Give the young people and children in your Sunday School and Church something to do.

The writer also had the pleasure of visiting Pleasant Ridge Church Sunday, July 8th, and had the opportunity to listen to Dr. Atkinson preach in the morning and afternoon. It is always a real treat to hear Dr. Atkinson. He always has a message that is full of vital truth and germs of thought, refreshing to thirsty souls. It was a great pleasure to meet the good people at Pleasant Ridge, and we hope to be able to visit them again.

WYRICK.

Rachel M. Wyrick, daughter of the late Jacob and Lucretis Smith, was born May 18, 1847, and died June 8, 1923, age 76 years and 20 days.

On September 4, 1867, she was married to James M. Wyrick. To this union was born four children—three boys and one girl. Her husband died May 10, 1920. She is survived by three sons—James A., of Brown Summit, N. C., and Wm. J., James R., of Greensboro, N. C., and Mrs. Monroe Johnson, McLeansville, N. C.—seventeen grandchildren, Rev. L. L. Wyrick being one of the number, and five great-grandchildren and two brothers.

Sister Wyrick united with Freeden's Lutheran Church early in life, but later moved her membership to Apples Chapel, where she remained a faithful member till her death. She bore her sickness with Christian fortitude and assured all of a perfect rest.

Funeral services were conducted from Apple's Chapel June 9, 1923, by Rev. J. F. Apple, a former pastor, assisted by the writer, and the body was laid to rest beside her husband in the Church cemetery. May God bless the bereaved.

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT.

The board of deacons of Liberty Christian Church, Vance County, N. C., having assembled to pay a tribute of respect to the memory of the late Deacon B. F. Ayscue, of the said board of deacons, the following was offered and adopted:

Whereas, God in His lovingkindness has seen fit to take away our brother, Deacon B. F. Ayscue, senior deacon of Liberty Christian Church, we, the board of deacons, feel the loss of his counsel and advice, but we believe our loss is his gain; therefore, be it resolved:

First—That we bow in submission to the will of Him who doeth all things well, for we believe that not only one of our oldest, but one of our best, men has gone to his eternal reward.

Second—We extend to the family our heartfelt sympathy and prayers, that they may meet their loved one in the better life beyond this vale of sorrow.

Third—That we will ever cherish the memory of our deceased brother and seek to profit in our life-work by the good example he has set for us.

Fourth—That we will send a copy of these resolutions to his family, and one to our Church paper, The Christian Sun, for publication, and record the same in our minutes. (Signed)

THE SUN'S OBSERVATORY

Good Wheat Crops Reported.—

From parts of the territory in the South comes the report of good wheat crops, especially in Tennessee.

Farm Labor.—

The daily press brings the good news that farm labor in the South, especially in North Carolina, is holding its own, although in some sections the loss continues.

The U. S. Victory at Lusanne.—

The daily press reports that the United States has gained a signal diplomatic victory in the conference in session at Lausanne. The point gained was with reference to the policy of the open door and equal opportunity in the Near East.

Our State Prison a Pauper.—

And who would have thought it? The North Carolina Legislature, after going in debt one hundred million dollars during its last session, adjourned and made no appropriation for the maintenance of our State prison, and now the prisoners must break out and steal enough to live on or the Legislature will have to be reconvened and an appropriation made, or serious matters will face the prisoners of North Carolina. If the prisoners should have to be given their liberty because of this failure, would it not be the right thing to have the Legislature (its various members) take the place of the prisoners while the prisoners are out looking for something to eat? When we elect a Legislature again, let us choose men who will not go to sleep on the job and forget the most urgent matters.

France Refuses to Surrrender.—

France still refuses to give up her claims on Germany. She holds on with a death grip to the Ruhr and other advantages. We cannot see how she can be blamed for her course. When Germany conquered France in 1870, she laid heavy indemnity on France and required her to pay it, not in driblets and not on a credit, but it must be paid at once. Now France has the best of Germany and four years have gone away since the war closed, and yet Germany has done practically nothing in the way of reimbursing France. It seems that England has forgotten that France and Belgium stood between her and danger of the most dreadful kind in the beginning of the war, for if France and Belgium had not held Germany back, England would hardly have been able to defend herself against Germany's formidable attacks. Now that England is safe, we think it tells a bad tale on her to leave France with practically no assistance to make sure of the claim she has against Germany. France is plucky and she is holding her own well. We wish her success in all that is right.

A Cheering Story.—

An exchange says: Testimony in regard to the enforcement of the prohibition laws of the country is increasing, and is coming sometimes from unexpected sources. A recent writer in Collier's National Weekly has a long article on this subject. He introduces himself by saying: "I am a wet. I have always been and always shall be. All of my best friends are wet. I am not a steady, day-in and day-out drinker, but I get away with my share of the stuff even in these Volsteadian days. I rarely go anywhere that I do not find liquor easily accessible. I have always been thrown into or sought the company of drinking men. They are the kind of men I like—my kind." He says that in the last few months he has visited thirty-six of the forty-eight States of the Union. He says that in any city he could buy liquor, but that it is becoming more and more difficult to do so. He found nowhere any sentiment in favor of the return of the saloon, and everywhere, except in the East, a strong and growing sentiment in favor of the prohibition laws. He closes his article with this statement: "The great Midwest is joining hands with the Far West and the South in the movement to make America bone dry. The eighteenth amendment is an accepted fact almost everywhere west of the Alleghany Mountains. Iowa, Nebraska, Kansas, the Dakotas, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Oklahoma, Arkansas, Tennessee, and other States that I visited in the last few months are dry—the sentiment is dry and there is a growing respect for the Volstead act. None of these States is bone dry as yet, but they are on the way. I was loath to admit it even to myself, but there is an abundance of evidence that a great 'dry wave' is rolling eastward, slowly but surely grinding down opposition to prohibition. And, riding the crest of this wave are the clean, substantial citizens of the nations—the John Smiths and the Tom Browns—and, always, their wives and sisters and mothers are riding at their sides. Some day we wets are going to awaken to find that an overwhelming majority of the people of the United States are weary of bootleggers and dry-law violators. Some day, and that day is not far distant, these people are going to rid the country of the bootlegger and rum-runner just as the Vigilantes of the fifties rid the California mining camps of undesirable gamblers, gunmen and prostitutes."

A Most Unusual Proposition.—

From the Presbyterian of the South we clip the following, which we believe strikes the situation just about right. The plan Jesus made for the preaching of the Gospel can hardly be improved, even in this twentieth century of light. The Presbyterian says:

Multiplied production is one of the characteristics of today, and in some things this is a very valuable process. One of the chief reasons why we can have so many of the comforts and conveniences of life is because of the quantity production made possible by machinery. This is made possible because of the fact that there is no need for great variety of form in most things that we use. In the olden days the blacksmith made nails for the carpenter by the slow process of hand work. Today they are produced by machinery in vast numbers and with a rapidity that was entirely impossible for the blacksmith. The machine-made product is cheaper, and it is just as suitable for the use of one carpenter as for another. But there are some things that lose their value when they are machine-made or produced in large quantities. In the current number of a popular magazine, which has more to do with material than with spiritual things, the editor makes a suggestion which he thinks will largely solve the problem of the vacant Church. His suggestion is that a certain number of the ablest preachers in a denomination, or of several cooperating denominations, shall be selected. These preachers shall each prepare one or more of his best sermons. These shall be put into the hands of a board that shall have multiplied copies made of them. A copy of each of these sermons shall be sent to each Church that has no pastor, to be read by the best reader who can be secured by the Church. Or if the pastor is not a man of great ability in preparing sermons, they shall be furnished him, that he may read them to the people. This, says the editor, will insure even the weakest country Church having a sermon each Sunday by one of the ablest preachers of the denomination or of the country. And he thinks that this can be done at less cost to the Church than by undertaking to have and support a pastor of its own. But the editor has overlooked the great fundamental fact that preaching and reading are by no means synonymous. The preacher must know his people, and he must go to them from his knees with the message which he believes God wants them to have at that particular time. It is a well-known fact that the life of the preacher, as known to the people, back of the sermon gives it its life and power. This cannot result usually in the case of an unknown and absent man. When Jesus sent His disciples to preach, He expected them to speak from their own hearts to the hearts of their hearers. We do not believe there can be any improvement made on the plan which He gave.

NOTES-PERSONALS

Dr. J. O. Atkinson spent last Sunday at Mt. Olivet, in Green County, Va.

What are you doing to increase the circulation of your Church paper in your congregation? Try, for it is said that trying was never beaten.

"I trust that devoting your whole time to THE CHRISTIAN SUN may prove a blessing to the cause."—Rev R. A. Whitten, Columbus, Ga.

Rev. J. W. Holt continues feeble, but maintains an active interest in all the work of the Christian Church and for the general cause of Christ at large.

Is your protracted meeting a real revival, or is it a mere formal effort, just to say that you had held your meeting? The one must be accompanied with much real prayer. The other can get along without prayer.

Rev. G. C. Crutchfield retires from the Palm Street Christian Church, Greensboro, N. C., at the conclusion of the present Conference year. He is open to engagement as pastor for another year. Address him at Elon College, N. C.

We regret that ill health made it necessary for Mr. N. G. Newman, Jr., son of Dr. N. G. Newman, of Elon College, to go to hospital last Monday for treatment. We wish for him speedy relief and complete restoration to good health.

Did you read the article in THE SUN of July 19th on "The Trouble with Little Bill?" If you did not, it will pay you, we think, to go back and read it; it begins of page three, last column. The thing which troubled little Bill is, we fear, troubling a great many Church members. Read it and see if it is true of yourself.

Our work at South Norfolk, Va., goes forward with encouraging prospects. We have plans for the new Church drawn, paid for, and we expect to break ground for the erection of the new edifice October 1st.—Rev. O. D. Poythress, South Norfolk, Va. We are glad to hear that such an outlook is before our South Norfolk brethren. We wish them great success.

Rev. Alfred F. Smith, D. D., of St. Louis, Mo., has been elected editor of the Christian Advocate, Nashville, Tenn., as successor of the late Rev. Thos. N. Ivey, D. D. Dr. Ivey made a splendid editor, and we look for the same or similar success in the new editor-in-chief. The "Nashville" is a favorite in this office. We welcome Dr. Smith to the tripod.

The Richmond Christian Advocate tells us that one of the famous kings of Africa bears the name of Chimfwamalembachivulemoulachidimulga. Well, any one who can wear such a name as that might as well be famous, if for no other reason than because of his name. If we had to sign that name we should certainly try to have a rubber stamp.

Do you read the reports of Dr. J. O. Atkinson, as to what the Sunday Schools are giving for missions? If not, these reports will surprise you. We remember when the whole Eastern Virginia Conference gave for missions for one year what Dr. Atkinson reported recently from the Sunday Schools for one month. We call that progress of the right sort.

The managing editor enjoyed his stay at the Catawba Springs Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention and the meeting of former acquaintances. He was assigned to the home of Mr. B. F. Branch, whose hospitality was cordial. He had the pleasure of accompanying Prof. and Mrs. L. L. Vaughan in their car from the Convention to Raleigh for the train home.

What are you doing in your Church for the Men and Millions Movement? The success of this work is very necessary to the financing of much of the work of the Christian Church. If your Church fails to do its part, by that much you help to hinder the growth of our work, and we hope that none of our people would be willing to hinder the growth and larger usefulness of our work.

What are you and your Church doing to help Superintendent Johnston to provide for the 100 orphans now under his care in the Christian Orphanage at Elon College? You may be sure that his work needs help very much, for taking care of a dozen children is regarded as a task, indeed, but when you undertake to care for 100 children you have a task that will call for your best efforts. Let us help him.

No matter how many men and women try to destroy the blessed influence of Jesus of Nazareth, by and by they will have to own that He only is able to save from the death of sin. Jean Paul Richter says: "Jesus Christ, being the holiest of the mighty and the mightiest of the holy, lifted with His pierced hands the doors of empires off their hinges, turned the stream of the ages into other channels, and still rules the ages."—Ex.

On our arrival at Elon College last week to make it our home for some time, we found President Harper away, attending the North Carolina Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention, but the work was going forward on the new college buildings. The administration building is now near the top of the third story. They are working to have this building ready for the opening this fall. The other buildings, at least of two others, are going forward.

We are indeed pained to hear of the death of Bro. J. D. Gray, Waverly, Va. He had been ailing for several weeks, and passed away on Saturday morning, July 14, 1923. He was a fine man and had many friends wherever he was known. He was a trustee of Elon College and was highly esteemed as such. Dr. Harper left to attend his funeral, which was held on Sunday afternoon, July 15th, at 4 o'clock. To the family and his many friends, THE SUN tenders sincere sympathy in this hour of sorrow.

Rev. H. M. Hainer seems to have some of the fire which so characterized his forefathers. He is doing a great work in New Bedford. During his short pastorate there he has received nearly 200 members, while the Church attendance has increased about 50 per cent. No wonder the Church has added to his salary the sum of nearly one thousand dollars. The man who can "deliver the goods" ought to have a good support; but if he cannot "deliver the goods"—well, we are not discussing that side of the question, however true it may be.

Rev. William S. Long, D. D., who last winter suffered a severe illness, is looking much like himself again. He is within three pounds of his normal weight, and is looking very well. He was in Elon last week and gave the editor of THE CHRISTIAN SUN a pleasant call. He had been on a visit to relatives in Statesville, N. C. He is now revising his book on "Systematic Theology" which we hope may soon be published. It is a work our young ministers need, and it will do us older men good to know its contents. The revision is with a view to bringing it up to the present time.

We understand that Rev. W. C. Hook, who had to leave the Rosemont and Berea Churches, near Norfolk, about a year ago on account of ill health, has regained his health, and is now well again. For the last year or thereabout he has been pastor of a group of Churches near Harrisonburg, Va., and the high climate there has been very fine, and has contributed much toward the bringing of health back to him. Bro. Hook does not expect to remain at Harrisonburg another year, we understand, and therefore will be open for a new field about the first of September. Any Church or Churches in need of a pastor will do well to write Mr. Hook and secure, if possible, his services. He is a splendid man and a fine preacher, and any one securing his services will be fortunate.

Hon. Thos. R. Marshall, twice Vice-President of the United States, though a man we do not approve in all respects, chiefly because he is an enemy to prohibition, yet he says many good things. No doubt he had a good mother who taught him the way of the conservative, for he does not accept the many new-fangled religious notions of this day. He is true to the Book, so far as present-day heresies are concerned. He is quoted as having recently said: "I have not been called to the ministry—I wish I had been. I have searched the motives of men, and, however wise and good and beneficent the purposes of mankind may be, they fall short if not inspired by the Nazarene and His only perfect life." This from a man of affairs is really worth noticing. Our race owes more than it realizes to the Man of Nazareth.

Mr. and Mrs. John E. Watkins, Elkton, Va., announce the marriage of their daughter, Miss Shannie Amanda, to Rev. Howard Early Truitt, in Washington, D. C., on June 26, 1923. Here is THE SUN'S heartiest congratulations to the happy couple, both of whom we know well. Bro. Truitt has been for some years a pastor in Ohio, although he is a native of North Carolina and a brother of Rev. J. G. Truitt, now of News Ferry, Va. Miss Shannie has been living in Washington for several years. We wish for them long life and large usefulness in the Lord's service. We wish Bro. and Sister Truitt may make their home in the South, as they are very much needed in our work here. Miss Shannie is an accomplished young woman and will add to the usefulness of her husband, as we believe, wherever their lots may be cast. Bro. Truitt is now a student of Princeton Seminary.

Here is another item from the Christian Herald which is worth remembering: "If the Bible is the truth of God, science cannot harm it. There can be no contradiction between scientific truth and religious truth. All truth comes out of the same source. The first chapter of Genesis is as scientific in its declaration of the divine creation of the world and of man as the first chapter of a treatise on geology which explains the composition of the earth. The Bible treats of the creation of matter, geology treats of the creation of matter after it had been created. One is personal, the other impersonal. But the facts in the case cannot contradict, because they are dealing with entirely different aspects of creation." And that is well said. Some scholars are not the wisest people we ever heard of, and they are not likely ever to become such. You know why? Well, because they are so tied down to error that they cannot get enough freedom to learn!

How much do you believe what you believe. The intensity of belief has very much to do with the strength of your belief. Some one, so Lord McCauly said, declared that Cromwell's Ironsides were invincible, not so much because of their military might, but because of what they believed, and we might add the intensity of their belief. It may be that there is a lesson here for some of the rest of us. May it not be that we are so easily beaten in our great life-battle with, and against sin, because of the fact that we have not such an aggressive faith. We believe in a way, but there is not much strength in our belief, and then there is no great gains or successes in our work, only perhaps because we believed in such a weak way. Do you need your faith strengthened? Well, let us go to God daily and ask him to strengthen our faith—you know, or ought to know that faith is not man-made, but God-given. Let us get our faith from above, and then we shall find that the needed strength will be right there as you have need for it.

I am inclosing check for $4.50. Credit my own account with $2.50 and then give Mr. A. J. Martin credit for $2.00, South Norfolk, Va. Mr. M. A. Hogan also wishes the paper sent to him—will send check later. Send me sample copies of THE SUN and I will try to secure at least a dozen new subscribers. My father and mother were subscribers to THE CHRISTIAN SUN for more than twenty years. The first thing I remember was my father reading THE SUN. He loved it, and so did my mother. I shall never forget hearing her read the little letters from the children in the "Children's Corner" of the paper. I enjoy THE SUN. I believe it improves with each issue.—O. D. Poythress, South Norfolk, Va. That is the kind of work that counts in the building up of a Church paper, and we wish many of our pastors would do the same kind of work for THE CHRISTIAN SUN—it will pay the Church and it will pay the cause of Christ, and, of course, when the pay comes to the Church and to the cause of Christ, the pastor will certainly get his share. We wish that many others may do as Bro. Poythress is doing.

Rev. M. W. Hook, president of Bethlehem College, at Wadley, Ala., writes hopefully of the opening of that institution on September 12, 1923. The building is expected to be ready by that time, and henceforth September 12th will be a day to be remembered among our people, as the day when they saw their wishes of long-time standing realized in the opening of a college for the work of the Christian Church in Georgia and Alabama. There are four things our people should do for this institution, viz: (1) Help it financially; (2) send your boys and girls there to school; (3) seek to have your neighbors and friends send their boys and girls there; (4) talk for the school on all suitable occasions. Let everything that can be done to give it strength and usefulness and stability of character be done. Brother Hook is a well-qualified man, and no doubt he has good helpers for the teaching force. Now, the one thing is so needful is a liberal patronage, and we have enough people in the farther South to take good care of this enterprise, if they will bear in mind that the solemn duty to support the institution is resting upon them. The true success of Bethlehem College will add largely to the success of the Christian Church in Georgia. The opposite is true, too: if it should fail, then it will mean the holding back of the work of the Church. The institution has a fine motto, viz: "Christian character first and always at Bethlehem." That is good enough for any school.

The Reidsville (N. C.) Christian Sunday School enjoyed their picnic last Wednesday, July 11th, with the Christian Orphanage at Elon College. Superintendent Johnston and the orphans who were present gave themselves to adding to the comfort of the visitors. The day was pleasantly spent and the little folks, and the older ones, too, seemed delighted with their visit. Bro. J. S. Mitchell, superintendent of the Sunday School, was in attendance and gave himself to the pleasure of the school. The school rally has grown very much during the present year. It now numbers over three hundred, having more than doubled since last November. Rev. J. A. Ledbetter, the pastor of the Reidsville Church, was present and took a lively interest in the occasion. When they found that their former pastor had just moved to Elon College, they sent an auto after him with orders that he and Mrs. B. should come and have dinner with them. The order was obeyed, and we greatly enjoyed being with this dear people again. God bless these Reidsville people and give them a deep and sure Christian experience, and may it fruit in much good for th Master's cause.

In a recent letter from Rev. R. H. Pitt, D. D., Richmond, Va., we received from him a gracious invitation to come to see him. We were collegemates away back in the "seventies." In referring to the students who were with us in Richmond College in those days, he said: "Our ranks are thinning now," and that is true. No doubt, more than half of the dear boys of the "seventies" have gone on before, and we who remain shall, in a few years to say the least, follow them. If we could have a reunion of the boys who were there in 1875-77, we should find many missing; but what a rejoicing would come to those who should answer, "Here!" God bless these dear old boys of the long ago. How we should like to see them once more! We studied in Richmond College because in those days we had no college of our denomination, and this reminds us of the progress our people have made since that day. Now we could go in many directions and find a college owned and operated by our own people. A brighter day, we trust, is dawning, and, as we believe, a future filled with good fruits for the Lord's vineyard is not far away.

Rev. J. S. Carden is active in doing the work of both a pastor and an evangelist. He is a good worker and a sincere man. He is the father of Mrs. J. E. Harward, of Henderson, N. C., who is one of the best Church workers and Sunday School laborers in our work in Central North Carolina. She was for years a leading helper in the Durham, N. C., Christian Church, of which Rev. Stanley C. Harrell is pastor. When she moved to Henderson she and her husband immediately connected themselves with the Henderson Church and went to work as if at home. Her husband, Bro. J. E. Harward, is superintendent of the Henderson Christian Sunday School. He is also a descendant of the O'Kellys, on his mother's side. He has good blood in his veins and is very loyal to the Christian Church and its enterprises. Bro. Fred M. Harward is a deacon in the Henderson Church and a most useful man. The fact that we have not yet met a member of the O'Kelly family that is not a worthy and an active character in the Christian Church is a feather in the cap of the brave James O'Kelly, the founder of the organization known as the Christian Church.

Our beloved brother and sister, Rev. and Mrs. O. D. Poythress, South Norfolk, Va., have been called of late to pass through the deep waters of real sorrow in the death of his oldest son, who a few weeks ago was called away. Taken ill last January, the doctors decided that it was a case of tumor on the brain. The patient was then taken to Johns Hopkins Hospital, Baltimore, and everything which medical experience and surgical skill could do was done, but the dear little life could not be saved, and he went home to be with Jesus and the angels. The father and mother are crushed by the death of their first born, but they are comforted by the Gospel, and look forward to the day when they shall see him again. In a private note, Bro. Poythress gives expression to his feelings as follows: "I know the dear child is better off, and I know he was taken from us in wisdom, for God does all things well. The little fellow was so bright, beautiful, healthful and full of promise! To be taken suddenly ill and then taken from us, brings to us the hardest blow of my life. I have given up father and mother and a brother, but the loss of my dear four-year-old son is the greatest loss of my life. Some things are too deep, too mysterious to understand in this life, but it is comforting to feel that some time we shall understand." A wide circle of friends and acquaintances will give to Bro. Poythress and his wife sincere sympathy in this great sorrow. We can truly sympathize with these dear friends, for eleven times have we stood beside the open grave as it received a loved one from our own little family circle. God's blessings be upon the sorrowing hearts and minds.

You may get an idea of what it means to be the president of a growing college, if you will follow Dr. Harper for one week as he goes here and yonder. His daily work as the generalissimo of three new college buildings is quite enough to consume the time of most men, but, in addition to that, he is on the go to look after a multiplicity of matters. To illustrate, we will give you just a short sketch of his time for less than a week. Last week he attended the North Carolina Christian Sunday School Convention at Catawba Springs, in Wake County, and addressed that body. He got back home Wednesday night, and for a few hours gave his time to matters which needed his attention. Then on Saturday night he traveled all night in order to attend the funeral services over the remains of his personal friend, the late J. D. Gray, at Waverly, Va., on Sunday afternoon at 4 o'clock. Monday morning, at a few minutes after 8 o'clock, he was back in Elon, ready to attend the funeral of another personal friend, Col. Robt. L. Holt. He attended that funeral as a pallbearer. Then he hurried to Greensboro by auto and caught the train for Suffolk, Va., and then went out to the Eastern Virginia Christian Sunday School Convention, which was in session at Mt. Carmel, where he addressed that body on Wednesday, and was back in Elon again on Thursday morning and again at his desk and at work. In all that, he did not seem to be in a hurry, but he was moving practically all the time and giving himself to the work in hand. You may think he is having an easy time, but if you should attempt to follow him, you would have a fine chance to break down. It takes a man of strength to follow him, to say nothing of the work he is doing day by day, and, seemingly, doing it well. Elon has many friends, but Dr. Harper is its old standby.

THE MODERN MIND.

The wise sometimes laugh at the ignorant, but now and then the ignorant get to laugh at the folly of the wise. For instance, when the wise begin to talk of the "modern mind," as if they had a mind that is altogether different from the mind of all other people, then the ignorant may laugh at the arrogance of such people. If you would listen you might think that a new order of intellect had been given by a special dispensation from above twentieth century, that the men and women of this special time might be different from all the other men that have lived since the days of Adam. That is what some of these wiseacres seem to desire you to believe; but you need not believe it just because they wish you to do so. What a pity that even this modernism cannot see itself as others see it.

In the last few years we have heard much of the "modern mind," but to many people the term is very uncertain as to what is meant. Who can intelligently tell us the difference between the modern and the ancient mind? Is the one essentially different from the other? If so, please tell us wherein. Does the person living in the early part of the twentieth century necessarily have a different order of mind from the man who lived a hundred years ago, five hundred years ago, or a thousand years ago, or two thousand years ago? Not necessarily. Both minds are the gift of God, and while one may seem stronger than the other, that is no more true now than it was a hundred years ago, or a thousand years ago. There were weak minds and there were strong minds two thousand years ago, just as truly as there are such minds now.

As we see it, the man who assumes to have a "modern mind" today which ranks above the strong minds of other days, just because he is living in modern times, is a man of unbounded egotism and deserves to be laughed at by the men and women of the ages that are gone as well as by the men and women of this day who, by inference at least, are thereby classed as not being able to think with the "modern mind." It is true that there are some questions discussed in this day that were not discussed by the ancients; but the other side of that question is also true—there were some questions discussed by the ancients of which our "modern minds" have never dreamed, and no doubt our "modern minds" would be as much at sea discussing these questions as would the men and women who are supposed to live and move within the circle of the ancient minds. In other words, if Sir Isaac Newton were living today, no doubt he could discuss well any question with our modernists. Just because Sir Isaac lived in the latter part of the seventeenth century and the first part of the eighteenth, that is no reason to conclude that he did not have a virile mind and one that was capable of surveying and handling the great fields of knowledge now before us.

No doubt some of the problems of today were not dreamed of two hundred years ago, not even one hundred years ago, but that is no reason that the great minds of that day were not fully the equal of many of the great minds of this day. It may be that some of the questions of today are larger, broader and deeper than were some of the questions of the long ago, but what of that? No doubt some of the questions of that day would even now puzzle some of the so-called "modern minds." Is not the law of the "modern mind" the same as that under which the ancient mind lived and acted? Doubtless it is, for we have never heard that a new dispensation has been issued by God Almighty, giving to the modern man a mind differently constituted, working under new laws. The truth is the claim of these modern minds along this line constitute the most colossal piece of human arrogance it has been our privilege to meet in the ways of men.

Some talk or write of the "modern mind" as if it were a new gift from God; but is it? We think not. The mind and the laws, the God-given laws, under which the human mind acts were given of God for the benefit of the human family through all the centuries of the world, as truly for the ancients as for the moderns, and we believe it is a piece of high folly that makes any claim for the modern mind as necessarily greater than the mind of the men of hundreds of years before. It is a well-established fact that many of the brightest men and women of the world have lived in the long ago, not surpassed even by the brilliance of the twentieth century. If this be not true, bring out your genius who can excel John Milton, the blind poet—bring him out and let him produce a poem greater than "Paradise Lose." Bring out your modernist who can rival Homer, or Plato, or Aristotle, or Zenophon. Who would tolerate the idea for one moment that God has created and given to the people of this day a mind superior to the people of past generations? Who believes that the mind of Kipling is superior to that of Shakespeare? Who believes that the mind of Lord Bacon was inferior to the men of his class of this day?

The whole truth is, as we suspect, that the modern mind is a modern invention brought into existence to satisfy the vanity of men who, because they have lost the leadership of the spirit of God, wish in some way to establish their own greatness, that they may thereby deify themselves. Do you question the fact just stated? Then what does all this effort to destroy the Bible mean? Is that not a proof that these modernists are seeking to glorify themselves by dethroning God and taking His place themselves? What else can it mean? It is, almost without exception, a fact that the "modern mind" is seeking to put the Bible out of the way, that man may be his own authority in both morals and religion. What folly! What nonsense!

Since the above was first written, we have found an editorial in the Presbyterian Standard; an editorial which shows that we are not seeing visions which do not exist. Others are seeing along similar lines. We republish it that our readers may know that we are not dreaming over fancies that have no basis on fact. The Standard says:

This has come to be a pet expression in much of the religious literature of the day. Nobody stops to tell us just what it is, or who are the happy or unhappy possessors of it, as the case may be. The natural assumption would be that the modern mind belongs to all the present generation, that the more recently one were born, the more modern his mind would be, and that the most modern mind of all would belong to the latest arrival. But evidently this is not the meaning of those who claim to represent the modern mind. They are a class to themselves. They are the highbrows of literature, the dogmatists of science, the liberals of religion. They are those who, on the ground of superior knowledge and a broader vision, have broken with the past. One of themselves explains it by saying: "As there was a primitive view of history and of nature, so there is a modern view which Christianity must incorporate on pain of extinction." He further explains that "the main characteristic of this modern mode of thinking rests on the determined assertion of universal laws to which all phenomena, natural and spiritual, are subject." Of course, this rules out the supernatural. The modern mind will tolerate no outside interference with nature's universal laws. There is no place for miracles, for the virgin birth, the bodily resurrection of Christ, no vicarious atonement, and very emphatically the "good old doctrine of total depravity" must go. Christianity must slough off all these figments of primitive history on "pain of extinction." We are not told just how long Christianity will survive in case it refuses to do this sloughing. We recall two very distinguished men who possessed the modern mind, Herne and Rousseau. No one could have asserted more stoutly than did these two famous men the universality and inviolability of natural laws. No developments of knowledge in any sphere have added anything to the force and acuteness of their arguments against miracles. In the face of their arguments, Christianity persistently held on to its miracles, even down to Jonah and the whale. We are told that a cotemporary of these men, Voltaire by name, predicted that Christianity would not survive more than a hundred years. More than a hundred and fifty years have elapsed and there are no symptoms yet of the extinction of Christianity. Its pulsebeat has been growing stronger all the while, and today it is flourishing in greater strength and waging a more triumphant warfare than at any period in its past history. Men of the modern mind should be hesitant about predicting the extinction of Christianity.

When we come to think about it, the Greeks of Paul's day possessed the modern mind. They "sought after knowledge," and to them "the preaching of the cross was foolishness." Paul did not argue the matter with them. Much less did he try to adapt the Gospel to their minds. But he met their scoffs with this very significant statement: "The foolishness of God is wiser than men, and the weakness of God is stronger than men. For ye see your calling, brethren, how that not many wise men after the flesh, not many mighty, not many noble are called." Paul served notice on those "wise men after the flesh" that God would get along very well without them; that, as a matter of fact, He did not need them, as there was plenty of other material that would serve His purpose better. Paul was right. God has abundantly demonstrated that He can take the foolish things and the weak things of the world and confound the mighty. The modern mind is exceedingly mistaken in supposing that Christianity must conform to its requirements on pain of extinction. Paul went further and said to those wise Greeks: "The wisdom of this world is foolishness with God." We can well imagine that our men of the modern mind, who claim to have found out by the study of nature that there is no place for any divine activity to manifest itself, must cut a most ridiculous figure in the sight of high heaven. Could there be a more signal display of folly than is seen when the puny creatures whom God has made propose to shut Him out of His own world? "He that sitteth in the heavens shall laugh; the Lord shall have them in derision."

For ourselves, we feel very little concern about the future of Christianity in so far as that future is to be affected by the vaporings of the modern mind. We do feel a benevolent concern about the men who indulge in these vaporings. Only last evening we heard two darkies talking. One said to the other: "The Lord can't do anything with the high-minded; we must be humble." This ignorant darkey was in possession of a higher wisdom than the highest wisdom of this world. "Except ye be converted and become as little children, ye shall not enter into the kingdom of heaven."

A NEW SCHOLARSHIP NEEDED—HOW SHALL WE MEET THE NEED.

A professor in one of our Western States comes out boldly for a new scholarship—a scholarship that shall be strictly Christian; not that it shall teach only Christian truth, but rather that it shall teach nohing which is contrary to the Christian faith as taught in the Bible. The Church is undoubtedly in need of just such schools. We did think that possibly the need, as this professor sees it, might be overdrawn, but almost immediately we saw in the Western Recorder a statement from President Faunce, of Brown University, a Baptist institution in New England, to the effect that every boy and girl attending a high school north of Mason and Dixon line is now being taught some form of the doctrine of evolution. The only thing wrong in that statement, we fear, is that the Mason and Dixon line does not furnish a limit for such teaching to the boys and girls of this country. We only wish that Mason and Dixon line were the limit of such teaching, but we fear that it has already run far over that noted line. Now that President Faunce declares that such teaching is in force all over the North, we can but fear that it is following the march of Grant's army—it is coming South and spreading itself all over our fair Christian land, and that to the darkening of the light of truth.

But what is the need for a new scholarship? If we do not have a new scholarship to counteract the influence of these teachers of a false philosophy, it will not be many years till we shall find ourselves in the mire of evolution, and helpless—at its mercy. Only a short while ago some of our State Legislatures were trying to pass a law forbidding the teaching of evolution in our schools. In Kentucky it lacked only one vote, if we mistake not, of passing. Then Minnesota undertook a similar campaign to rid itself of this same cult which we call evolution. We are not informed of its fate in that State, and then a little later Florida actually passed such a law as to forbid the teaching of evolution in its schools. We know it is being said that this is a free country, and any one can teach anything he may please—and so he may, provided he does not teach it while living on a salary which Christians are taxed to pay. Law forbids the teaching of religion in our public schools on the ground that we may not teach a religion which a part of our citizens do not believe, and at the same time tax the Christians of this land to pay a man to destroy in their children the faith of their fathers? If we may not teach religion by taxation, on what principle may we undertake to destroy religion at the expense of the taxpayer? If the principle is true in the one case, it must be in the other also.

It, therefore, seems clear that we cannot hope to have the help of the State in combatting this false teaching of evolution. Then will the State undertake to make the Christians of its Commonwealth pay for teaching the opposing error, thus making the average Christian help, through taxation, to pull down the bulwarks of the Christian faith? We protest, and, in the name of the Christian people of our country, we plead that no teacher who is earning his salary by teaching, shall be permitted to teach the doctrine of evolution and kindred cults. If he may wish to go out and teach evolution at his own expense, then he can do that to his heart's satisfaction; but we say do not let the man teach evolution when supported by Christian taxpayers.

Now we can see, as we think, the need ffor a new scholarship. We need our people to be taught truth only, with no mixture of a false philosophy. We think the time has come when we need to have religion and philosophy sseparated, just as truly as we have Church and State sseparated. Indeed, the whole trouble with this modern apostacy ffrom the Christian faith is the outcome of an effort to mix philosophhy and religion. Men are not misled by the Bible, or the religion which it teaches, but they are misled by an effort to mix philosophy and religion. Whenever that is done, then the next step is sure to come, and that is, men drop religion and follow the teachings of philosophy. That is the trouble with scholars just now. They have abandoned religion in a large measure and have substituted philosophy for it, and, of course, they do not accept the teachings of the thing they have dropped. Hence, they are seeking to supplant Christianity by teaching, in its place, the philosophy of evolution, and the result is a greatly weakened faith on the part of our young people who are being taught in the public schools and elsewhere this pernicuous doctrine of evolution. It is time for the Christian people of this country to take their stand with the Bible or with evolution; both cannot be true, and it becomes us, as men and women of character, to take our stand as between the two. If you wish to stand with evolution, that is your business, but do not teach it while getting your bread and butter from men and women who are Christians. If you must teach evolution, then do it; but let the evolutionists support you, pay you your salary, and give whatever of moral backing they can, but do not ask the Christian people of this country to support you while you pull down the bulwarks of the Christian faith.

Looking at the question from this standpoint, it seems there is but one conclusion, and that is inevitable: If we are to maintain the Christian faith, we must have our young people taught in harmony with that faith. It is do this or give the strongholds (the hearts and minds of our young people) into the keeping of those who do not sympathize with the teachings of our Bible, and if we do that, then it is only a question of a short time before the evolutionists will have swallowed our young people, and they are the hope of the future. We must put our young people under such influences as are in keeping with the life we wish them to live. A school that teaches contrary to the Bible is not a safe place for the training of our young people. This shows us the necessity of having schools which are true to Christianity and the work of God's people. We now have one such school in the United States (there may be more) and that is a school established for the training of young ministers, and that is the Theological Seminary at Princeton, N. J. No evolutionist is allowed to teach there, and that is what we need. The schools where our young people are trained need to be true to Christianity and to the Bible, which teaches Christianity. Without the help of the schools, looking at the matter from the human side of the question, we cannot cope with the unbelief of this day, and we cannot because we have allowed them to train our young people in the way of evolution and kindred cults, and the result is we are helpless. This question is not looked upon now as of so great importance, but the day is coming when this will be the burning question of the day. We must have a scholarship that is in harmony with Christianity, and this we cannot have without schools that are in sympathy with Christian truth.

IT IS TOO BAD—TOO BAD!

We have heard it charged against the clergy of the Church of England that they are against prohibition—at least many of them, and for the reason that they draw at least a good part of their support from stock in distilleries and other kinds of drinking establishments. We do not know that the charge is true, but it has been published a good many times, and so far we have not seen the statement denied. We, therefore, take it for granted, in the absence of its repudiation, that the charge is true. We have felt a degree of humiliation at the thought that any such consideration should be used as a pretext for not voting the saloons out of any nation. But now even this claim is laid in the shade by one that is much worse—if that be possible.

The Rev. W. Fiddian Moulton, an Englishman, in a letter to the Western Christian Advocate, reveals an awful state of morals, not in the clergy this time, for which we are thankful, but it is against the morals of the nation. Mr. Fiddian makes himself to be understood when he says:

"From a good many sides the government has been pressed to raise revenue by taxing betting transactions, and some have tried to make out that £20,000,000 a year could be made in that way. In opposition, it it urged that if bets be taxed, betting is thereby recognized as a legalized operation, and thereby that accursed habit will become more strongly entrenched than ever. It may be urged that the State draws huge revenues from taxes on liquor, and that if that is permissible there can be no valid case against taxing bets. On the other hand, it is urged that the recognition of betting by levying taxes upon it would strengthen the status of the bookmaker by making his transactions legal operations, protected by law. As a matter of fact, it is no bad thing if we are driven by this discussion to recognize how utterly hypocritical our treatment of this subject really is. The gamblers want the tax."

And shall it go out to the world that a Christian nation—so-called, at least—is seeking to have a tax paid on betting, expecting to reap, as an income from said tax, possibly twenty million pounds sterling annually. Alas! and what shall come next? That involves almost the whole nation in the guilt of betting, or gambling. If the betting tax should amount to twenty million pounds sterling, that would show a disgraceful degree of betting, and the tax from it would indicate that the British government is willing to take that sort of money as a source of wealth. We do not doubt but that the British government needs money and that it can find a place to spend this vast sum, but are the great people of England ready and willing to reap an income from taxation of the gamblers? Surely, we hope they are not. How can a Christian people ever be willing to have the legitimate expenses of its government met by taxing the gamblers? May God save that great people from such a curse!

Did you read the editorial in THE CHRISTIAN SUN of July 19th, on "The Children and the Preaching Service?" If you did not, for the sake of the children, go back and read it, and then act accordingly, for the Church is already losing so largely by the way we are training our children to attend the preaching service of the Church. We cannot afford to continue as we have been doing in the past. You remember what the wise man said: to train up a child in the way he should go, and then he will not depart from it when he is old. If you allow the children to form the habit of going home from the Sunday School, not remaining to the preaching service, then we are guilty of training our children the wrong way. You say, the service is too long for the children to remain to both. Very well, but it is much shorter than the day school hours, and you do not think that is too long. "Oh, consistency! thou art a jewel."

WHAT CONSTITUTES TRUE LITERATURE.

By Wm. Thornton Whitsett.

True literature must have within it the elements of the universal and the general, rather than the special and the particular. True literature must make its appeal to the universal heart and thought of mankind, regardless of any lines of boundary or limitation. States and nations may have their lines of boundary, and limitation, but a work of real, genuine literature knows no limitations. Its appeal is to the universal heart of mankind, regardless of race, creed, country or local habitation. Any poem, any essay, any work of enduring fiction, any form of literature of the highest type, must have a general appeal, rather than any local claim.

A writer, as a mere human being, must have his local habitation; but in his mental scope and range, he is cosmopolitan of necessity if his work is to take any place among the enduring things of the permanent expressions of his race. Hence, when we think of a work of real literary value that is to win its way to the select company of the immortals, we must at once dismiss all thought of "Southern," or "Northern," or "Eastern," or "Western," or "Oriental," or "Occidental"; in short, the local and the transient must be utterly lost in the larger thought of the general and the universal.

Any writer whose work is to live must enter the field of world-wide competition, and so interpret the heart and passion of humanity as to show himself a brother of all mankind and a citizen of all times and countries. Sections and localities may shower their tributes of praise and adulation upon their richly dowered sons of genius, but they must not expect in return a local limitation to literary expression.

Exaggerated State pride, and sectional enthusiasm, have nothing whatever to do with making literary reputations that will endure. They may for a moment throw into the limelight names and productions that must of necessity die all the sooner because of the pitiless publicity turned upon them. The edict has gone forth from all time that only those names may find permanent place in the annals of literary renown that had the gift and the power to serve as interpreters of the heart universal. The great voices of truly great writers speak for their fellows in all ages and in all climes.

Sectional and local pride may be worthy and helpful if properly directed to be ever seeking to encourage and strengthen those sons and daughters who show evidence of the capacity to attune their voices to the music of universal and world-common aspirations and ideals.

Not alone the native mental endowment of strong intellectuality, but added to this also, such scholarship, such sincerity, such vision, such spiritual grasp and reach, such breadth of sympathies, as raises the writer to become the voice of all his fellows, is necessary to enable one to even aspire to dream of a lasting place in letters. The orator whose fame marches securely down the ages is the man who stands before his fellows and speaks not of himself, and for himself, but who hurls forth the burning sentences pulsating with the sufferings and wrongs, and dreams and desires of all his fellows who stand around him stricken dumb by their own inability to voice their yearnings and desires. He has become the mighty medium of expression for his time, and so passes to a security of remembrance in the affections of his day. Homer, and Vergil, and Milton, and Shakespeare, and Dante, and Goethe, spoke not for themselves, but spoke for those of their day and time, and for you, and for me, and so we entwine their names with the laurels of immortality.

A true poem, or essay, or novel, has nothing to do with State lines. Zones and hemispheres have no special claim upon it. It goes forth as a common possession of all those who have the capacity to receive it. It enters into the life of all kindred souls who can share its gift.

When we wish the history written of some certain event, we usually have to wait until time has passed, and some one can see it in its true perspective, and in all its right relationships. This is acknowledged by all who know anything about historical work. If this, then, be true about some one, certain historical happening, make the application to all phases of pure literature. All times, all seasons, all events, must be lost in the one sincere attempt to interpret the profoundest secrets of the human soul. In the realm of enduring literature the local and the sectional must be lost forever. The appeal is to the heart universal.

The highest and best forms of genuine literature are known and recognized alike in all the markets of mankind. In every port where anchor the ships of understanding and thoughtfulness these wares are appraised and estimated by world standards. The echoes of puff, and push, and pride, have no effect whatever upon such commodities. Those who seek these rare importations never ask as to shipping points, and care but little for source and origin. The article itself is its own argument. By its own inherent worth it makes its appeal.

All time spent in attempting to place emphasis upon sectional lines in literary matters is time lost that might be employed to great advantage in advancing the cause of true literary progress. The effort should be put into the search for true gold, and yet-undiscovered, sparkling gems, rather than into any discussions as to the territory and the boundary that may limit them. No one ever found a gold mine by giving his entire time to deciding just where he would locate its boundaries. To set up his well-marked boundaries would only serve to call attention to his vanity and futile effort in case there was no panning out of the rare metal itself.

Thomas Carlyle justly claims that, for any vision worth while, "we must look beyond the individual man and his actions or interests, and view him in combination with his fellows. * * * Man stands as in the center of nature; his fraction of time encircled by eternity, his handbreadth of space encircled by infinitude." The microscopic eye, then, of local limitations is not the eye for seeing the pictures that are to be collected for general exhibition.

How, then, shall a State advance the cause of literature within its own borders? Certainly not by regarding itself as separate and apart from the world at large, and claiming special merit for any local product. Rather, by coming into a due appreciation of the entire field of literary effort and giving its hearty commendation to such of its own people as prove their ability to enter the lists and maintain their standing in competition with the best from any source and from any section. Know this, that no writer's permanent fame can ever be enhanced simply because he happens to have been born, or happens to live, in any special section. Misguided zeal manifested in misguided efforts to help may prove rather the undoing of some otherwise promising aspirant for literary honors.

In whatever field of effort one with ambitions would work in the realm of letters, it is for him to take in with comprehensive sweep the work already done in that special field the entire world over; it is for him to so equip himself with the tools of scholastic attainment and wide research that he is rich in supplies that may be needed; it is for him, then, to raise his voice among the myriad of world voices on some particular theme, and by his special ability, his special gift, his own unusual and particular talent, attract such favorable attention as it may be possible for him to win. In this way alone may one hope for anything that is lasting in the domain of letters. He must climb upon the shoulders of all the past until he has lifted himself above the special and the particular into the free air of the general and the universal, and must attempt to give to others the revelation which has burst upon his sight. He moves, then, as a man among men, as a thinker among other thinkers; asking and claiming no special favors, but simple justice, and only honest recognition as may be merited by the products which he displays. He would scorn any laurels because of the fact that he may hail from any particular locality; he would only ask that he be heard as one who sincerely believes that his message is worth the hour he asks his listeners to give.

Well may any section of any land, or any State of any group, long for gifted pens to write in burning letters its stories and its songs; but in this longing must be kept ever in mind the fact that there are wise and proper and helpful ways of doing things, as well as very foolish and very unwise ways that may result only in feebleness and disaster. In all the years, examples are constantly multiplying of mistaken ways of seeking the laurels in fields of literary endeavor.

"LICENTIATES * * * 30."

Such is the last insertion in the "Christian Annual" (Southern Christian Convention) for the year 1923. To me it is a great item. I see in it immeasurable possibilities. How I wish I could have a good, long heart-to-heart talk with that group of young men! How I would like to see you get together at our Chautauqua at Elon College this summer and consider prayerfully and under the leadership of the Holy Spirit the tremendously great things that lie before you in the path of God. Men, my heart goes out to you. You are scattered all over several States; many of you are often discouraged and are on the verge of giving up; many of you have not known the powerful impetus of getting together with a group of others like yourselves; many of you do not know each other personally and love each other as friends bound together under the banner of the cross. Some of you may not be setting out with high enough and holy enough standards of preparation; some of you may not have paid the full price of personal surrender to Christ; some of you may at times doubt your Lord and doubt your mother's Bible—and all of you should be able to profit by the experiences of each other.

"Licentiates * * * 30," there will be men at that Chautauqua able to make your getting together worth while. What great things would come to pass if you came together from all over our country and in a closed room quietly waited in prayer before God! It would be one of the most phenomenal meetings in the history of our Church if, thus banded together, you would devoutly listen to God speak to you. It would not require the speeches of men. But the still small voice of God sounding into your penitent and united souls would give you such a vision of service as would revolutionize your whole life and would certainly mean things immeasurable for our Church and our Christ. Other denominations have become great by getting vision into the souls of the young men who are to bear their standards throughout all the earth. Why do we isolate our mountain-top experiences? Why do we persist in having our best spiritual energies scattered until no vital, powerful, onrushing momentum is gained for our own beloved Church? Our Church numbers in its leadership men of consecration, devotion, learning and vision, and if we were as strongly spiritually organized as we are ecclesiastically organized, our dreams would soon be coming true. Our great work-aday conventions, such as is meeting in Henderson, N. C., this week, are indispensable—they keep us going and give us courage. I repeat it, they are indispensable, but I covet for you an era of spiritual unitedness when you will learn how to come annually from all over our Church to spend days and nights together in earnest, penitent, intercessory prayer.

We should say, "Lord, teach us to pray." When the Lord answered that prayer, He gave to His disciples a united prayer. "Our," "us," "we," are words expressing its unity. They were about to face their lifework when they felt the need of prayer, and when the Lord taught them to pray together. And what marvelous instances of their combined prayers are preserved for us in the Word of God. For this noble purpose, in part, our Chautauqua was planned. Therefore, my dear friends, ambassadors to be, I implore you, for your own sakes and for the sake of our Christ and the cause you represent, to be at that Chautauqua this summer. And for whatever good and worthy cause others may come, will you not come for the one great, serious purpose of talking jointly to God and hearing God speak to you, both individually and collectively? You are serious-hearted, noble comrades or you would have never committed yourselves to such a cause. I know Dr. Walters and Miss Eldredge will see to it that you have ample opportunity and provision for prayer—and I know your united presence and prayers will have a savory influence upon our Chautauqua and School of Methods. United, you are a power, "Licentiates * * * 30," and united in communion with Christ you are a mighty power. JOHN G. TRUITT.

DR. FLEMING IS OPEN TO CALL.

Rev. P. H. Fleming, D. D., for some years has been serving a pastoral field in Alamance and nearby, and at the same time giving the most of his time to county welfare work for Alamance County. He had served the two very well, but the new superintendent of public instruction for North Carolina required Dr. Fleming to give up preaching altogether and devote all of his time to welfare work. This Dr. Fleming refused to do, declaring that he could not give up the Gospel ministry for anything anywhere. He will be released from county welfare work after August 1st, and will be glad to give his whole time to the great work of the Gospel ministry. We hope, therefore, that some of our vacant pulpits may soon be open to him and that his usefulness may be continued. He has long been a successful pastor and a strong preacher. He served both rural and city charges in several States. He has been pastor in North Carolina, in Virginia, in Ohio, and in New Hampshire. At Greenville, Ohio, he had a very successful pastorate, as well as in other places. A Southern man who can succeed in the State of Ohio as a pastor ought to succeed anywhere among a Christian people. The following clippings from local papers will show in what high esteem he is held:

A joint meeting of the board of county commissioners and the county school board was held at Graham this morning for the purpose of electing the county welfare officer for Alamance County.

Mr. Avery Isley, of Coble's Township, was elected to succeed Dr. P. H. Fleming. There were three names suggested before the board—Dr. P. H. Fleming, the present officer; Miss Lois Cates, a trained nurse, of Burlington, and Mr. Isley.

Dr. Fleming was ruled out on account of the fact that the State superintendent, Mrs. Kate Johnson, of Raleigh, phoned that Dr. Fleming would have to give up his work as pastor of the two Churches he was serving and give all his time to the work. This Dr. Fleming refused to do, declaring that he would not give up his Church work for any job in the world. When he found that this ruling held, he refused to apply for the job.

Miss Cates would not consider the position when she found that the salary was so low.

Mr. Isley was elected unanimously.

We know that this action will be a surprise to the people of the entire county. Dr. Fleming has made an active and efficient officer, and he has filled the position with honor, and would have been re-elected but for the application of this construction of the law.

Mr. Isley, the new welfare officer, is a young man who is well known in many sections of the county. He has spent several years in teaching, and will make an efficient officer, we are sure.

Our County Welfare Work.

We are sure that every one in Alamance County who knows anything about the work of our county welfare officer will agree with us when we say that, in Dr. P. H. Fleming, we had a most efficient and capable officer. He was well equipped for the office he held. He is one of those sympathetic natures, kind and considerate, and he not only did his work from a conscientious standpoint, but did it with a heart that beats in sympathy with those who needed his help. He has made a wonderful record during the years that he has held the position, and we are publishing in tomorrow's issue a synopsis of the things that have been accomplished, as well as letters, the laws and regulations as applied to the work. This will be a special section devoted to the welfare work in this county, and we are sure that our readers will be glad to preserve this section and keep it for reference, in order to become more familiar with the work that has been done.

We feel that the county has sustained a distinct loss in the failure to re-elect him.

THE WORK IN ALABAMA.

The first Sunday School institute for this district, which is composed of the following Churches: Antioch, Bethany, Forest Home, Lowell, Mt. Zion, Rock Stand, Rock Springs, and Noon Day—was held at Antioch July 8th. Because of the rainy weather and preaching at some of the places, only half the Churches were represented.

The session was full of interest throughout. All the speakers did well, but the main features of the day were a sermon at 11 o'clock to the young people, by Rev. G. D. Hunt; an address to the old people by Prof. L. L. James, an address to the superintendents and teachers by Prof. M. W. Hook, and an address on "Christian Endeavor" by Rev. J. H. Hughes. The three last-named spoke in the afternoon.

J. W. Payne was elected chairman, and Joe French, secretary.

We want to have another institute in September when none of the Churches will be hindered by preaching. JOE FRENCH.

HAPPY HOME.

The evangelistic meeting began here July 7, 1923, and closed July 13th. The attendance was very good, and interest was splendid. The Church was earnest for a good meeting.

Rev. J. A. Ledbetter, pastor at Reidsville Christian Church, preached Sunday evening and Monday three very strong sermons, laying a good foundation for a revival meeting. Bro. Ledbetter is a very wide-awake pastor. He made friends at Happy Home during his brief visit. Hope he can come again.

Rev. J. S. Carden, Durham, N. C., came Monday evening and remained until the meeting closed on Friday. Brother Carden did some plain Gospel preaching while with us. It had effect, too. We have worked with him before. He is a very agreeable co-laborer. He made many friends here during the meeting. His messages were simple, and the people seemed to appreciate them by hearing him with excellent attention and good behavior.

The Church was very much revived and encouraged on account of the result of the meeting. There were nineteen conversions and one reclamation. Nineteen united with the local Church, and others have expressed a desire to join later.

We are grateful for the work that was done. Let the Lord be praised for His blessings and Spirit. L. L. WYRICK.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

Loyalty is a little word with a big meaning. It means devoted allegiance. It takes words to explain words, and it takes men to explain men. Manhood cannot be explained by words, but by men. A Christian cannot be explained by words, but by Christians. "Ye are our epistle written in our hearts, known and read of all men: manifestly declared to be the epistle of Christ" (2 Cor. 3:2, 3). I am not able to tell exactly what loyalty is, but I can tell enough for the reader to find out by observation and experience. Spoken and written language are very weak when compared with real things and real character. That is one reason Jesus said: "Learn of Me." I am trying to get to an exposition of loyalty and what it includes, when applied to Christians.

The loyalty of a Christian includes three simple factors—maybe more. It is triangular, as all great and true things are. First, loyalty to God. That is essential in science and art, as well as in religion. All true science must follow the laws which God ordained to control nature. Discovery and invention simlpy find the handywork of God. Christianity is not afraid of true science, and true science does not deny God. It is weakness of language and the prejudice of the human mind that makes the wrangles between religion and science. God and His universe can never disagree. Human disagreement is in the field of ignorance, not in the field of knowledge. "My people are destroyed for lack of knowledge." Loyalty to God is obedience to His will, and that will is revealed by the Word and the Spirit of God. The Spirit interprets the Word to the individual as he reads or hears it; and obedience to that impression or conviction is loyalty to God. He is the "Author and finisher of our faith."

Second, loyalty to self. The highest and noblest impulses of the soul are inspired in human breasts by God, and hence loyalty to self is an evidence of loyalty to God. It is as difficult for the Christian to be true to himself as it is to be true to God. In fact, in the last analysis, it is one and the same. The little stream from the spring knows which way to go; but obstructions may divert it from its course and prevent its steady flow. The human heart knows the way it should go; but the sin of the world obstructs its course and pollutes its character. Men sin against themselves as well as against God. Full loyalty to self includes body, mind, and spirit. Christian education includes them all. "To thine own self be true; and it must follow, as the night the day, that thou canst not be false to any man."

Third—loyalty to others. There are human demands upon us as well as divine demands. The community requires loyalty of the individual. The State requires it. Other people have claims upon us. They have a right to expect honesty, virtue, service, good example, and Christian character. "No man lives to himself." We are links in an endless chain. We are words in an endless book. We are sparks in an endless flame. We are atoms in a great world. We are stars in a boundless sky. We are beings in the image of God. All the rivers run for us; the stars shine for all; the sea and the sun work together in every shower that makes the rises bloom and the harvests ripe for man. Every worker that watches a loom, or a lathe; that follows the plow or the reaper; that writes a poem or sings a song; that rolls a pill or sets a broken limb; that teaches school or governs a State; that offers a prayer or visits the sick —is working for us; and we should respond to all through loyalty to Christ and the Church.

ELON LETTER.

J. D. Gray, dead! It is hard to realize that so forceful and consecrated a man has fallen in the very bloom of efficient manhood. Brother Gray was but fifty-three, yet in that brief span of years he did more constructive work than most men of equal ability can do in a lifetime. He was a splendid executive. Organization and cooperation were native to his life. He also had the rare faculty of concentration; not the concentration of narrowness, but the concentration of broad-gauged efficiency. I have known no business man who could see clearer into a proposition than he; few who could see into it so well. Life is poorer by reason of his translation.

And I say translation advisedly, for Brother Gray was a Christian first and a business man second. He had no difficulty in squaring his religion with his business. He worked hard and prospered, but he would not prosper by dubious methods. "Value received" was his motto in every deal. He always wanted to pay for an article what it was worth, and he never wanted more for an article than it was worth. Business to him was not a game of chance in which one loses while another wins, but a method of mutual exchange of service by which both parties profited. He had no sympathy with "get rich quick" schemes. He did not want something for nothing. Straight, honest business was his rule. I think he exemplified in his remarkably successful business career that the "golden rule" applies in business as in morals. The world needs more such men.

He recognized, too, the stewardship of money. He delighted to give. The last time I talked with him, a mutual friend was mentioned. Quickly he replied that he did not look on giving as this friend did. "I think I ought to give," he continued, "and I enjoy doing it." A princely giver has gone out from our midst, whose future would have meant larger things for the kingdom of Christ. And so his taking away is all the more a mystery and a sorrow. Some day we shall understand.

But I like to think of J. D. Gray in his home —the gracious host, the loving companion, the devoted father; in his Church—the deacon always at his post of duty, and the Sunday School teacher of a class of 'teen-aged boys, every one of them heartbroken over the death of their tried friend and trusted leader; in his trusteeship of our college—the wise counselor and liberal suporter, a man of few words, but weighty in his judgments, judicious and sane.

Brother Gray was also a member of the emergency fund committee, and the last public meeting of any Church body he attended away from his home was the meeting of this committee in Suffolk in March. He left home sick in order to attend. Here, as always, he listened attentively to the plans and made the motion to undertake the present building program, saying, "We must go forward; not hesitate to go forward."

I knew that he was physically failing, but I was not prepared for his death. The telegram from his faithful companion, announcing his passage into the future life, wounded me to the heart. I could not realize his death till, by her side in the stricken home, I looked into the lifeless face that had so often greeted me with smiles. Then I knew my friend would be a memory and an inspiration only for the years to come.

Others will tell the story of his life. I could not refrain from speaking my brief word of appreciation for the life and fellowship of such a man. Truly, beloved friends, a prince and a great man among us has fallen on sleep. Peace to his ashes, and the comfort of the Spirit to his sorrowing loved ones and his legion of true friends! Not soon shall one arise to fill the aching void occasioned by the decease of this splendid man and prince in Israel!

BETHLEHEM LETTER.

Things are looking very hopeful now for that happy occasion, the opening of Bethlehem College this fall. The work on the building is progressing nicely. There has been a little delay for material, but we are expecting to have the building ready to move into by the first of September.

The catalogues are being printed and will soon be distributed to prospective students and others interested in the welfare of the college. I will greatly appreciate it if the pastors and Sunday School superintendents will send me the names and addresses of all the young people in their Church and community who are eligible to enter our school this fall. Some have already done this, but there are still a good many from whom I have not heard.

I think the locating committee did a fine piece of work in selecting a site for the college. The ground is sufficiently rolling so that the natural contour of the ground will make a very pretty campus with only a small amount of work. There is enough level ground in a convenient location on the college property to make a fine athletic field. The rising ground on one side of the field will make an excellent natural grandstand. A number of nice shade-trees will protect the spectators from the sun while they are watching games.

I am very much pleased with the attitude; every one I have met takes toward the college. They seem to be interested in what we are undertaking, and very anxious to see us succeed.

There is no doubt about the opportunity in this field of work. There is a large number of young people in this section who are anxious to educate themselves, and will gladly come to our institution with a little encouragement.

The question as to the degree of success which our institution will attain is largely a question of what kind of support the Church gives the college. Bethlehem College is our Church institution and dependent entirely on the Church for its support. If every member will feel his personal responsibility, and do gladly whatever is his duty and privilege for the institution, it will be impossible to measure the great good that will be accomplished through Christian education in this field.

RICHMOND LETTER.

The work at Richmond, Va., is steadily going forward. We have had a big increase in our Sunday School enrollment and attendance. In addition to the Sunday School taking care of its regular running expenses, it gives a special offering every month to the Christian Orphanage, and the offering for every fifth Sunday to missions, and contributes four dollars every Sunday ta the expenses of the school building in which we hold our services.

Four members have been received into our Church recently, and applications are being put in for other letters of transfer to our Church. We hope to have a number to join either between now and the time of our opening or at the opening service.

The brick-work on our new Church building is completed, the roof is nearly all on, and the plastering is being done. We hope to occupy it in September.

The writer has never had the privilege of laboring with a more loyal or progressive people than the members of our Richmond congregation. Those who wish to make an investment in the Christian Church in the capital of the Old Dominion should send it in before our opening service. The undertaking is large, and we need the co-operation of the brotherhood.

SENDING OUR SONS AND DAUGHTERS TO ELON.

Now that the high schools throughout the length and breadth of the country have closed another year's work, and that many young men and women have finished their high school courses, many a parent is seriously concerned as to where he will send his son or daughter to college next year. At the same time, that son or daughter is earnestly enquiring as to where it will be best for him or her to attend college.

As important as these questions may appear to be, after all it would seem that there should be little, if any, question or hesitation in the minds of the people of the Christian Church as to what college shall be patronized. Since we have our own Elon College, and since this splendid institution offers to us the advantages that are to be had there, the question as to what college our people shall attend, if not already decided, should in most cases be easy to determine. It ought not to be a difficult thing for us to decide to be true to our own.

It is the purpose of this brief note to call attention to a few of the simple reasons that seem to suggest that Elon College is by all means the institution to which our sons and daughters should be sent.

In the first place, we owe it to our college to send our young people there simply as an expression of our loyalty to the institution which represents the Church of which we are a part. Elon College is a vigorous representative of the Christian Church in the South, and challenges the loyal support of every Christian Church family in our midst. If we are not loyal to our own, we need not expect others to be. If we do not make our college a success, we need not look to others for that success. If this institution of the Church is to go forward as she has been doing and as we hope she shall continue to do, it will be due not to the support given by the splendid people of other Churches, but because of the loyal support of our own people. We should be loyal not merely for loyalty's sake, but for the reason that "loyalty leads to largeness."

A second suggestion is that of the strength imparted to the college by the sending of our sons and daughters there as students. Every young man or woman who matriculates there means just that much more prestige and influence given the college after that person has passed from the college out into active service, whether that person graduates or not. It gives the college a chance to help one more person, thereby strengthening the institution in the good will of the public and widening her sphere of usefulness in the world. A fine young business man said the other day, this man having been at one time a student in Elon: "I believe every man who has ever been a student at Elon College loves the institution." Colleges are strengthened not only by the money that is given for their support, but, in a larger way, by the love that is elicited from the hearts of their patrons and friends. Elon is entitled to the love that our sons and daughters are capable of bestowing upon her in the years that are to come, if only they are given the opportunity of going there that they may join the procession of those who will strengthen her walls for all future time.

And a third suggestion that we should not overlook is the strength that will be returned to our Churches, or released for service elsewhere, in the sending of our young people to our own college. Elon College is not sectarian in her teachings, and it is hoped that she will ever continue to put the larger interests of the kingdom above mere denominational lines; but, in a very natural way, her students find the opportunity of contact with the denominational leaders and come into touch with our great, aggressive denominational movements, thus gaining a vision of service in their own Church. The men and women who have gone to Elon and are now filling places of leadership in the Church are an unanswerable argument in favor of supporting this living enterprise of the Church in the largest possible way, and certainly from the standpoint of student support. The greater the number of students from our Christian Church families, the greater will be the strength of our Church in future years.

In every way, therefore, it would seem the part of wisdom for our sons and daughters to attend college at Elon if they are going to college at all. Saying this is not to argue that Elon is better than other Church schools, but that it is better for our people. Your home may not be any better than many other homes about you, but it is better for you. And your Church may not be better than that of some other person, but for your own enrichment of life and growth of character it is far better for you to attend faithfully upon the services of your own Church. In the same sense, it is better for our young people to attend our own college. So, then, if you are a member of the Christian Church and have a son or daughter who expects to enter college in September, why not decide now to send to Elon? Such a decision should be conducive to the best interests of the college, the Church at large, and the individual lives affected by it.

THE RAISING OF VALUES.

Destiny is not about us, but within us—we must make ourselves. "The world is no longer clay, but rather iron in the hands of its workers," says Emerson, "and men have got to hammer out a place for themselves by steady and rugged blows." To make the most of what we possess, whether it be cloth, iron, intellect or character, is real success. Raising things to priceless value is great success. The blacksmith takes the rough bar of iron and raies its value by making it into horseshoes. Along comes the cutler, who says to the blacksmith: "Is that all you can see in that iron?" He takes it and raises its valuation from ten dollars to two thousand dollars, by making it into knife-blades. Now, knife-blades are all very well if you can make nothing better, but along comse another artisan who turns the crude iron into the finest cambric needles. He has multiplied many times the value of the cutler's product, and thinks he has exhausted the possibilities of the iron; but along comes another very skillful mechanic, with a more finely organized mind, a more delicate touch, and better training, passes with ease by the horseshoes, knife-blades, cambic needles and returns the product of his bar in fine hairsprings for watches. While others saw horseshoes, knife-blades, or needles, worth only a few thousand dollars, his penetrating eye saw a product worth a million dollars; perhaps forty times the value of the same weight in gold. This may all sound like magic, but it can be accomplished by the application of the homeliest virtues; by the training of the eye, the hand, the perception; by painstaking care, by hard work, and by determination and grit.

If a metal possessing only a few coarse material qualities is capable of such marvelous increase in value, by mixing brains with its molecules, who shall set bounds to the possibilities of the development of a human being, that wonderful compound of physical, mental, moral, and spiritual forces? Whereas, in the development of iron, a dozen processes are possible, a thousand influences may be brought to bear upon mind and character. While the iron is an inert mass, acted upon by external influences only, the human being is a bundle of forces, acting and counteracting, yet all capable of control and directions by the higher self, the real dominating personality. The difference in human attainment is due only slightly to original material. It is the ideal followed and unfolded, the effort made, the processes of education and experience undergone, that fuse, hammer, and mold our life-bar into its ultimate development.

The Chautauqua and School of Methods, which is under the direction and supervision of the Board of Religious Education of the Southern Christian Convention, which is held at Elon College, N. C., July 30th to August 5, 1923, affords excellent opportunity for the raising of intellectual and spiritual values. Keen executives have built for us a practical program, upon a solid foundation, with such characters as Dr. J. O. Atkinson, Rev. Thos. E. Beaman, Miss Pattie Coghill, Hermon Eldredge, Rev. E. B. Flory, Dr. W. A. Harper, Rev. R. C. Helfenstein, Dr. I. W. Johnson, Miss Mary Graham Lawrence, Miss Emma G. Lemen, Rev. J. H. Lightbourne, Rev. J. F. Morgan, Mrs. M. T. Morrill, Rev. Thos. F. Opie, Dr. W. D. Parry, Dr. C. H. Rowland, Dr. W. W. Staley, and Rev. John G. Truitt as teachers and lecturers, who are all experts in their line of work. It is said: "Man of today is only 50 per cent efficient." Reduced to simple English, this means that most men are trying to do a man's portion on half a man's power. It is impossible to continue to do so without availing ourselves of all the outside help possible; neither should we be satisfied to remain a 50 per cent man when we might raise our value by attending the Chautauqua and School of Methods. You say, "I can't spare the time." I know these are strenuous days, but people have time to do everything else necessary for the attainment of happiness, but the most essential thing of all is the raising of their intellectual and spiritual values. This they, too, often leave undone. Is the program too good to be true? That right here at our own Elon College, where a veritable miracle is being wrought in Christian liberality and reconstruction, that we have condensed a lifetime of experience of eighteen teachers and lecturers in the program to be givn us in five days. Is it possible that they are offering a value too great to be credible? Do people "shy" at the thought of getting too much for their money?

The Chautauqua and School of Methods has built its reputation on the foundation of experience gained in rendering faithful service ever since it started its good work; and we will not be disappointed if we give it our whole-hearted support this time. Do you want to increase your value? Do you want to climb to bigger things, or are you content to sit idly by and watch the other fellow climb?

Ministers of the Southern Christian Convention, let us get behind this School of Religious Education with our whole-hearted support, that this big program may be put across.

MISSIONS

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Field Secretary.

A CHURCH DEDICATED.

Sunday, July 15th, was a memorable and an epoch-making day with the people of Mt. Olivet Christian Chhurch, Greene County, Va. Rev. W. C. Hook, Harrisonburg, Va., is the beloved pastor, who has labored with great zeal in leading his people on to achieve the great and good results now reached. Mt. Olivet is a beautiful Church, happily located on a high hill that overlooks a great stretch of inspiring mountain and valley scenery, where scores of happy homes have already been blessed by the preaching and teaching of the Word of God in this sanctuary. In addition to the main auditorium, there are three large Sunday School rooms. These rooms are already well filled with an increasing attendance, and two other rooms could be used to advantage. Modern Churches certainly need to make ample provision for Sunday School purposes.

A great throng gathered to witness and take part in the all-day service, which included Church dedication, last Sunday. The people came from far and near, and though chairs and improvised seats were brought in, the house was unable to accommodate all who came. It was announced that $600.00 would have to be given before the house could be dedicated. At the close of the soliciting period it was found that $631.00 had been contributed. The people were very happy. Many have made real sacrifices that this handsome Church could be erected and dedicated, and the fruits of their efforts gladdened their hearts.

Pastor Hook had the service in charge and directed the singing. Brother W. A. Crawford read a most interesting historical sketch. The old Church, a mile or more distant up the mountain, was dedicated many years ago by Dr. J. P. Barrett, and there are those in the community who remember that service with much interest.

The writer preached the dedicatory sermon in the morning, and also preached again at 3 P. M. It was an inspiration to have a part in this happy exercise and be present on this auspicious occasion. The Church is growing in strength, prestige, and numbers. The Sunday School is large and, under the able leadership of Superintendent J. H. Morris, is doing great work. There are hundreds of promising young people in the community, and there is a most wonderful opportunity here for great Christian service.

We have two or three other points accessible from Mt. Olivet, and we ought by all means have a pastor located in this vicinity. I do not know of any field that has wider opportunity and gives promise of greater results if properly worked.

A GREAT SUNDAY SCHOOL AND CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR CONVENTION.

The Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention of the North Carolina Christian Conference met in its sixth annual session at Catawba Springs Christian Church, Wake County, N. C., on the evening of July 10th, and adjourned on the afternoon of July 12th, after the most successful session in its history.

The Convention theme was "Win One." The text of the Convention was Prov. 11:30: "And he that winneth souls is wise." The Convention song was "Win the One Next to You." The theme, text, and the song were all strictly adhered to and repeatedly emphasized throughout the entire session. From the time that Rev. J. Lee Johnson, leader of the devotional service, sounded in a most impressive manner the evangelical note till the benediction was pronounced at the closing service the theme of the Convention semed uppermost in the minds of all speakers and singers. Rev. J. E. Franks, chairman of the entertainment committee, not only delivered a cordial address of welcome but set a high standard for all speakers in the Convention in his challenge to delegates and visitors to give to the community and the local Sunday School the best that was in them, as the community was prepared to do its best for all visitors. The response by Rev. W. T. Scott was likewise pointed and practical, and met the demands of the occasion most happily. Rev. W. D. Parry, pastor First Christian Church of Raleigh, moved the Convention mightily with an eloquent address on "How to Get the Most out of this Convention." If the delegates and visitors did not get their share of the blessings and the benefits of the Convention it was not the fault of the man who so fittingly told them how to do so. The evening session closed with the Mizpah benediction.

After song and devotional services Wednesday morning and a brief business session, President C. H. Stephenson delivered the annual address, using for his topic, "The Ideal Sunday School." The points emphasized in this message were: first, "inspiration"; second, "determination"; third, "equipment"; fourth, "activity"; fifty, "loyalty." Brother Stephenson's annual messages to this body are more than ordinary addresses. They are an institution in themselves. Being himself a wide-awake Sunday School man, he keeps abreast of the times and grows with the body over which he presides. His address is to be given in printed form, and should be widely read.

The "general reports," following the address, made by the secretaries of departments, furnished much worth-while and helpful information to delegates and members of the Convention.

Miss Lucy M. Eldredge, secretary of the Board of Religious Education, delivered a most timely address and one of great worth and weight on "Winning Through Worship." Miss Eldredge emphasized the power of worship in the Sunday School and showed that to leave worship out of the Sunday School is to rob the institution of its very heart and soul.

During the conference hour which followed, the Convention dissolved into three sections: (a) children, led by Mrs. L. L. Vaughan, of Raleigh; (b) young people, led by Miss Susie Riddick, of Durham; (c) adults and administration, a conference led by Professor L. L. Vaughan, of Raleigh.

The afternoon of the second day was given to Christian Endeavor and was made helpful to all who were in anywise interested in this great institution. Rev. J. E. McCauley presented the report on Senior Christian Endeavor, and delivered a very helpful address on "Win One and Keep One." Miss Fleda Summers presented the junior report and demonstrated by leading the juniors in a real Christian Endeavor. Rev. G. C. Crutchfield spoke briefly and pointedly on "The Pastor and Christian Endeavor"; Brother H. M. Rhodes, on "Making the Christian Endeavor Go"; Miss Alberta Atkinson, on "Christian Endeavor for Girls," and Mr. James Stephenson, on "Christian Endeavor for Boys." These brief addresses were timely and very suggestive, being both practical and inspirational. They elicited discussion and approval. Dr. G. O. Lankford, of Burlington, ably discussed "Giving Christian Endeavor a Chance," and Mr. H. M. Rhodes led the senior part of it in demonstrating how a Christian Endeavor should be conducted.

The evening session on Wednesday was thrilled and wonderfully edified by a song, devotional and musical program put on by the music committee, under the leadership of Brother George M. McCullers. During this program Miss Julia McGee, a most successful worker with children in the Catawba Springs Sunday School, gave a most interesting program, rendered by the little folks of her class. Following the hour given to this work, Dr. W. A. Harper, in the absence of Superintendent Johnston, spoke of the "Christian Orphanage," and an offering in cash and subscriptions was taken for the orphanage amounting to $200.

The evening session closed with a brief talk by J. O. Atkinson on "The Golden Periods of Youth."

Thursday morning, in the business session, roll call and reports showed that this was the most largely attended, and had more schools represented than any previous session of the Convention. The writer's recollection is that more than fifty schools were represented by delegates, to say nothing of the many visitors from various Churches. The number of pastors present was also exceedingly gratifying, far surpassing the number attending any previous Convention.

After the business session, Dr. W. A. Harper outlined the work of our General Board of Religious Education in the topic of "The Correlated Program of Christian Education." This was information received with great helpfulness by the Convention, and a large number of subscriptions from the various schools were secured for our Journal of Christian Education.

The following departmental deports were made, and showed great interest on the part of the secretaries reporting and much progress made along the lines reported: (a) Miss Emma Hart, cradle roll; (b) Mrs. L. L. Vaughan, beginners; (c) Mrs. W. H. Boone, juniors; (d) Rev. S. M. Lynam, adults; (e) Mr. H. M. Rhodes, teacher training.

Mrs. W. H. Boone, secretary of the juniors, read a paper on "Activities for Junior Classes," which SUN readers should have and which gave invaluable suggestions to all who are interested in junior classes. It was a fine presentation of a most timely theme.

Rev. Herbert Scholz delivered a very helpful and most practical address on "Some Requisites to Successful Teaching."

The closing session of the Convention Thursday was a fitting climax to the great program. Miss Lucy Eldredge gave "Glimpses of the Future"; Rev. S. M. Lynam, "The Real Church School"; Dr. P. H. Fleming, "Winning Young People," and many delegates testified as to "Thoughts to Take to My Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Society." These addresses were wholesome and helpful and inspiring. The fact is, there was not an ordinary address or one out of place during the whole Convention, but every speaker was present and prepared and did his or her best to give to the Convention helpful information and that which would be of practical benefit to the home school.

The Convention adjourned to meet in annual session next year with New Elam Christian Church, Merry Oaks, N. C.

President C. H. Stephenson, with the assistance of his program committee, certainly put on a program worthy of the highest praise and commendation, and it was carried out with zeal, "pep," enthusiasm, and efficiency.

Catawba Springs Church and community surpassed themselves in real Christian hospitality and lavish entertainment of the great throngs who attended the Convention. The food was abundant and of the best, and the homes of the community entertained delegates and visitors in royal Christian fashion. It was certainly a joy and a coveted privilege to be in this Convention.

MT. CARMEL CONVENTION.

The Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention of the Eastern Virginia Christian Conference met in annual session at Mt. Carmel Church, Walters, Va., Tuesday and Wednesday, July 17, 18, 1923. It was called to order by the president, Col. E. E. Holland; led in song service by Mr. W. H. Baker, and devotional service by Rev. E. T. White, who took for his topic, "Prayer." After the appointment of special committees, the superintendent of the Sunday School, Mr. Otis V. Joyner, made an address of welcome, giving a history of the school that led to the founding of the Church at this place.

The junior choir of the First Church at Norfolk then sang, to the delight of the Convention.

In response to the address of welcome, Dr. W. T. Walters spoke, using as his subject, "Giving the Child a Chance." The morning session closed with three conferences:

1. Worship in the Sunday School, conducted by Rev. E. B. Flory.
2. Children's division, by Mrs. I. A. Luke.
3. Teaching missions in the Sunday School, by Mrs. C. H. Rowland and Miss Emily Midyett.

Afternoon session.—Music by the orchestra of the Suffolk Christian Church, and song service led by Mr. W. H. Baker, and devotions conducted by Rev. T. E. White. The junior choir of the First Church of Norfolk rendered a beautiful quartet and chorus.

The treasurer, Mr. J. W. Folk, read his report, which was referred to a committee on finance.

The reports of the superintendents of the various departments were then called for and read, which were highly gratifying and showed progress. Dr. H. Shelton Smith gave a talk on "Teacher or Leadership Training."

Under the head of business, the general secretary, Rev. J. H. Lightbourne, read the new constitution, which was adopted by items. In the discussion of one item of the report, flights of oratory were indulged in that made one feel that he was in the presence of masters of the art. The constitution was adopted as a whole.

The managing editor of The Christian Sun was given five minutes in which to present the claims of the paper. Rev. E. B. Flory spoke on "How to Conduct the Worship Service." After the assignment of delegates to homes, the Convention adjourned.

The evening session met at 8 o'clock. After the introductory services by the orchestra and song leader, and devotions, Col. E. E. Holland delivered a most excellent address on the subject, "For God and Country."

Wednesday morning the Convention met, Rev. J. H. Lightbourne, general secretary, presiding. Song service and devotions. President Holland came in and took the chair.

The Christian Missionary Association was represented by Rev. O. D. Poythress, president. Several memberships were taken. The report on Christian Endeavor was made by Mrs. C. C. Rawls, followed by a pageant—a dream; a fine lesson. The morning session closed with the following conferences:

1. Junior Christian Endeavor, led by Mrs. Thomas G. Hyatte.
2. Better Christian Endeavor, led by Mrs. C. C. Rawls and Mr. W. H. Baker.
3. Sunday School organized for service, led by Dr. W. A. Harper.

After refreshments, which might be properly called a banquet or feast of good things, the people assembled for the afternoon session. Following the introductory services, Dr. W. A. Harper spoke on "The Correlation of the Educational Activities of the Church." The finance and other committees reported.

The following officers and department secretaries were elected for the next year:

Officers.—Col. E. E. Halland, president; J. A. Williams, first vice-president; W. K. Wagner, second vice-president; Rev. J. H. Lightbourne, executive secretary; Rev. B. J. Earp, recording secretary; J. W. Folk, treasurer.

Department Secretaries.—Miss Susie Raby, cradle roll; Mrs. H. H. Drewry Beasly, primary; Mrs. C. C. Rawls, junior; Mrs. J. E. Harris, intermediate; Mrs. Herbert Howell, young people; Mrs. J. M. Raby, senior; C. E. Beale, adult; Mrs. J. L. Foster, home; P. J. Kernodle, Church literature; W. H. Baker, Christian Endeavor; Rev. E. B. Flory, leadership training; Mrs. M. L. Bryant, missions.

The Convention accepted the invitation to meet at Bethlehem Church, Tuesday after the third Sunday in July, 1924. Adjourned, with prayer and benediction by Rev. H. H. Butler.

MT. CARMEL S. S. FOUNDED 1866.

A sketch of Mt. Carmel Sunday School from the address of welcome by Mr. Otis V. Joyner, to the Christian Sunday School Convention, at Mt. Carmel, July 17, 1923:

Before the War Between the States, there was no Sunday School in the community nearer than Antioch, about seven miles distant, and some went even that far (at times on foot) to attend the Sunday School.

In 1866 a Sunday School was organized near the home of Mr. Jos. Johnson, about three miles from the present Church. This location was called "Paradise," from a large tree of that kind, under whose spreading branches the people gathered to study the Word of God in the summertime. In 1868 this school was moved to the Dr. J. J. Duck farm, about one mile from the present Church. This was then called Ducksville, and the school met in the porch of a store and under the shade of a large oak that stood nearby. In 1871 the Sunday School was moved to the present location of the Church, and a bush shelter was first built on the site of the present cemetery. Later in the year there was a house built, and the Church was organized through the efforts of Rev. Mills B. Barrett, and the influence of Maj. I. W. Duck and others, now gone.

This served the community for a great many years, or until 1905, when the present auditorium was built. Recently there have been added eight separate class-rooms for the use of the Sunday School, and these rooms have greatly increased the attendance and the interest in the local school, until now they have one of the most flourishing schools in the Convention.

When Mr. Joyner had finished, the president, Hon. E. E. Holland, arose and made a few remarks in which he said that he would always look upon Mt. Carmel Sunday School and Church as a monument to the memory of Rev. Mills B. Barrett and Maj. I. W. Duck, two of the leaders in the Christian denomination in Virginia.

NOTICE.

Bro. W. A. Newman, Henderson, N. C., wishes any of our brethren who may be passing that way would notify him and let him make appointment for preaching in the Henderson Christian Church, as the Church is now without a pastor.

3,000 THE CHRISTIAN SUN. 9,000

There are between 8,000 and 10,000 families represented in the Southern Christian Convention, which means if a copy of The Christian Sun is placed in each family, a possible subscription list of 9,000 copies. There are now circulated approximately 3,000 copies, or about one-third of our Church families are reached. Hence, there should be added to the list 6,000 new subscribers in order to have the Church paper placed in every family.

Now, the great personal effort required to do this must be rewarded. To compensate this labor, if premiums are given, it will take 20 automobiles, or 40 radio machines, or 50 to 60 talking machines, or 90 to 100 typewriters, or 200 to 300 watches, etc. Don't you think you will have a good opportunity to secure one of these prizes?

But you need not confine your solicitations to your Church alone. You have friends in other denominations who will gladly assist you by giving a subscription. Make your appeal in a straightforward manner. True men and women are interested in the success of their friends and will lend a helping hand.

Premiums Given for New Subscriptions.

The subscription price of The Sun, recently reduced, is now $2.00 per year—two six-month subscriptions at $1.00 each count as one year. One person may take as many as he may wish for himself or for others. Those in arrears should pay up and assist the solicitor by taking an advanced subscription.

Schedule.

1. To one securing 350 Subscriptions, a Ford Touring Car will be given ($298.00 f. o. b. factory).
2. To one securing 150 Subscriptions, one Radio Equipment—Westinghouse R-6 Set, complete with batteries, tubes, phone and aerial equipment, the price of which is $150.00.
3. To one securing 100 Subscriptions will be given one Victrola ($75.00), or cash prize of $50.00.

6. For 25 Subscriptions, one Gentleman's or Lady's Watch ($25.00), likewise guaranteed by Jahnke Bros.
7. To one securing 20 Subscriptions, one Standard or International Dictionary will be given.

To all authorized solicitors will be paid 10 per cent commission on all renewals, and 20 per cent on all new subscriptions. Those receiving prizes will not be entitled to commission.

Two renewal subscriptions will be counted as one in determining the winners of prizes.

Send in your name and address and receive the necessary report blanks and receipt books.

The contest will close on October 31, 1923.

Remittances made on this campaign are to be net. Post-office money orders constitute a safe plan of remittance.

Golden Text: "Our soul hath waited for Jehovah; He is our help and our shield."—Ps. 33:20.

A Woman's Grateful Service.

The Bible heroines, whom we have studied, have all had their life-stories linked up with the word "service"—Esther, who saved her people in an hour of peril; Ruth, who faithfully served her mother-in-law, Naomi; Mary, the mother of the Christ. And the words, "grateful service," seem to sum up best the whole life of Mary Magdalene—a life rescued from affliction by the Master's power, and given to Him in loving devotion. As the roll of earth's great heroines is called, this is always the badge of greatness. Think of Florence Nightingale, the "Lady with the Lamp," of Clara Barton, of Edith Cavell, and a host of others who are remembered because their names so closely allied with many whom they have served.

The ministry of Jesus Christ reached to all classes. He made a direct appeal to the centurion, and to the so-called religious leaders of his day. Not only practical men heard His call, but good women were touched by the Gospel which He preached and lived. "Womanhood," says Dr. Fosdick, "has a power of spiritual insight often denied to men—is sensitive to finer influences than manhood feels. This spiritual insight of womanhood has, from the beginning, appreciated in the Master qualities which men alone might have missed. The finest in womanhood, as well as in manhood, has looked to him for its ideal and has responded to his appeal for loyal devotion." So Mary Magdalene served her Master because she saw in Him an ideal, as she had found in Him a helper.

"Had Been Healed of Infirmities."—Mary Magdalene has often been confused with the sinful women of whom Jesus had just been speaking (Luke 7:37), but the Scripture passages of the Gospels do not tell that she was a sinful woman, but rather one with a great affliction, bodily or mentally, which Jesus cured. In return, came her life of grateful service. She did not forget as the nine lepers. Her grateful remembrance places her in the list of Bible heroines, whose lives are a constant inspiration still.

"Ministered Unto Them."—As Jesus and His disciples went through the cities and villages, preaching and healing, they were made comfortable by the ministry of certain women, among whom was Mary Magdalene. These women, from their own substance, showed hospitality and kindness. Thus they had a share in the earthly ministry of Jesus Christ. Their part was vital as was that of the disciples. All men and women do not serve alike Abilities differ, and one service cannot be valued above another by men. Faithfulness is the test. Jesus may still be ministered unto, for He said: "Inasmuch as ye did it unto one of these my brethren, even these least, ye did it unto Me." So His work may be carried forward in the Mary Magdalene way even now.

"Standing by the Cross."—His hour of suffering was her hour of sorrow. Standing nearby, how her loving heart must have been torn by His pain! The love which kept her at the cross sent her early to the grave.

"Not she with traitorous kiss her Master stung,
Not she denied Him with unfaithful tongue:
She, when apostles fled, could dangers brave,
Last at His cross and earliest at His grave"

In what a few words is her life-story told by the Gospel! Yet how fraught they are with meaning Ministering, watching, weeping! The woman in whose heart genuine personal devotion was unmixed with any political or selfish ambition was the first to hear a word from the risen Lord Himself. To her a word of comfort, and then a message to the disciples, and she went to serve her risen Lord.

Mary Magdalene's life is a beautiful picture of the power of love, of the beauty of service, of the appeal of true devotion. Among the throng of "Marys" of Bible story, she occupies a worthy place, telling to women of all times that Jesus has a service for them to do; that He needs their help, and that the first requisite for a grateful service is a loving heart.

"They talk about a woman's sphere
As though it had a limit,
There's not a place in earth or heaven,
There's not a task to mankind given,
There's not a blessing or a woe,
There's not a whispered "yes" or "no,"
There's not a life, or death, or birth
That has a feather's weight of worth,
Without a woman in it."

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC.

August 5, 1923.

Topic: Lessons from the Psalms—A Nature Psalm.—Ps. 104:1-35.

(An Outdoor Consecration Meeting.)

Thoughts for the Meeting.

"Slow comes the evening o'er the hill,
The labor of the world is still;
Homeward I go, and muse on Thee,
Father of Home, abide with me."

This out-of-door psalm comes as a helpful meditation, bringing a fourfold message.

1. God's mighty power is shown in the creation of the earth.

The psalmist caught a vision of the revelation of this supreme power in the beauty and sublimity of nature. Light and darkness come. Cloud and wind appear. Mountains and sea are seen. And God is in all! The beauty and force of Niagara, the magnificence of great caves, and the delicate colors of the evening sunset speak to us of God and call men to worship a Supreme Being of mighty and wonderful power.

"A haze on the far horizon,
The infinite tender sky,
The ripe, rich tint of the cornfields,
And the wild geese sailing high;
And all over upland and lowland
The charm of the Golden-Rod—
Some of us call it autumn,
And others call it God."

2. In nature, the kind providence of God is revealed.

sustain life. Provision for even the birds is part of His divine plan of creation. All of the out-of-doors shows the wise providence of God in Water is provided that man and beast may drink. The earth is made to produce food to looking out for even the simplest needs of His children. Surely, the God who is so considerate of our physical needs, is ready to meet our spiritual needs, to guide through perplexity, to care for in danger, to cheer in sorrow, to be a companion in joy.

3. God's power and glory are eternal.

"The glory of the Lord shall endure forever." "For a thousand years in Thy sight are but as yesterday when it is past, and a watch in the night."

For centuries, men have marveled at the beauty of the world, and have been taken care of by His bounty. So His power is promised for all times to protect and care for His faithful children. What need is there for fear when such an all-powerful, loving, eternal God is our Father?

"This is my Father's world,
I rest me in the thought:
Of rocks and trees, of skies and seas,
His hands the wonders wrought.

"This is my Father's world,
He shines in all that's fair;
In the rustling grass, I hear Him pass—
He speaks to me everywhere."

4. God's goodness and eternal power call men to praise Him continually.

Man was God's last and greatest creation. All that he has, comes from God. Think of His goodness, of His wise provision, His constant care! Only perpetual praise can be in the heart of the child who thinks of his Heavenly Father! The sinner spurns His love. The righteous man lives a life which is an everlasting hymn of praise and thanksgiving because of His love for the great "God of the out-of-doors."

"I need Thy presence every passing hour:
What but Thy grace can foil the tempter's power,
Who, like Thyself, my guide and stay can be?
Through cloud and sunshine, Lord, abide with me.

Plans for the Meeting.

This is an ideal topic for an outdoor meeting. Held where the out-of-doors helps to interpret the lesson psalm, its message will be more deeply impressed.

With a cornet to lead the music, sing familiar hymns, as "Day is Dying in the West," "Jesus Shall Reign," "Jesus Calls Us," "Nearer, My God, to Thee," "Abide With Me," "Break Thou the Bread of Life."

Ask one member to tell what the out-of-doors meant to Jesus, telling of the part played in His earthly life by the garden and desert, the lake and the seaside, and the hilltop.

Let each member respond to the roll call of this consecration meeting with a nature verse from the Bible. Follow this roll call with a moment of silent prayer and the hymn, "Take My Life and Let it Be," or some other consecration hymn, sung softly.

Give a special invitation to this meeting to all young people home from college, giving them a special part on the program, and to all visitors in the community.

CHAUTAUQUA OPENS NEXT MONDAY NIGHT.

The Chautauqua and School of Methods opens next Monday night, and ends Sunday night, August 5th. Every Church should consider carefully the advantages of such a gathering, and plan to secure good from it.

On Sunday, July 29th, pastors are called upon to pray for the success of this gathering. As an enterprise of the Church, it commands our interest and calls for our prayers in private devotion and public worship.

A hearty welcome awaits all who come. A card to Miss Lucy M. Eldredge, Elon College, N. C., Box 277, will bring some one to the station to meet you. "Never a stranger at Elon," has long been the Elon way and the Chautauqua spirit. Combined, the two are invincible, and a friendly, sociable week, with Christian companions, is assured.

The mornings will be devoted to class-work, which will be interesting and highly instructive. The afternoons are in charge of a committee on recreation, who will introduce many features. The evenings are given over to music and lecture. An ideal vacation is offered by the Elon Chautauqua and School of Methods, and a most cordial invitation extended to all to be there from beginning to end.

RELIGIOUS EDUCATION DOINGS.

Going to the Chautauqua? It opens next Monday night!

Mt. Auburn reports a good growth, and the best Sunday School in some time, under the superintendency of J. A. Kimball.

The Juniors of Catawba Springs, under the direction of Miss Julia Magee, furnished music for the North Carolina Convention.

Under the leadership of Rev. R. P. Crumpler and Mr. J. E. Foster, Leaksville Sunday School is organizing a new teacher-training class.

Holland opened its second session of the daily vacation Bible school on the 19th. A teacher-training class was run in connection with the children's work.

The Chautauqua is for everybody. Don't forget to bring your bed linen, pillows and towels, for the college does not possess these articles to furnish them.

Sanford Sunday School has made improvements to its equipment, and now has a much better Sunday School room. Mr. J. U. Gunter is the efficient superintendent, who directs the school in its forward work.

Christian Endeavor Society, with nine charter members, and more to join soon, was organized recently at Parks Cross Roads Christian Church. John C. Cox, Jr., is the president of this new society, which promises to do good work in that Church.

North Carolina Convention at Catawba Springs July 10, 11, 12, was a great gathering. Fifty-four Sunday Schools reported to this gathering, and it is hoped that the other forty-six will come in before the printing of the minutes. Be sure that your report is in.

The Bethel Christian Church, near New Hill, N. C., and the Baptist Church of the same community began a daily vacation Bible school last Monday morning. Public school teachers are helping on the faculty, and the pastor, Rev. M. T. Sorrell. The field secretary was present the first three days of the week.

New Hope Church, North Carolina Conference, has a fine new Christian Endeavor Society. Rev. J. E. Franks is pastor, and Mr. W. F. Edwards a leader in the society. The members are so active and so numerous that the society has beeen divided into groups, three in number, which take charge of the meetings by turns.

On July 3rd, a Christian Endeavor Society was organized at the Pleasant Ridge Christian Church, in Guilford County, and Mr. Fred Durham, of Kernersville, R. D., was elected president. Rev. A. H. Hook is pastor of this Church, and is working hard for good progress in the work of all his Churches. He writes that he is planning to attend the Chautauqua, and to have all of his Churches represented.

WORSHIPING WITH THE BRETHREN.

Within the last month and a half it has been my privilege and pleasure to worship with the congregations at New Center, Randolph County, N. C.; Berea, Alamance County, and Catawba Springs, Plymouth, and Raleigh (First Christian Church), in the State capital County of Wake. Of all the enjoyments of social life, perhaps there is no higher enjoyment than to join one's fellows in adoration and praise at the house of prayer. Such was my delightful fellowship with large groups of fellow-churchmen and Church sympathizers at the five Churches already mentioned, accounts of which occasions are given below in somewhat more detail.

New Center.

On the fourth Sunday in May, it being Memorial Day, I was glad to meet with the large congregation at New Center in celebration of this day. Rev. W. J. Edwards, Coleridge, N. C., is the excellent and beloved pastor of this Church. The large congregation attested his popularity as a leader of this flock. The promptness and the Christian vigor with which pastor and congregation enter into the service is soulful and delightful to the visitor.

New Center is my old home Church. It was here that I, a boy of thirteen, resolved one day during a series of evangelistic meetings, that I would "seek first the kingdom of God and His righteousness," and soon thereafter joined the Church. I have not always lived up to that high resolve, but I have never to this day doubted the wisdom of it. It was, therefore, a delightful privilege to meet and worship with a devout congregation at this same spot many years later.

Berea.

Memorial Day was celebrated by the Berea congregation on the first Sunday in June. Here also a capacity assembly gathered to enter into the services in paying respect to the dead. The local order of the Woodmen of the World, uniformed and bearing the symbol of the order, was present in a body to pay tribute to the memory of a lost leader. Rev. W. T. Scott, of Greensboro, N. C., is the promising young pastor. Bro. Scott is a member of the class of '24 in Elon College, and is likely to prove a minister of abundant service and great value to the denomination The excellent musical program rendered on this Memorial Day was highly inspirational, and lent great aid to the speaker. Among many old friends and acquaintances, it was especially delightful to meet and worship with the venerable A. F. Isley. There are evidences of growth in this Church, and I shall be glad when opportunity permits me to worship again with this excellent brotherhood.

Catawba Springs.

It was "College Day" at Catawba Springs, and the time 11 o'clock on the first Sunday in July, 1923. Rev. J. Lee Johnson, the pastor, met me in Raleigh the evening before, and we spent the night very pleasantly in the home of one of his members, Mrs. Rhodes, sister of Rev. J. E. Franks. A long drouth had been broken by a gentle rain during the night, and until near the hour appointed for worship Sunday morning, yet a large, active Sunday School was in place by 10 o'clock, and by 11 o'clock the large Church was practically filled with worshipers. I had often heard it remarked that people go to hear Rev. Lee Johnson preach; I had often heard of Catawba Springs Church; I had heard many good things of it, but I had never realized until now what these hearsays actually meant. The worship was delightful and uplifting. The Church was undergoing additions so as to enlarge the auditorium and add two Sunday School rooms. The Church, unlike many country Churches, has two good song leaders in Bro. George M. McCullers and Bro. Denton. A lady member of the Church, whose name just now escapes me, is proving herself a successful leader of children, as shown by the choral singing of the children and a vocal solo, sweetly rendered by a little tot who was accompanied on the piano by a wee tot, even smaller than the singer. I shall never forget my first day with Rev. J. Lee Johnson and his Catawba Springs audience.

Plymouth.

From the morning service at Catawba Springs, we journeyed toward the little Church of Plymouth for the regular services at 3 o'clock in the afternoon. We had an abundant and delicious dinner at the home of Bro. Center. This family are recent comers into Wake County, yet they are members at Catawba Springs, and Mr. Center's daughter is the efficient pianist there.

Plymouth is one of the smaller of Bro. Johnson's seven Churches, and was thought to be hopelessly decadent when he became pastor some two years ago. There were evidences that here, too, Bro. Johnson is appreciated as a preacher and pastor. The house of worship had recently been improved by the addition of a vestibule and by other marks of interest. At the service that afternoon, the seating room of the Church was taxed to its capacity. The congregation was made up largely of young people, who joined generally with the older worshipers with zest and spirit into the singing.

Raleigh.

It was my pleasure to be back in Raleigh in time for service at the evening hour of worship. I arrived at the First Christian Church there in time for the Christian Endeavor program, which was interestingly and instructively carried out. The Church is now entering a period of the strain and stress of building a new and handsome house of worship. Under the enthusiastic and efficient leadership of their new pastor, Rev. Dr. W. D. Parry, they have already cleared for action. The old Church building, except the Sunday School auditorium, has already been removed, and the excavations for the new structure have been completed. The congregation is somewhat handicapped for lack of a suitable place to worship. It was once thought that the Sunday School annex might remain in place until the new structure should be completed, but it now appears that the walls of this edifice will have to come down. The Church is looking by great faith and through such unity of effort as is beautiful to behold to a greater day of prominence and service. I have no doubt but that the results of their undertakings will mean far more than the highest anticipations of the average hope of the membership. Dr. Parry's sermon that evening was both instructive and inspirational, full of enthusiasm and the spirit of hope. The spirit of faith and loyalty one finds amongst the brethren of the First Christian Church of Raleigh is always helpful to come into contact with; therefore I am glad to join them in worship whenever opportunity affords. W. P. Lawrence.

Elon College, N. C.

Christian Orphanage

REIDSVILLE'S VISIT TO ORPHANAGE.

DEAR FRIENDS:

The rains have come—several of them—and we now have good seasons. Our corn and garden vegetables have taken on new life and are looking better. We hope the season will continue and that we will make good crops yet, in spite of the long drouth we had.

The Reidsville Church and Sunday School pulled off one of the nicest picnics here last week that we have had in a long time. They came in trucks and machines, two hundred strong, and spent the day. We gladly turned the orphanage over to them and told them to enjoy the day. The children enjoyed the ocean wave, the giant stride and see-saws, and the gentlemen pitched horse-shoes and ran races. Lunch was served at 12:30, and it took all the tables we could find to spread the lunch on. The tables were loaded down with chicken, fresh meats, pies, cakes, pickles and everything a hundry person could wish for. Rev. Mr. Ledbetter, pastor of the Reidsville Christian Church, returned thanks, and the little children who had waited so patiently were served first. The entire orphanage family was invited and took dinner with them.

After the lunch, twenty-five gallons of most excellent ice cream was served, to the joy of all the children, and grown folks, too.

Dr. J. P. Barrett, former pastor of Reidsville Church, and his good wife were present and enjoyed the day with his old friends and acquaintances.

Ice water was served during the day. The weather was hot, and ice water was in great demand. The day was ideal. The visitors were in a happy frame of mind, and I believe every one enjoyed the day very much.

It was a great treat to the orphanage children, and will be a day long remembered by them.

It takes a Sunday School with brave hearts to prepare lunch for the Sunday School and one hundred orphan children; but the Reidsville Sunday School did it, and did it to perfection.

We hope a number of our Sunday Schools will picnic here. It is a most excellent place for a picnic. We have excellent shade, the finest water in North Carolina, plenty of shelter in case of rain, an ocean wave, giant stride and see-saws to amuse the children, and in just a few weeks we will have a first-class swimming pool. We give you a cordial invitation to come. Our doors stand open—the grounds and buildings are yours. You are welcome.

CREATION AND REDEMPTION.

Howard W. Pope.

Ps. 8:3—"Heavens, the work of thy fingers."
Isa. 52:10—"The Lord hath made bare Hic holy arm."

When I consider, Lord, the Heav'n
By Thine own fingers laid,
What's man that to him should be giv'n
A thought, or word be said?

And yet, O Lord, thou didst come down
To visit him on earth;
And Thou didst give to him a crown,
With honors from his birth.

But while Creation's mighty plan
Was finger play for Thee,
Redemptive work for humble man
Took God's right arm—we see.

MARRIED

FONVILLE—WATKINS.

A wedding of State-wide interest was that of Miss Anne Watkins, of Sanford, to Mr. DeRoy R. Fonville, of Burlington, which occurred at the home of the bride's uncle, Mr. Alton McIver, in Carthage, Tuesday afternoon at 5 o'clock.

The home was beautifully decorated in pink and white. An improvised altar of white, covered with ivy and long-leaf pine and banked with pink gladioli and Queen Anne's lace, was arranged in the reception hall, where the marriage vows were spoken.

Prior to the ceremony, Mrs. Charles Cox, of Rowland, cousin of the bride, gowned in black lace, with corsage of pink roses, sweetly sang "Because," accompanied at the piano by Mrs. Floy Dalrymple, of Carthage, wearing white Georgette with corsage of pink roses.

As the notes of Mendelssohn's Wedding March were sounded, the bride, beautiful in a three-piece suit of blue, with accessories to match, carrying a lovely bridal bouquet of Bride roses and showered with valley lilies, descended the stairway upon the arm of her uncle, and met the groom, who had entered from the library, at the altar.

The impressive ring ceremony was performed by Dr. G. O. Lankford, pastor of the First Christian Church of Burlington. During the ceremony, "To a Wild Rose" was softly played. Immediately after the wedding an informal reception was given the bridal pair and wedding guests.

Miss Watkins is a graduate of North Carolina College for Women. She has been a successful teacher in the schools of this State, and for several years was county supervisor of Richmond County. She was principal of the Union Street School for the past term and has made many friends for herself.

Mr. Fonville is a member of the firm of the Standard Realty and Security Company, of this city, and is prominent in the social and business life of the town.

Mr. and Mrs. Fonville left for a motor trip through the mountains of Western Carolina. They will be at home after July 20th.

FANNIE HOLLOWELL CURLING.

Sister Curling was born March 4, 1845, and departed this life June 8, 1923. She leaves to mourn their loss two sons, F. L. and L. B. Curling, both of Norfolk County, Va.; one brother, Armstead Hollowell; eight grandchildren, and one great-grandchild, many near relatives and a host of friends.

Her husband, Joseph J. Curling, long since went to his reward. He was one of the founders of Berea (Norfolk County) Church. Both were life-long members of the above Church, faithful and loyal.

Rev. O. D. Poythress sang two beautiful solos. The flowers were lovely tokens of respect and esteem, given by loved ones and friends. Services from Berea Christian Church. We laid her to rest in the Berea Cemetery in the family plot, there to await the call, when the earth and sea shall give up their dead, and all the hosts, past, present and future, shall march before the great white throne in review.

Boys, your best friend is gone. Though she was helpless in these last days, her presence was an inspiration. The cup of water you carried from the old well to her parched lips was but a mission of love that made you bigger and better. The sacrifices she made, the love and care she bestowed but ever stand out in letters of gold as a beckoning hand, calling you to higher things, to nobler thoughts.

Mother of ours, how you love! you so love—that you give! give all! all to us! O glorious day, when can we be with you again, where there will be no sorrow! What a meeting—in the city of our God! The sorrows of earth will be absent there. How we rejoice, even through our tears, when we visualize that reunion in heaven with all who have gone up through great tribulation—robed in white robes of immortality. Yes, we love old earth, but come, Lord Jesus, just when you want, and deliver us from the bonds of the flesh.

GILLIAM.

William H. Gilliam was born December 23, 1877, and died June 28, 1923. The funeral was conducted at Bethlehem Christian Church, of which he was a member, by the writer, assisted by Rev. A. F. Isley. He leaves to mourn his departure a wife and six children, three brothers and two sisters, together with many friends and relatives. He was a good man. For a number of years he was the treasurer and a deacon of the Church, and worked for the best interests of the Church. He was found faithful unto the end.

May the Lord bless the loved ones left behind.

J. F. APPLE.

PAYNE.

James Reuben Payne was born October 23, 1868, and departed this life on June 5, 1923, aged 54 years 7 months and 12 days. Bro. Payne was an industrious and honorable man, and a faithful member of the Linville Christian Church. He leaves in sorrow a widow, one son and one daughter; also an aged and afflicted mother, three sisters and two brothers.

Funeral services were held in the presence of a large congregation of friends and relatives at Linville, June 7, 1923.

A. W. ANDES.

SMITH.

Our Heavenly Father, in His infinite wisdom, on the 17th day of June, took from our midst Mrs. Muriel Makepeace Smith, the third link from the chain of the Progressive Bible Class. Little did we dream May 28th, at our last class meeting with our dear departed member, that the death angel even then was hovering over our hostess. She was at that time anticipating a visit to her mother and sister, at Rocky Mount, N. C. It was there that she was suddenly stricken with appendicitis. Though everything possible was done, God saw best to take her.

Therefore, be it resolved:

First, That our hearts are made sad because of her going; that we will miss her cheerful spirit and helpful service in our work.

Second, That we bow in humble submission to the will of our Heavenly Father, who doeth all things well.

Third, That our heartfelt sympathy be extended to each member of the dear family, who so deeply deplore the loss of mother, wife, daughter and sister, may this sad dispensation be to them a connecting-link between earth and heaven, and may they cherish the memory of their departed as one who awaits them in the celestial city.

Fourth, That these resolutions be placed upon our records, a copy sent to the family, and one offered The Sun for publication.

Respectfully submitted,
MRS. MARGARET BELL,
President.
MRS. RUTH CLARKE.
MISS DAISY ELLIS.
MISS BERTIE RIDDICK,
Secretary.

THE SUN'S OBSERVATORY

Losses by Fire.—

The National Board of Fire Underwriters, through the Agricultural Bureau, gives out the fact that North Carolina, during the five years from 1917-1921, burned in dwelling-house property, buildings worth $3,173,557, and this is only a portion of the total fire destruction in North Carolina. It, therefore, seems that fires which consumed dwelling-houses in the State was a cost of $1.24 to every person living in the State. This is a terrible loss to the people of the State, and it ought to be prevented, and it can be, if the right sort of effort be put forth. It is also estimated that dwelling-house losses for the same time in the whole of the United States exceeded a quarter billion dollars. The chief causes of fire in this country were: Defective chimneys and flues, sparks on the roof, stoves, furnaces, boilers and their pipes, electricity, and matches—smoking. It is also stated that 15,000 lives are annually sacrificed by fire. Certainly we cannot begin too soon to use preventives. None of us know how soon we may be the victims of this careless way of using fire.

The Turks Win Again.—

The outstanding note of all comment in the newspapers on the signing of the Near East peace treaty at Lusanne is a frank admission of Turkey's complete diplomatic victory over the allies. The new treaty, nevertheless, is regarded by some commentators as a good one.

The Times describes the document as a model of generosity and justice, while the Daily Telegraph, which takes a gloomy view, expresses the opinion that if the treaty of Sevres had been ratified, the settlement created thereby would very soon have been shattered.

Friendship with Turkey is a more or less traditional policy of the British Conservative party, and in that quarter there was no disposition to claim over what Turkey gained. Elsewhere there were serious misgivings regarding the future, particularly as it pertains to Armenians and other Christians who remain under Turkey's dominion.

The Times says: "The part played by the genial American observer was mostly unacceptable, but when through the mouth of its diplomatic representative a government claim to intervene between a foreign government and a British company, that representative's task becomes not only ungrateful but unenviable."

On the Way to Russia.—

United States Senators Edwin F. Ladd, of North Dakota, and William H. King, of Utah, and Representative James A. Frear, of Wisconsin, who arrived here Tuesday, prepared to leave for Moscoe last Saturday via Warsaw.

The party, accompanied by an agricultural expert, an interpreter and his secretary, conferred with Colonel William N. Haskell, who is en route to Switzerland from Moscow, where he directed the operations of the American Relief Administration.

The party mapped out an itinerary which provides for spending the first week in Moscow. There they will charter a special car and go possibly as far as Siberia, returning along the course of the Volga. Then they will go to Armenia and Georgia, skirting the Black Sea to Odessa, thence to the Ukraine and Kiev and back to Moscow for another week before starting for home by way of Petrograd.

Senator King said that the party would investigate the Russian economic situation, and would also look into religious and political questions for their own enlightenment in the event that Russian affairs were discussed in the next Congress.

It is estimated that the trip will require six or seven weeks. The travelers brought about 800 pounds of their own canned food and a medicine chest, including "cootie" powder and clothing for all kinds of weather.

Wine at the Communion.—

Wine is still being used by some Churches for the Communion service. The United Presbyterian, of Pittsburgh, says: "Churches in the State of Pennsylvania used 61,239 gallons of wine during 1922, according to statistics compiled in the office of John T. Davis, State prohibition director. The records issued by Director Davis show the quantity of wine used by the different denominations for sacramental purposes for 1922 was as follows: Roman Catholic, 33,908; Jewish, 24,478; Lutherans, 1,140; Greek Catholics, 643; Episcopalians, 522; Orthodox Greek Catholics, 150; Plymouth Brethren, Gospel Hall Brethren, and other sects, 126; Baptists, 66; Presbyterians, 4; United Presbyterians, 0. Grape juice is a very good substitute for wine. What we need in observing the solemn feast of the Lord's Supper is not the spirit of alcohol in the wine, but the spirit of our blessed Lord in our hearts." We have some curiosity to know how some of the Churches used the amounts they claimed were necessary, for example the Roman Catholic Church. It should be remembered that the people are not given the wine in the Church in this service. Only the priests are allowed to drink it. We do not know the number of priests in the State, but we should think they were pretty well supplied with wine. We are glad to see that the great Presbyterian Church of that State used very little. Under present conditions, we wish that all of the Churches would follow the example of the United Presbyterian Church.

Will They Unite?—

A plan for the merging of the General Conferences of the Methodist Episcopal Church, North, and the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, separated since 1845, was adopted by the joint commission on unification. The plan will now go to the general and annual conferences of the Church for ratification.

Delegations from both branches, composing the membership of the joint commission, adopted the plans at separate meetings, after minor changes were made in the original plan submitted at Tuesday's meeting. Further changes were made by the joint commission, but they are said to be unimportant.

Early Ratification.

Members of the commission have predicted that legal formalities necessary to secure changes required in the constitutions of the two branches before reunion can be accomplished will be completed within two years. These formalities include ratification of these changes by both general conferences and the annual conferences, domestic and foreign, into which local Churches are grouped.

The action brought to an end the meeting of the joint commission, which opened Tuesday of last week, and was scheduled for four days.

Chief Advantage.

One outstanding advantage to be gained by the union is the opportunity provided to launch a Methodist program of world service, according to Bishop Edwin Dubose Mouzon, of Nashville, Tenn., chairman of the Southern commission. Through the missionary enterprise of both branches, Bishop Mouzon said, there are Methodist Episcopal Churches in almost every country. Exceptions are in Great Britain, Canada and Australia, where there are Wesleyan Methodist Churches.

Tentative plans have been made for the inauguration of the "world service program" at the conclusion of the Methodist Episcopal centenary movement, planned to cover a period of five years, ending in 1924.

The general conference of the Northern branch meets at Springfield, Mass., in May, 1924. The general conference of the Southern Church is not scheduled to meet until 1926, but the bishops of that branch are under instructions, given at its general conference last year, to call a special conference.

NOTES-PERSONALS

Mr. W. E. McClenny, of Suffolk, Va., recently elected historian of the Southern Christian Convention, paid a visit to THE SUN office Monday. He is in Richmond consulting the State Library.

Rev. J. W. Wellons, D. D., is now on a visit to friends in and near Franklinton, N. C. He is looking remarkably well, and it is wonderful to see how many hands he can shake in one day. It is a glorious sight to behold a man who knows how to grow old gracefully.

Our Porto Rican missionaries are taking a little summer rest in the Baptist Rest Home, which is located on the crest of the mountain in some part of Porto Rica. Their post-office address during their vacation will be Las Cruces de Cayey, Porto Rico. However, mail sent to Ponce, Porto Rico, will reach them.

The Virginia Valley Central Conference will meet in its seventy-fifth annual session with the Church at Timber Ridge, Hampshire County, Va., on August 14-15, 1923. Rev. A. W. Andes is pastor of the Church. His post-office address is Harrisonburg, Va. Let all of the Churches of the Virginia Valley Central Conference be represented by delegates.

Bro. Ollie V. Casks, Elberon, Va., who is secretary of the pastoral committee for the Dendron pastorate, says that field needs a man for 1924. They wish a man who can locate on the field and give his time to the work of building up the Churches of that pastorate. Though this field is not a place for mere play, yet we regard it as a good field. This pastorate has a good parsonage located in the village of Dendron, Va.

We wish every reader of THE CHRISTIAN SUN may follow each week the articles from Mr. S. D. Gordon, on "The Simple Essentials." Mr. Gordon is a writer of international reputation, and a man of fine spiritual conceptions of the Christian life. He is the author of a large number of books. We mention these items only to give our readers, who may not know much of him, the assurance that his articles are well worth your careful attention. Do not miss one of them.

Miss Alice Barrett, a daughter of Rev. D. P. Barrett, one of our missionaries to Porto Rico, last week finished her summer course of study in the Normal College in Greensboro, N. C., which she has taken so as to make sure of finishing her work at Elon next year. Miss Olyn Barrett, a sister of Miss Alice, who spent last term in Elon, has returned to Porto Rico, where she will spend a year in teaching before she returns to Elon to finish her course.

We are glad to know that our beloved brother, Chaplain Rountree, is now located in the Navy Yard at Portsmouth, Va. We rejoice to have him so near our work and in his old camping-ground. We are sure it feels good to get back among his own people and to get out of the hot country in which he has for quite a while been living. Then, too, as we understand it, he can have his family with him, or very near him. We welcome you home, Chaplain.

In referring to the place of rest to which our Porto Rican missionaries—at least a part of them—are now taking their vacation, Rev. D. P. Barrett says: "We are on the top of the mountains, and yet in a basin and in the center of quite a high peak. We are sitting right on the top, and yet comfortably surrounded by mountains in the distance, so there is no lack of breezes nor showers. We are enveloped in the clouds nearly all the time. I guess it has rained at least a dozen times today, and yet altogether it has not rained much. It is cool, quiet and restful. Wish you were here to spend the time with us. You could rest and grow fat. Besides, you would be inspired to write of Porto Rican hills. We are about sixty miles from Ponce. Bro. Romero, the young man from the seminary, is in charge of our work in our absence, so I think all is going well."

"The First Intermediate Society of the Peninsula" is the name proudly born by the Intermediate Christian Eindeavor Society of the Newport News Christian Church. Mrs. T. G. Hyatte is the efficient superintendent, and as one of her intermediates says: "Our superintendent is fine, and I don't think we could find a better one if we looked all over the United States." The society has thirty active and fifteen preparatory members, and the attendance is almost 100 per cent every Sunday. An absent member always sends a verse of Scripture to be read when His name is called. Thursday, July 5th, this society held a fellowship banquet, with Mr. W. H. Baker, Mr. Adams, and the vice-president of Christian Endeavor of the State, and others as speakers. This is a busy society, doing much for Christ and the Church.

We are glad to note the fact that our neighbor, the Religious Herald, is coming out quite positively in favor of the fundamentalists. We believe he is doing the right thing. If the fundamentalists are right, as we think they are in the main, then they deserve the help and sympathy of all men who are true to the great fundamentals of the Christian faith. Referring to the annual address delivered by President Mullins before the Southern Baptist Convention last May, the Herald says: "Every fundamentalist was loud in his praise of the address. All the adverse comments came from the modernists or the evolutionists, the people who have been fighting the fundamentalists and clouding the issue by saying that the trouble in the Northern Convention is between the pre- and the post-millennialists. * * * The fundamentalists are earnestly contending for the old Baptist doctrines, while the modernists are denying the great historic doctrines of the Baptists." That has the right ring to it, and puts the Herald just where we have felt all along that it belongs. We believe the day has come when a person who is true to the Bible should stand for the truth as it is in Christ.

"I want to present to you a statement of the faith that is in me today. This is the time of great religious unrest. The Church must move with the times. It is a living organism, and it must break traditional ties that bind and hamper it. Our practice of excluding members of other denominations, unless they are baptized again in our rite is out of harmony with the spirit of unity that is growing in the Churches. We have already opened our Communion table to other Christians, and this proposed step follows logically. Do you suppose that in heaven, when Communion is celebrated, John Calvin, John Knox, John and Charles Wesley, and other great leaders of the non-Baptist world, will be denied the privilege of sitting down with the Baptists?" —Rev. Cornelius Woelfkin, N. Y. City, a real modernist. Look a-here, Dr. Woelfkin, your ideal of fellowship among the Churches, to us, seems inviting, but when we know that this rank modernism is the basis of that fellowship, we wish to ask you a question: Do you think when you come to the judgment bar of God that He will allow you to cut His Word to pieces and leave out its teachings on inspiration, on the supernatural, on the atonement, on the virgin birth of Jesus Christ, on the inerrancy of the Word, on the truthfulness of Genesis as to the account of the creation? Then, if He will not allow you to do it there, do you not think you will be wise not to try to do it here?

THE PRAYER OF ONE GROWING OLD.

Be with me, Lord! My home is growing still,
As one by one the guests go out the door;
And they who helped me once to do Thy will
Behold and praise Thee on the heavenly shore.

Uphold my strength! My task is not yet done,
Nor let me at my labor cease to sing;
But from the rising to the setting sun
Each faithful hour do service for my King.

Show me Thy light! Let not my wearied eyes
Miss the fresh glory of the passing day;
But keep the light of morn—the sweet surprise
Of each new blessing that attends my way.

And, for the crowning grace! O Lord, renew
The best of gifts Thy best of saints have had;
With the great joy of Christ my heart endure,
And then with Thee my heart shall e'er be glad!

MONUMENTAL CLEVERNESS.

BY HOWARD W. POPE.

A clever Jew did meet a friend,
Who once was his old crone.
He said, "Why Abram, who did send
That very handsome stone?"

For in his scarf he proudly wore
A sparkling diamond pin,
Whose value would enrich one more
Than all the wealth of kin.

He said, "A friend who died of late,
And one of our rich Jews,
Asked me to settle his estate,
And I could not refuse."

"And one provision of his will
Called for a monument,
To cost a fortune, by the bill,
And his wealth represent."

"But what has that"—the friend did cry,
"To do with the diamond sent?"
"Why that," old Abram did reply,
"That—is the monument."

Questions and Answers.

Question.—I do not wish to be hard on preachers, but I do think we ought to get better results from the pulpits of our country than we do now seem to be getting. We have able men in the ministry, why can we not get better results therefrom?—Johnson.

There is a reason. In some pulpits we do get pretty good results, but in others we get almost nothing. The difference is due, as we believe, to the fact one minister gives himself to his work whole-heartedly, while the other spends too much time on the goods box, whittling nothing and telling jokes. No man can do well in the pulpit unless there are two things in his life: (1) He must be a praying man; (2) he must be a student, and give himself to God unreservedly, and then do his best to feed the people with the finest wheat in the Word. Too many ministers are careless of their study, and too many neglect the season of prayer. A man who will not study, will be far below an interesting speaker, and his subjects generally will be hackneyed, worn out by others before he even starts to speak, and then his congregation will grow smaller as the days come and go. To make a truth so clear that men cannot fail to understand, it is not an easy task, but that is the work of the preacher, and if he does not study, he cannot make his sermons interesting or helpful to his hearers, and in that case, then he will soon lose his hold on the love and sympathy of his people. The sermon needs to be clear, as the following story will illustrate. It is from the Watchman and Examiner, as follows: "An exchange has the following story: A minister preached on 1 Cor. 13:1. The reporter for the daily paper, strangely enough, got it right, but the linotype operator, in setting the word 'charity,' made the mistake of using 'l' instead of an 'h,' and the proofreader overlooked it. So the minister was reported in the morning paper as having preached from the following text: 'Though I speak with the tongues of men and of angels, and have not clarity, I am become as sounding brass, or a tinkling cymbal.' Commenting on the story, the editor says: 'As it appears in print it was not New Testament truth, but it was truth, nevertheless. The people want the preacher to be luminous rather than voluminous, and the preacher who is without clarity will soon be without a congregation. So, whether we like it or not, such are the conditions which confront us in these busy days with their many duties. And we must either meet the conditions of our own generation or fail to serve it.'"

Question.—What is meant by the sealing of the Spirit, as expressed in Eph. 1:13 and 4:30?

The last clause of Eph. 1:13 reads: "After that, ye believed, ye were sealed with the Holy Spirit of promise." The verse in Eph. 4:30 reads: "And grieve not the Holy Spirit of God, whereby ye are sealed unto the day of redemption."

It is desired that we may explain what is meant in these verses by the sealing of the Spirit. We are glad to do our best for the readers of THE SUN, as this subject has been so woefully neglected in modern times. When Peter opened the door of the Church to the Gentiles, as set forth in Acts 10, the Holy Spirit, without delay or other conditions, except faith, was given to as many as believed, as set forth in Acts 10:44, 11:15-18. This gift became permanent inheritance of believers throughout the Church-age. Now, let us keep in mind this fact: there is but one baptism of the Spirit, although there are many fillings. That is to say, when a person, a believer, is once baptized of the Spirit, that is a permanent work, but there may be as many fillings of the Spirit as we may need. As to what is the sealing of the Spirit, let me say: Every believer is born of the Spirit (see John 3:3, 6:1; John 5:1). Every believer is indwelt by the Spirit. This is especially true, since the body of the true believer is the temple of the Spirit (see 1 Cor. 6:19; Rom. 8:9-15; 1 John 2:27; Gal. 4:6). The true believer is baptized by the Spirit (see 1 Cor. 12:12, 13; 1 John 2:20, 27). This is what seems to constitute the sealing of the Spirit. Do you know what the sealing of the Spirit signifies? When we seal a package, it is ready to go. The same is true of a letter. So when the believer is sealed, he is ready for the Lord's service. So you may say that the believer is sealed when he has the approval of the Spirit. But when you grieve the Spirit, you have not his approval, and, not having his approval, he goes not with you to service.

Question.—What is spiritual death? Does it mean the annihilation of the soul?—G. H.

No, I think it does not mean the annihilation of the soul, but rather separation from God. Do you ask, then, if that is all it means, why do you call it death? Because God is the source of all life, and when we are taken away from God we are said to be dead because we are separated from all life. Death, therefore, does not mean that we cease to exist, that the personality is extinct. The rich man was in hell, but he had not ceased to exist. He was dead to all spiritual life, but alive to suffering.

Question.—What is understood by the term, adoption, so much used by Paul?

In Eph. 1:5, we read: "Having predestinated us unto the adoption of children by Jesus Christ," etc. Well, we are told that adoption means becoming a son, and that means not so much the believer's relationship to God as it indicates the position of the believer. The relation of the believer comes from the fact that he has been born again, that he has experienced the new birth. Adoption, then, becomes that act of God by which one, through redemption from the law, is placed in the position of an adult son—one who, by reason of his maturity, yields obedience to God, not so much because he must as because he loves to do so; it is a pleasure to do so. Then, have you been adopted into the family of God? If so, you may know it by the fact that you delight to do His will—you serve, not because you must do so, but because it is a pleasure to do so.

Question.—When one has been baptized of the Spirit, what has such an one received that he did not have before?—J. T. J.

The baptism of the Holy Spirit, as I think, unites him to Christ for the larger service and the more fruitful life. Union with Christ is a necessity for the Christian who is to be fruitful in life and service. If you cut a branch from the tree, that branch will bear no more fruit. Why not? Because it has been separated from the source of life on which it depends, not for its being, but for its fruitfulness in Christian service. We reach this union through the reading and careful study of the Word, and living the prayer-life. With a cold and an indifferent life, you cannot maintain union with Christ. It is useless to expect it. If, however, you will diligently seek to live a devout and truly spiritual life, then you may expect to attain unto a living union with Christ, and that will make your life count for something in Christian living and serving.

Question.—What is a Christian?—J. J. B.

Some one has given the following answer to this question: "Matter and form make a body; body and soul make a man; man and Christ make a Christian." Does that suit you? If not, tell us why not?

Question.—Does the Christian Church allow a candidate for baptism to choose which of the usual modes practiced among the leading denominations may be used in his individual case?—John Doe.

In the South, it does so allow. In the North and West, as well as in New England, there are ministers who will not baptize by any mode except immersion. However, there seems to be a change going on, in the West especially. In the Christian Advocate (Nashville, Tenn.), for June 29th, the editor of that paper, quoting from an article by Rev. Clarence Defur, in the Herald of Gospel Liberty, says: The spirit of democracy is growing in the Christian Church, and causing a good deal of disturbance. The mode of administering baptism and whose "conscience" is to be followed, that of the local Church, the candidate for baptism, or the minister who is to perform baptism, is one of the questions debated. A writer, Dr. Clarence Defur, writing for the Herald of Gospel Liberty, an organ of the Christian Church, published at Dayton, Ohio, tells in the following language what is not generally known among Methodist folks of the South: "However, a very interesting change has been in process for a number of years. The portion of our communion which has heretofore been strongly Baptist in view has rapidly changed in the last two decades to the practice of different forms for baptism. In the greater part of our past history, in portions referred to above, the number of ministers practicing immersion only in their ministrations were in the great majority. Now it is evident that there are but a very few who hold to that form only. The vast majority are willing to administer baptism in any way desired by the candidate. The chief point to be brought out in this paper is not that the Christian Church now practices different forms of administration for baptism, but rather that those few ministers left who understand that one form only should be adhered to are considered by many as out of harmony with the spirit and genius of the movement. New Testament democracy accords to every Christian the equal privilege of interpretation and practice so long as Christian character is maintained."

Question.—Which does the more harm in society and in the Church, the bold and daring blasphemer or the more decent sort of a man who dares to make fun of religion and laugh at piety?—Jason T.

Your question almost answers itself. The more decent sort of a man who laughs at piety and pokes fun at the thought of a religious life—he is the dangerous man in any community. Some one has said: "The worst influence in the world is not the bold blasphemer who is everlastingly shouting his defiance into the face of God. People generally are too decent to enjoy open and defiant blasphemy. The man who is doing the most harm is he who derides goodness and laughs at righteousness, and claims great credit because he is not deceived by religious hypocrasy. Just now it is popular to boldly trample upon all the sweet and holy characteristics of the race and to deny their existence. Even the philosophers of paganism believed in justice, and honor, and truth, and love, but these youthful, modern pretenders of learning, like clowns in a circus, run up and down in their mottled rig, laughing at everything that experience has taught us is holy."

HOW MAY OUR ENDS BE GAINED?

A people without an end to be gained cannot hope for much in life. Indeed, such a people would be almost beyond the touch of truth. With no end to be gained, what could we hope for? And if nothing to be hoped for, what can be the need for us as a people? We must have a work to do, and the work we must do will give us ample exercise in the Lord's vineyard.

We are thinking of the most prominent trait in the work of the Christian Church. What is it? Of course, the evangelization of the world is in some real sense our work, but so is it also the work of other bodies of the Lord's people, and we rejoice that it is so, but the Christian Church has had one distinctive work from the beginning of the work of O'Kelly, Haggard and others, which others did not make so prominent, and that is the union of the people of God. In more recent years it has come to pass that almost all the various denominations are talking and writing of the union of the people of God, and necessarily very much is being said that has in it little, if any, wisdom. Indeed, the opposite is true —much has been said that is not wise and does not help the work of the real unity of the people of God.

One of the points implied in much that is said of the unity of the Church of Christ is union regardless of harmony in the faith. This can never be wise, and for the reason that if we sacrifice the fundamentals in the faith there will be nothing to hold together the united Church of Christ, and such a union would more quickly destroy the power and fruitfulness of the Church of Christ than would our lack of unity. Faith is an adhesive, and as such it holds together the people who hold it in common. The strongest and most fruitful denominations in the land today are the bodies of believers who hold most surely to certain tenets of doctrine. This is significant. It is just as true that the Churches which have been most ready to accept people in their fellowship, regardless of their peculiar beliefs, have been the slowest in growth and large usefulness.

Let us suppose a case: If the Methodist, the Baptist and the Presbyterian denominations, together with the Episcopalians and the Lutherans, would agree, for the sake of union, to come together by agreeing to be silent on the fundamental doctrines held by each, how long do you suppose the united body would stand? We think it would stand about as long as Jack stayed in the army. If you begin to compromise faith, where may we hope to end the matter of compromising? We may compromise till destruction is the result, and then what have we gained by compromise? Not a thing, except the ruin of what we did have.

Let us advocate union; that is the way to bring it about, if it can be done at all, but let us not advocate it by the sacrifice of fundamental truth. Take away fundamental truth, and the power of Christianity is gone; not only so, but the power of the denominational life will be a thing of the past and fruitfulness will die when it has no basis of truth. It is all very well to advocate the unity of the faith, but the faith must be maintained, or we shall have nothing left. What would a spineless man be worth? And what would a spineless Christianity be worth? It could not stand, it could not bear burdens, it could not suffer and endure persecution, it could not go out and plant the Gospel in heathen lands. And what would be the need of such a Christianity? We are not asking what would be the need of a real union of the people of God? Manifestly, there is a great need for the prayer of the Saviour to be answered as to the unity of His people. That is one thing and a very real thing; but it is quite another if, for the sake of union, we shall sacrifice many of the great fundamental truths of Christianity. Let it be understood, then, that we are for union of the people of God, when it can be accomplished on truth as its basis —not the truth of sectarians, or of Bolshevism, but when the people of God can unite on the fundamental truths of Christianity as a basis of union, then we shall say let us sing—

"Praise God, from whom all blessings flow."

But till then, we shall have to go slow, for we are fully convinced that a union without truth as a basis would be ineffective and injurious to the cause of Christ. Brethren, let us labor for union, and let us join Jesus in praying for it, but let us not seek it apart from the right basis. Union otherwise would be a spineless affair, and would accomplish only harm.

The editor of the Presbyterian of the South has recently given some very sensible thoughts along this line, and we republish them for our readers, as follows:

Unity is a subject much discussed and much written about in these days, and we often wonder whether those who discuss the subject stop to consider the meaning of the term. There can be no question that our Saviour prayed for unity in His Church, but so far as we have ever seen in our study of the Scriptures, He nowhere offered a prayer for uniformity. The Christian Register says on this subject:

"Do we not have a deal of eloquent mush about unity, especially interchurch and intrachurch unity? Let us be careful how we use the word, and let us be sure we are seeking the real thing. What passes for unity in most cases among the fervid brethren is a lazy and impossible, not to say utterly dishonorable, agreement to keep quiet about many things, whether important or unimportant, just because they make for difference of opinion and for controversy. Unity means a goodly feeling toward one another, without any respect whatever for the fact, proved by every man's experience, that unless feeling be given substance by means of ideas, it is flat and flabby affection. Far apart in thought cannot mean close together in fellowship.

"Some think of unity also as a mystical, vague, indefinable something that is peculiarly spiritual, a gift of God, which we need but acknowledge, and, lo! all is lovely here. The unity extremists are like the pacifists. Unity at any price is as bad as peace at any price.

"Compromise—there is the worst sin of the usual seeker of unity. It never gets its followers anywhere, or the Churches anywhere, but into a bog. Unity is genuine and effectual when it is based upon agreements moral, spiritual, and doctrinal. So long as there is disagreement upon a matter either essential or regarded as essential by either party, unity cannot abide. As a matter of fact, the standard is never unity, as it is never peace. The standard is truth and right. Follow after these and ultimately unity may come. Unity is an effect, not a principle."

WHAT DO THE SCIENTISTS SAY?

One of the strangest things in human experience is the fact that if an error gets a stronghold on the human mind, it seems quite impossible to show that mind its error. "Stick to it" is the motto of men and women who once fall into error. They seem to feel that to give it up would be the same as admitting that they were wrong, and that is a hard thing for many of us to do, in the face of the wrong into which we have fellen. This is true not only in one department of life's activities, but everywhere and in all the spheres of human thought. We do not like to confess that we are wrong—it is humiliating, and not many people are willing to be humiliated, even for the sake of truth and righteousness. Beloved, this ought not so to be. If one is in the wrong, no amount of effort to conceal that fact will atone for the wrong that is in the act. Let us rejoice and be glad that there are some men, even some scientists, who are willing, for the sake of truth and right, to make confession of error, even though it expose themselves.

An exchange tells us of instances when such confession has been made, but the little fellows who are following the big men find it very hard to admit that their leaders have been in the wrong and have made confession to that effect. Our confrere says:

"Evolution does not seem to have a very firm hold upon its advocates. It has not been many years since it was taught in most European institutions of learning, and the world was told that 'all men of science' held this theory as true. The Toronto Presbyterian says: 'According to Haeckel, a multitude of scientists in Germany, nearly all in France and Switzerland, and most of those in England have thrown off the trammels of material evolution as a real hindrance to true science.' As it is being given up in Europe, this unfounded theory is being taken up in this country, as though it were scientifically established, and yet no one has ever been able to show that it is more than a theory. This is not the first time that America has put on the cast-off garments of the European schools. We believe that those who are now teaching that theory in this country will lay it aside more quickly than they took it up. The American mind is too practical to hold on long to a theory that is not thoroughly supported by undisputed facts."

Now, you watch and see if our little men who are followers of Darwin make any admission of error, notwithstanding the leaders, at least many of them, admit that they are in error as to evolution. It may be that these dear men are so busy in reading what their old masters said in the long ago that they have not yet found out the change that has come over their leaders. Better wake up and see what is going on in the world!

UP ON HIGHER GROUNDS.

Being considered the greatest Christian nation in the world, ought we not to be able to set an example for the beginning to be Christian nations of the lands of heathen darkness? Most certainly we need to get up on higher ground than we now occupy. Some even plead for a low standard of Christian life here among us. Had you asked yourself the question, "Will maintaining a low standard of the Christian life get us anywhere?" We believe it will; it will get us to live with, and like, the world about us. But that is not the need of this hour—we need to live up in the highest atmosphere of real Christian teaching and service. It seems, however, that there is a real disposition to let us down in Christian experience in its lowest stages. Every man and woman of common, every-day experience must know that such a let-down ideal of the Christian life cannot get us anywhere except down into the lowlands of indifference and ignorance of God and truth. We need to awake and get busy to show men and women and boys and girls the heights of real Christian experience.. If we never show it to them, they will most likely never aspire to live up there in the sunlight of God, and if we do not aspire to live up there, we shall certainly never live there, and that means loss beyond our ability to estimate.

We once heard a minister put in a plea for a lower standard of Christian experience. It was not long after that that we met a very prominent man of his congregation, and he was indirectly pleading for the same thing. What a pity! As the preacher pleads, so will the laymen of his congregation plead. Brethren, what can we hope for in the way of a Church filled with the spirit of Christ if we encourage people to be satisfied with a very low Christian experience?

Why, the people who have been brought to Christ in heathen lands are away ahead of us in seeking and receiving a much higher standard of the Christian life. Take Korea; and only a little while ago it was in dark heathenism, but now, in a few short years, they are leading the way to a much higher experience in the Christian life than some of us are commending to the people at home, both by our teaching and living.

One of our best exchanges has a timely word as to this matter. It says:

"Ashamed, a massionary said he was, to tell the native Christians among whom he works of the spiritual condition of the Church in the home land. In Korea, for example, the Christians are far more devout in many ways than most Christians in this country. The Koreans, under a rule of their own, will not allow any one to join the Church until he has shown his faith by his works, at least to the extent of winning one soul for Christ. Every man in the Korean Church leads in public prayer. It is a rare exception to find a Christian home that does not have daily family worship. Almost every Christian is an active personal worker for the salvation of others. They are exceedingly faithful in attendance upon Church services. They are great Bible students, large numbers of them spending from two to six weeks at Bible institutes studying under the leadership of the missionaries. When there is need for it, they make any sacrifice that is necessary and stand any amount of persecution. When a missionary is called upon to contrast this condition of affairs with the conditions he finds in the home Church when at home on a furlough, is it surprising that he is not willing to tell the Korean Christians about conditions in the American Church? And yet, is the Korean standard any higher than the American Christian can reach if he is thoroughly consecrated to God?"

IT IS ABOUT THE ONLY CHANCE.

We have a good deal to say now and then of the drunkard and his chances for the salvation of his soul. There is but one chance, ordinarily. Prohibition must prevail in order to give that one chance. As long as a man stays drunk, we cannot expect him either to repent of his sins or to turn to Christ for His saving power. As long as we allow whiskey to stay in the way of the drunkard, we need not expect the man to be converted. Whiskey and conversion do not go together. If you wish a man to be converted, whiskey should be taken out of his way.

Some people are saying: "You cannot legislate goodness into men." That is true, but you can take an evil thing out of the way of the man who cannot be reached while the evil is in his way. Liquor is a good illustration of this fact. You cannot make a man good directly by legislation, but by legislation you can remove a thing out of the way of the man and so give him a much better chance to find his way to Christ and to salvation through taking liquor out of his reach. Prohibition, when properly enforced, can take liquor out of the way of a man so that he can find his way to the foot of the cross and to Christ. If this country is to become a Christian country in fact, then we must keep whiskey out of the way of the men and women who cannot withstand the temptation which it brings to their pathway. Let us do everything we can do honorably to keep liquor out of the way of the drinking people, that they may become Christian.

The Alliance Weekly has a timely word to say along this line, as follows:

"The task is stupendous, and, to fully and perfectly accomplish it, impossible. The depraved appetites of fallen man, the evil propensities of the human heart are not reckoned within human legislation and its application to society and nations. Thank God for every advance toward sobriety, honesty and betterment of society, but only the regenerating power of the Gospel of His Son will change the individual and eventually bring about a new earth, wherein there will be 'no more curse.'"

Doubtless, the Weekly is right when it says that only the regenerating power of the Gospel of His Son will change the man from his vile nature, his depraved appetite, to make him a Christian. We believe that statement, but the point we make is that when prohibition has taken liquor out of the way of the drinking man, the poor drunken man has a much better chance to accept Christ as his Saviour. The man who is full of liquor cannot at the same time be full of Christ. Take liquor out of the way of the men and women who love it, and then they certainly have a much better chance to turn to Christ for salvation. Let us keep liquor out of this country for the sake of the poor weak men who cannot resist it as long as it is where they can get it.

A REVELATION OF ANCIENT RICHES.

These be the days of wonder, both ancient and modern. The genius and skill of man seems never to fail in bringing to the attention of the people of the twentieth century the marvels of discovery and skill, and while this sort of surprises are getting to be common, we are also getting to be acquainted with some of the wonders of ancient times through the help of the excavator's spade. The Presbyterian Banner tells us of a very remarkable discovery recently made in an excavation which is going on in the old world. We republish the Banner's account as of more than ordinary interest to all of our readers, as follows:

"The traveler in Italy sees the excavation still going on at Pompeii, by which the scoriae of ancient Vesuvian eruption are being carefully removed from the buried city. It is never known at what stroke the pick or shovel will uncover some relic of great interest and priceless worth. Reports were made recently that workmen who were digging for a foundation of a new building outside the area of the buried city found a body of a woman which had been petrified. Both hands were full of jewels. Evidently the woman fled from the eruption of the fateful mountain and was caught and buried in the downpour of hot ashes. The jewels are excellently preserved, having been protected from the lava by the body. They consist of bracelets, necklaces, rings, amulets studded with gems, and a pair of earrings, which are probably unique. They may be the most valuable specimens of ancient jewelry ever discovered. Each earring contains twenty-one perfect pearls set in gold in imitation of a bunch of grapes. What a tragedy is revealed in that petrified corpse still grasping those jewels in its hand! The oncoming rush of darkness and ashes, the probable delay to secure the jewels, the attempted escape with the precious treasure closly gripped in the hand, the deluge of burning scoriae that finally overwhelmed the unhappy woman—all is laid bare by the spade as though it happened but yesterday. And is not the same fate overtaking many in this day? How many are searching for and grasping after jewels and gold, wealth and fashion and pleasure, while careless of their souls and the oncoming judgment?"

The poor woman who is mentioned in this remarkable account evidently lost her life by trying to save the vain and perishing things of earth—jewelry! And we say: "Poor woman, what a pity that she did not lose her jewelry rather than lose her life in losing of her jewelry." As it was, she lost her jewelry and her life too, when, if she had promptly given up her jewels, she might have saved her own life. But that is the way it is with men and women who love this world too well. We hold on to earth as with a death grip, and then we lose all the earth and our own souls as well. Let us learn to flee to the outstretched arms of mercy before it is too late, and while we may.

YOU NEED NOT BE SURPRISED.

When a man turns loose the fundamental truths of the Gospel, you need not be surprised at any turn which he may take. He is as likely to go one way as another. You may think we are going to extremes in this assertion, but you wait and see—see if we are not right. By the way, here is partial proof now, already at hand. Rev. Cornelius Woelfkin, a Baptist minister, has given up the old strongholds of the Baptists, and now he is flopping around with almost no place to stand. Hear him in proof of what we say: "We need greater tolerance of the various sects, isms and fads that are springing up about the fringes of the older Churches. I do not regard them as heretical. They are the result of spiritual urge on the part of the people who are seeking what they think the Church cannot furnish them. Sir Oliver Lodge is one of the outstanding physicists of his generation, and he is trying earnestly to lift the veil. So also is Conan Doyle, eminent and high-minded man. The healing movements, Christian Science and the others, are practicing a lost function of the Church which the Church should regain. I am a modernist, out and out, as opposed to fundamentalists and traditionalists. I am a democrat in religion. I am in step with Dr. Fosdick. I am an evolutionist, which is to say, I disagree with William Jennings Bryan, and accept the theory of evolution as a reasonable hypothesis." Well, now, that is plain enough. We told you that when one of these men became a modernist, you might expect him to turn up almost anywhere, and there is the proof. Dr. Woelfkin has long been regarded as a leading Baptist, but now he has become a modernist, and he is in favor of the whole crowd of them who do not hold to the Word strictly. Do you see what he favors? Sir Oliver Lodge and Conan Doyle are both out and out spiritualists, and Dr. Woelfkin seems to take them in; then there is the healing movements, Christian Science and the others, and he seems to give place to them all. What a change! How are the mighty fallen! and we believe it is all because he has become a modernist—for they can swallow almost anything, if it only be out of line with the Word of God. Alas! I would rather be a Baptist right than to be such a mollycoddle as that. Do let me believe something, rather than anything or nothing.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

There are nameless worthies, and there are worthies that may be named with respect and honor. Two men have recently passed over the river, and I cherish their memory for their works' sake. I am sure that readers will pardon personal sentiment and honest judgment combined in a brief tribute to both of them.

John D. Gray was born in Sussex County, Del., in 1870, came to Virginia with his parents in 1884, at the age of 14, and entered the lumber business with his father and brothers in Nansemond County. Later they were engaged in the lumber business in Southampton County; and still later they located in Sussex County and continued in the same business with marked success. The business had grown into two branches—one the Gray Lumber Company, Waverly, Va.; the other Gray Bros., of Ivor, Va. Mr. Gray was married to Miss Mary Johnson, of Isle of Wight County, by this writer, and they have three children—Col. Marvin L., A. Landon, and Miss Alvah. Mr. Gray is also survived by one sister, Mrs. P. Fleetwood, and two brothers, E. L. and H. A., all of Waverly. For thirty years these brothers had been partners in business.

Mr. Gray was a member, deacon and Sunday School teacher in Waverly Christian Church, of which Rev. J. L. Foster is pastor. He was also a valued member of the board of trustees of Elon College. His home life, his business life, and his Church life all shared in his thought, his service, and his love. Modesty was his chief characteristic, while sound judgment and strength of character gave beauty and usefulness to his life. He passed away in the early morning of July 14th and was buried Sunday afternoon in Waverly Cemetery after a brief service in the home. The throng was immense, sympathetic, and reverent. Mill employees were the active pallbearers, and friends the honorary ones, bearing the numerous floral designs of great beauty from the residence and to the grave. The male quartet rendered music at the residence and the cemetery. The atmosphere was surcharged with sympathy for the family and the community, and at the same time all felt that Waverly was honored by such a life. The family, employees, and the throng seemed to share in the same feeling of grief and pride. I stood at the marriage altar and at the grave, and between the two were twenty-eight years of domestic happiness, business success, and Christian service.

I had hardly recovered from the shock of Mr. Gray's death till I received a wire that another friend of the same age had passed away and would be buried the 17th. I wired John M. Cook that I would come. It was another throng in Burlington, N. C.; another pile of floral beauty, music, and a weeping family, with a multitude of friends. Col. Robert L. Holt, a pupil of mine when he was a boy, a very successful cotton manufacturer, and a liberal friend of Elon College. He owned and operated Glencoe Cotton Mills, on Haw River, a favorite with all classes in Alamance County, and led the way for the hundred-thousand-dollar building as the gift of Alamance to Elon College after the fire. He was also chairman of the building committee, and enthusiastic in the welfare of the college. He was never married, but gave his life to business and philanthropic deeds. His grandfather, E. M. Holt, built the first cotton mill south of Mason and Dixon line, and his descendants have engaged in this business, with success, for many years.

Elon has lost two friends in the death of Mr. Gray and Mr. Holt.

ELON LETTER.

Last week I had a word of appreciation for an Elon trustee and loyal friend, Bro. J. D. Gray, who had been called to his reward in the prime of life and usefulness.

Bro. John A. Mills, Raleigh, N. C., for many years treasurer of the Southern Christian Convention and Elon trustee, fell sick on May 21st. He went to John Hopkins Hospital and was reported as doing well, when just as he was about to gladden the hearts of his friends by a return to his home, he was taken suddenly ill again and passed away on July 13th in Baltimore. Bro. Mills was a splendid type of business man. He never got angry. No provocation seemed to disturb his smile. He was a real captain of industry, succeeding in various lines of endeavor. His most notable industrial achievement was the building of the Raleigh and Southport Railroad, now the Norfolk Southern. In many ways, Bro. Mills showed his deep interest in Elon, and the last time I saw him he made a substantial donation to the emergency fund. The reality of the spiritual world was a vital conviction of Bro. Mills. He believed in it with all his exuberant enthusiasm. To him the doctrine of immortality was more than a hope—it was a practice as well.

Our third friend to pass away was Col. Robt. L. Holt, who, in his fifty-seventh year, passed to his reward on July 15th. I was returning from Bro. Gray's funeral when word reached me of Colonel Holt's sudden decease. In this man's taking away in the prime of manhood and usefulness, Elon has sustained a severe loss. "Col. Bob," as he was intimately known, was not a member of the Christian Church, but you would never have known it from the vital concern he took in the life and development of the college. I have talked with him for hours at the time about the plans and aspirations of our college, and he never seemed to tire of the subject.

Col. Holt was, like Bros. Gray and Mills, the highest type of business man, clean, courageous, forward-looking, kind-hearted. His employees respected and loved him, and those who knew him best valued him most highly. His old colored servant, Richard, who had cared for his personal comforts for nearly thirty years (for Col. Holt was a bachelor), attended the funeral and sat with the family. This is exactly as Col. Holt would have wished it. In his will he made ample provision for Richard's old age. Such thoughtfulnesses were as natural to Col. Holt as was breathing.

Elon College, in his death, has lost a benevolent benefactor and a sympathetic friend. Years ago his liberality to Elon began, and he was never sought for assistance but that ready response was forthcoming. In this present crisis it was he who headed the Alamance County committee as general chairman and who made the first subscription to the Alamance building fund. On that stormy night on the 19th of January following our disaster here, when a group of interested friends met in the City Hall in Burlington to express their sorrow and sympathy, it was he who rose to his feet and, in simple language, declared he was sorry for Elon, and that he was sorry $5,000 worth. From that day to the day of his death he did not spare himself to help this college in its crisis.

When the board of trustees met to appoint a building committee, they had no choice in their judgment but to ask Col. Holt to serve on this committee. He accepted the appointment with readiness and attended every meeting of the building committee to which he was summoned. His rare business insight and excellent judgment have been worth many thousands of dollars to the college in the contracts for the new building program.

Elon College has suffered in his death a deep and abiding heart-wound, and, personally, the writer has lost one of his most valued and sympathetic friends. It will be a long day in Alamance before another arises to take the place of this splendid Christian gentleman who has, in the providence of God, fallen in life's battle at the point where it seemed his splendid life was most useful to his fellow-citizens and the cause of righteousness. Long will Elon mourn the loss of this good friend, who cherished larger things for her as a fundamental tenet of his life-creed.

A SHAMEFUL PRACTICE AMONG SOME MEN AND WOMEN.

We are sorry for them, but they ought to be more reasonable and thoughtful than to so pervert the truth as is done in many instances. Truth should always be respected, to say the least.

It seems to be a weakness on the part of many to do their best to reflect in some insinuating way on the motives of persons with whom they have no intimate acquaintance. Alas! How perverse is the human heart when left to itself! How it does revel in throwing off on another! How they do feast on perversions of facts!

Of this class of people, perhaps the most blameworthy are the men and women who seem to take delight in making it appear that the people who are making an effort to go in the right direction are doing so through some unworthy motive. Now and then we hear of some person who seems to be making an honest effort to lead a better life, and then some old "croaker" lifts up his head and declares: "Yes, he is after the loaves and fishes!" Most likely the man has but one thing on which to base such a remark, and that is the baseness of his own heart.

One of the most common of these offenders against truth and right is the person who, hearing of the good work that is going on in heathen lands, proceeds to affirm that these converts in heathen lands are only the poor—the very poor—and that they are just after the loaves and fishes—after just what they can get out of the missionaries. And it seems to be done with a view to setting the friends of missions against supporting the work which the missionaries are doing in the name of Christ. We feel truly ashamed of the person who can be guilty of such a course toward the poor and helpless in heathen lands. No matter how rich they may be in temporal things, they are poor and helpless in the spiritual life, and need every possible help that can be given them, that they may be brought into the light of God and His truth.

It is a common thing to hear persons declare that the converts in the mission field, and especially in China, are converts to the "loaves and fishes." By that, they mean they are professing to become Christians only that they may be fed and clothed. They often declare that these people are not sincere, and they make these most serious charges in the face of the fact that they know nothing at all about the private lives of these people—their criticism is the outcome of their own evil hearts. We should like to see the test made as to which will stand for their faith in the hottest fires. Many of the converts in China have already gained a martyr's crown by standing for their faith. In the last twenty-five years, literally thousands and thousands of Chinese converts have laid down their lives for their faith rather than live, denying that faith. And yet these unthoughtful and unreasonable people at home who have never laid a foot on Chinese soil and never ever conversed with one of these new converts in his life, are saying these ugly and untruthful things of men and women who have laid down their lives, or who would do so if occasion demanded it any day. Not one of these "kickers" would hazard their lives for their own faith, so-called, and yet they can stand off and question the faith of other people whose shoes they are not worthy to unlatch. Men and women, if you cannot say something of things you know, it would be a thousand times better to say nothing, for if you tell a lie, it is just as much a lie as if a Chinese had told it, and it may be far more displeasing to God, because you, living in a Christian country, with the privileges of the Gospel, told it. God help us to be truthful, or to keep our mouths shut, especially when we are talking of things about which we know practically nothing. We are ashamed of people who lie on the poor heathen without excuse!

SHORT TALKS ON THE BOOKS OF THE BIBLE.

Deuteronomy, the Book of the Second Law Given Through Moses.

The more we study the books of the Bible as books, the more we see in each some special and great purpose of God. Deuteronomy is the book of the second law given for the special instruction of God's people. In Deut. 9:13-18, Moses lost his temper because the children of Israel had gone into idolatry by worshiping a golden calf. In his anger he took the two tables of stone on which the law had been written and cast them down so that they were broken. That took the law away from Israel, and that at a time when they specially needed the law for instruction, so the Lord had mercy upon them and gave them the law a second time. On this fact, the book of Deuteronomy is considered in a sense the second law given by the Lord to Israel through Moses. Many points were gained by this giving of the second law. It especially emphasized the importance of the law, as giving it the second time, indicated clearly that Israel had great need of the law for guidance to them in their life as the people of God. In this second copy of the law they were again and again reminded of the more important truths. Eighteen times the word "remember" was used to direct their attention to matters which were of the first importance.

Among the things that they were to remember was the keeping of the Sabbath day (Deut. 5:15; read it). There was one common thought that seemed to run through the book, and that was obedience. They were warned again and again of the necessity of obedience to the word of the Lord. Indeed, Israel was again reminded, just as they were about to enter the land of promise, that their entrance depended on their obedience to the law of the Lord. It seems almost beyond comprehension that the Lord should have been so concerned for Israel to enter the promised land as to keep urging them to be obedient, but it was most wise, for that was the condition under which they could enter. Indeed, that condition remains till this day, not merely for the Israelites, but for Christians also. Obedience to God is a fundamental in the faith of God's people, whether they be Jews or Christians.

In urging obedience, seven principles are set forth, and you may be sure these seven principles were of the highest importance. These are:

1. The Fatherhood of God and proprietorship in His people.
2. The duty of separation unto God and His service.
3. Worship was to be localized and centralized.
4. All idolatrous relics were to be destroyed.
5. All idolatrous acts were to be treated as-treason against God. Not only so, but such acts were to be punished as capital crimes.
6. All ethical relations were to be regulated by God's law.
7. The brotherhood of believers is implied in the Fatherhood of God.

As enforcing these principles upon Israelites, the words "commandments," statutes," etc., are very often found in the book of Deuteronomy—oftener than in any other part of the Bible, unless it be in the book of Psalms. One very strange thing is brought out. The law was to be inscribed on Mount Ebal, which was the Mount of the Curse. Possibly there were two reasons for this, viz: the disobedient would know where to find the law, and therefore could have no excuse for not knowing what was required of them. Again, the Mount of the Curse would be a continual reminder to the people of the fact that disobedience is followed by punishment. With the Israelites, obedience was a condition of temporal blessing. In the blessings promised, we do not find in the law the gift of eternal life. In the New Testament, this gift is promised (Rom. 6:23).

The first coming of the Christ is strongly hinted at in Deut. 18:15-19. Reference is also made to this promise in Acts 3:22, 23. Jesus knew of the teaching of the book of Deuteronomy, for when He was contending against Satan, as shown in Matt. 4, we see him using the teachings of Deut. 8:3, 6:16, 6:13.

In this second book of the law, three feasts were proclaimed, viz:

1. The Passover.
2. The Pentecost, or feast of weeks.
3. The Feast of Tabernacles.

The feast of the Passover is very suggestive, since it points the believer for rest to his relationship with God upon redemption by blood.

The feast of the Pentecost was the gathering of first-fruits, while the Feast of Tabernacles was the gathering of the full harvest. The three feasts are three in fact, but in their significance they are one, since they typify a completed redemption—first, by the passion of the cross; second, by the coming of the Holy Ghost; third, by the final triumph of the coming King. These feasts symbolize three distinct features of the mission of Christ, viz: suffering, as on the cross; grace, as in the free gift of God's favor; glory, as in the salvation of the soul. That is also typified in the full ingathering of the souls of the people.

The book of Deuteronomy is full of moral and spiritual truth, and will well repay a hunt for these gems—as they are gems of truth and light. The book is an enlargement of the first giving of the law, and, of course, brings to us many precious treasures of God's thought for His people. It is divided into eight parts, and each part is freighted with the thought of God for the uplift of His people. It is an added evidence of the fact that God clings to His people, that He may give them life, light and joy forever. How good He is to His people, that He never leaves them. We may leave Him now and then for a season, but He refuses to give us up so long as there is an opportunity to strive with us for the gaining of our salvation.

The eight divisions of the second book of the law are as follows:

1. Chaps. 1-4 set forth the wanderings of Israel in the wilderness. These wanderings were the outgrowth of their unbelief—the factor which has caused many wanderings in the Christian life.
2. Chapter 5, in which we have the direct rehearsal of the decalogue in which the great moral law of God was given to man. The moral law is yet in force, and should be observed. One may be moral and not a Christian, but you cannot be a Christian and not be moral.
3. Chapters 6-26 set forth the laws which were given for the conduct of the Israelites in Canaan, and that is a most important part of the law. The conduct of God's people always has a telling influence for righteousness. How many worldly Church members forget how wrong conduct weakens the cause of Christ by turning men and women away from the truth.
4. Chapters 27 and 28 give to us a list of the blessings of obedience, and also the list of punishments for disobedience.
5. Chapters 29 and 30 give us what is known as the Palestinian covenant between God and His people Israel, a covenant full of significance and instruction. It abounds in fine thoughts for the people of God in these early days of the twentieth century.
6. Chapters 31 and 32 tell us of the last counsels of Moses to the priests, the Levites and to Joshua, who was to be his successor. In chapter 32 is given the song of Moses, which has been the admiration of the ages, full of precious thoughts and big with comfort for the Lord's people.
7. Chapter 33 is full of special and final blessings for the tribes of Israel, in which the blessing for each individual tribe is named. To Reuben, the blessing was given in these words: "Let Reuben live, and not die; and let not his men be few." It will be a fine study if you will take your Bible and turn to Chapter 33 and study each blessing as it was given to the twelve tribes.
8. Chapter 34 gives us a vision of the death of Moses, how he went up from the plains of Moab unto Mount Nebo to the very top of Pisgah that lies off nearly east of Jericho, where the Lord showed him all the land of Gilead, even unto Dan. There, Moses, the servant of the Lord, died in the land of Moab, and there he was buried, but no man knoweth of his sepulchre unto this day. He was a hundred and twenty years old when he died, but his eye was not dim and his natural force was not abated. The life, as well as the death, of Moses was a wonder from the beginning to the ending, and it ended in wonder.

What a great book is Deuteronomy, full of the riches of true wisdom and constantly displaying God's love for His people.

FROM DR. D. A. LONG.

The Methodist, Baptist and other Christian people near Union Chapel, Mecklenburg County, Va., held a meeting at Union Chapel, beginning the third Sunday in this month. Rev. Mr. Robinson, pastor of the M. E. Church, South, at Jackson, N. C., did most of the preaching in a very able and acceptable way. Rev. Mr. Self, of the M. E. Church at Union Chapel, and Rev. Mr. Nelson, pastor of the Baptist Church at Norlina, attended and were very active in the good work. The fellowship was delightful, the hospitality was just what you might expect when Virginians and North Carolinians come together to worship.

Quite a number of converts. No hysterical appeals for money. Unanimously voted in favor of union meeting in 1924. Those who decided to unite with the Church at Mt. Auburn, will do so the second Sunday in August, 1923. I was called to serve Mt. Auburn, as pastor, for the next Conference year, and accepted on similar terms to those of this year. D. A. Long.

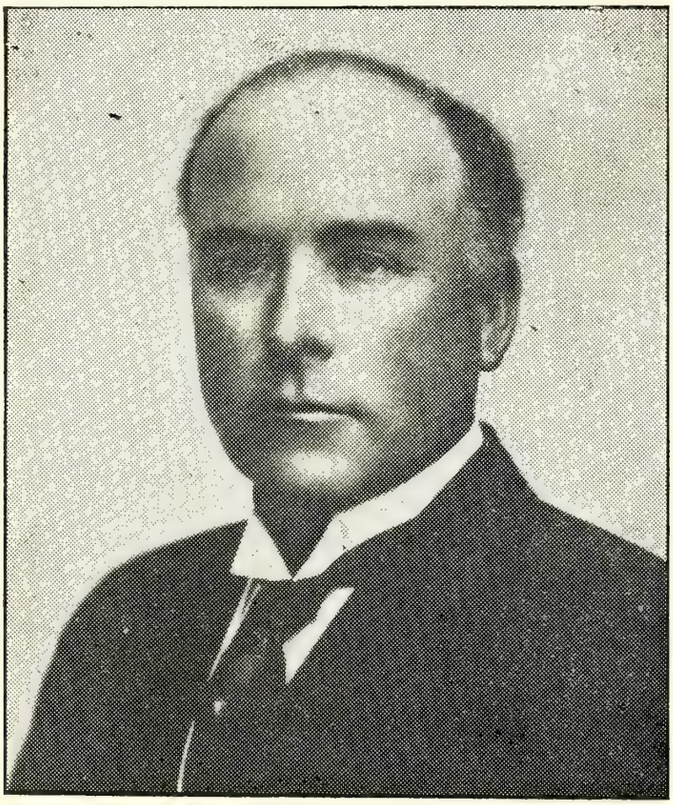
WHAT IS THE TRUTH ABOUT THE BIBLE AND SCIENCE?

By George W. McDaniel,

Pastor First Baptist Church, Richmond, Va.

"Thy Word is true from the beginning."—Psa. 119:16.

Christians who accept the Bible as the inspired and authoritative Word of God are hearing and reading disquieting things nowadays from religious sources. The names of renowned scientists are heralded from the pulpits as guides to truth, though such scientists disbelieve in the Saviourhood of Him who said, "I am the truth." One may hear pulpit utterances which make the impression that the agnostic, Huxley, is to be believed rather than Moses. It is urged that we must revise our interpretations of Genesis so as to adjust them to the theories of Darwin and Huxley. Neither of these men would so much as affirm the existence of God nor even that there was an intelligent purpose in nature. As to Moses, a process of criticism has been going on which denies his authorship of the Pentateuch; as to Darwin and Huxley, a practice of praise is taking place, which exalts them to positions of great teachers of divine truth. In fact, they were agnostics, as were their contemporaries, Spencer and Tyndall. Darwin had the greatest brain of the four. Though not the most logical, he was the most reverent. In the closing chapter of his "Origin of Species," he refers to the Creator and he did contribute to foreign missions. But after giving him all the credit he so richly deserves, it is a lamentable fact that his theories and pursuits landed him in agnosticism. Why do ministers eulogize the agnostics instead of the founders of modern science—Bacon, Kepler, Galileo, Harvey and Newton, who accepted the unity, order and progression of Genesis; who believed there was "mind," "thought," "almighty power," "design," "intelligence" and "an intelligent agent" in nature?



DR. GEORGE W. McDANIEL.

Be it remembered that the Christian is a lover of truth. He welcomes it from whatever source it comes. His attitude is that of cordiality. He with more seriousness, with a deeper sense of personal responsibility, with a finer loyalty to its answer than did Pilate in the judgment hall long has nothing to fear from truth. His concern is to know "what is truth." He asks that question ago.

The Christian holds that God revealed truth in the Bible. It is the Christian's textbook in morals and religion. By its precepts he is bidden to live and in the comfort of its promises he hopes to die. The Bible is the Christian's chart and compass on the sea of life. Without it he is driven and tossed by winds of false doctrine.

But, it is insistently averred, "The Bible is not a textbook on science." We agree that it is not; its main purpose is spiritual. Scientific facts are mentioned in popular language and only in their religious bearing. However, when the assertion is made that the Bible is erroneous in its statements, we must demur. It is singularly guarded from such mistakes as Pluto's idea that the earth was an intelligent being; as the thought of the ancient sages that the Milky Way was a path showing the footsteps of the sun, or a band of solid substance joining the two parts of the globe; as the old notions that brutes are human beings in changed shapes and that there are fish in the sea with horses' heads. Its scientific parellelism is in striking contrast with the nebulous, vague and contradictory utterances of the so-called Babylonian creation tablets, where one makes the beast the first creation and another puts man as the beginning; or, with the Hindu idea that the world is a flat triangular plain, resting on the heads of elephants, whose feet rest on the shell of an immense tortoise, and the tortoise on the coil of a great snake; and when these elephants shake themselves earthquakes occur.

Any one who examines the Bible with an humble and a reverent mind, and compares its teachings with the ascertained facts (not the conjectures) of modern research, must have his faith in the Book confirmed. Every disputed issue of the Bible upon which the archaeologist has thrown any light has been established. The statements of the opening chapter of Genesis, the storm center of the controversy, are in accord with what is known today. Prof. Alphonso Smith, of the United States Naval Academy, says: "It is the one chapter in the Bible that has made science possible. It is the magna charta of science." To quote Dr. Francis Smith, distinguished long-time teacher of natural science in the University of Virginia: "The writer of the first chapter of Genesis shows a correspondence, not with the science of his time, but with that of three thousand years later, which the accepted doctrine of probabilities makes it impossible to attribute to a fortunate guess." One does not have to be an erudite scholar to understand this. Long and high-sounding words are not needed to prove the proposition.

Genesis says: "In the beginning, God created the heavens and the earth." No definite time is fixed—whether six thousand years or six million years. The time is expressly indefinite and gives a place for all that geology may discover. It was revealed to the historian that God was the source of all. The mind of the typical man rests upon that explanation. He knows there must have been a first cause; his intellectual faculties demand an adequate cause for every effect; his experience and observation agree with these faculties; he is in a universe of insoluble riddle without the first verse of the Bible; with that verse he has the solution in a personal Being who is sufficient for all things. The bewildered Darwin, in his experimentations, reached his limit and held up his hands with the exclamation that behind all may be a "somewhat." Herbert Spencer's nearest approach to a personal God was the recognition of an "infinite and eternal energy" from which all things proceed. Huxley contemptuously dismisses the subject of Deity with the words: "It is but the weary clatter of endless logomachy." I do not worship the "somewhat" of Darwin, nor the "eternal energy" of Spencer; I worship the one true and living God, who satisfies my reason and answers the requirements of my conscience. His revealed ways are not wearying to my soul: "They are my meditation day and night."

The scientist is unable to account for matter, he is impotent to create matter or life. Neither can he unravel the mystery of the process of development. How did invertebrates develop backbones and mammals develop breasts? Explain the origin and transmission of the eye—the most perfect mechanism known to man. The simplest Christian with his Bible can tell more about origins than Darwin, Huxley, Spencer and Tyndall all together. Upon this one phase of the subject he knows more than they by searching could find out. "By faith we understand that the worlds have been framed by the Word of God, so that what is seen hath not been made out of things which appear" (Heb. 11:3). The first chapter of Genesis gives an authoritative account of the primal source of matter, life and species. Why should a Christian exchange a rational account of the origin of matter, life, and species for the barren negations, illogical conjectures, audacious dogmatisms and poisonous gases of grasshopper scientists and kangaroo skeptics? Why should he not the rather confidently walk with Paschal, the prince of French writers, the peer of all scientists, and the finest of mathematicians, in the proved paths of the satisfying Scriptures?

Consider the order of the creation of life. According to the first chapter of Genesis, vegetable life appeared first, fish and fowl second, vertebrate animals third, and man fourth and last. That order is in agreement with the known facts of geology. The earliest form of life found in earth's grave is sea-weed. Plants in abundance appeared before animals. Scientifically, this is necessarily so, for animals could not subsist upon mineral matter. Animals feed upon plants or other animals. The horse cannot directly assimilate minerals; he must be fed upon corn, oats, hay, alfalfa—these must exist before he can subsist. This is common sense and Scripture. "And God said, Let the earth bring forth grass, the herb yielding seed, and the fruit tree yielding fruit after his kind, whose seed is in itself, upon the earth; and it was so" (Gen. 1:11).

The second order in Genesis is recorded: "And God said, Let the waters bring forth abundantly the moving creatures that hath life, and fowl that may fly above the earth in the open firmament of heaven." Geology teaches that the first animals were the shell-fish. Later, fish with a backbone appear, and still later the frog and reptile. So much is not known scientifically about birds, but they undoubtedly preceded mammals. How did the author of Genesis happen to hit upon the order which geology and biology discover? There is but one sufficient answer, God made it known to him.

The third order in Genesis is vertebrate animals: "And God said, Let the earth bring forth the living creature after his kind, cattle and creeping thing, and beast of the earth after his kind; and it was so. And God made the beast of earth after his kind, and cattle after their kind, and everything that creepeth upon the earth after his kind; and God saw that it was good" (Gen. 1:24, 25). The non-Christian geologist must concede that mammals appeared after plants and fish, and before man. He must also admit that there is no evidence in the rocks of unbroken progression, of intermediate forms, of transitional stages among various species. He should see that the conclusion of his own investigation requires either creation or metamorphosis—not evolution. Darwin admitted the force of this reasoning: "Geology, assuredly, does not reveal any such finely graduated organic chain; and this perhaps is the most obvious and gravest objection which can be urged against my theory." The Bible account is not disproved, but rather strengthened, by true science. I protest against that preaching or teaching which treats the biblical account of creation as absurd. Point out the absurdity. Do not deal in glittering generalities, in sneering innuendoes, in veiled reflections, in smiling ridicule. Specify the particulars and present the evidence. Moses was better informed than his critics. Genesis anticipates the latest science.

Once more, Genesis places man as the last and highest order in creation. "And God said, Let us make man in our image after our likeness" (Gen. 1:26). To quote Professor Keyser: "First came the oblique forms of life, which were obviously vegetable; then the primal forms of animal life: then the higher forms; lastly, man himself like a crown upon the pedestal of creation."

Contrast the language used in the creation of man with the language used in the creation of plants, of fish, of beasts. A dignity is conferred upon man: "Thou hast made him but little lower than God" (Psa. 8:5). Between him and the highest order of beasts there is a vast chasm. Hence, no beast could be his consort; God made him a companion, a gentle woman.

Man, as portrayed in the Bible, is a rational, moral, social, spiritual being; he is the only earthly creature with religious feeling, moral sense and perception of the sublime. Such he has been as remotely as history traces him. Such he is now. He is conscious of an impassable gulf separating himself from the lower animals. He is, and has ever been, their superior and master. Argue as much as you please about fossils, speculate to your heart's content about processes, the every-day man has an intuitive and inerradicable conviction that he is above and over all other animals, that he has something within him not akin to them, that his destiny is diverse from theirs. The only explanation I have ever seen of this difference which appeals to my reason is the one contained in the Bible. Why apologize for the biblical account? Why call it allegorical when it is inseparably connected with the succeeding history? Why not proclaim its accuracy since it satisfies intellect and conscience and without it we are in a hopeless muddle?

Go as far back into the past as you can and man is not very unlike the man of the present. A Columbia University professor recently had the candor to say that "all our research fails to reveal any development or material change in the intellectual, physical, or moral nature of man from his remotest historical appearance until the present." If we could trace man back to the first man, my belief is that we would find the first will prove have sought in vain for a fossil that clearly proves man's animal origin. The best they can produce is the Java specimen with their far-fetched conclusions. Why, four thousand years from now, if the world stands so long, some speculative and illogical geologist may find the skeleton of a deformed negro of flat forehead, club feet, six toes and fingers, such as you may have seen in the flesh, and exhibit that skeleton to prove that the people of the twentieth century were that type.

There is another expression, used more than once in the first chapter of Genesis, the truth of which we may see every day. It is where God says that a thing shall bear "after his kind, whose seed is in itself." That is being demonstrated before our eyes daily. The persistence of type of species, the resistance to change, is apparent to every observer. You plant wheat, and you reap wheat; you do not reap oats. You hatch turkeys from the eggs of a turkey; you do not hatch chickens, not even when a chicken hen sits on turkey eggs. Who ever got a canary bird from the egg of a pigeon? You breed dogs and you get pups; you do not get kittens; nor can you breed dogs and cats and get a hybrid. The mule is a hybrid, permitted by God for the utility of man; but the mule, whether male or female, cannot propagate. Hybrids are invariably sterile. An official of the British Museum is quoted as saying: "In all this great museum there is not a particle of evidence of the transmutation of species."

CHOOSING A PROFESSION.

It will soon be time for our colleges to open again, and thousands of boys and girls will be flocking to the fountains of learning. Some will go to drink deep into this fountain of knowledge and wisdom, while others will merely touch upon the surface. Many will go with a chosen life profession; others will have no idea as to what they hope to do.

A young man called at my office the other day to learn the news that he had been awarded a course of training at the expense of the Federal government. It was explained to him that he had the privilege of a full four-year course in whatever profession he might choose to pursue, provided his educational and physical qualifications would permit it. Also, it was explained to him that he would receive, besides his instruction and books, maintenance pay in the sum of $90.00 per month throughout the four years.

He was a young man with splendid appearance, sterling qualities of character and a high school education, but without an idea as to what he would like for a life profession. When he was asked his choice, he immediately replied: "I am leaving that to you."

This goes to show about how much thought many of our young men and women are giving to a career in life. The seriousness of it has never entered their minds before it is too late, and certainly in many instances not before they are almost through college.

I would say this to the young man or young woman who is entering college for the first time this fall: "Know thyself." It is the first and great commandment at such a time. It was Ruskin who said: "We are not sent into this world to do anything into which we cannot put our hearts. We have certain work to do for our bread, and that is to be done strenuously; other work to do for our delight, and that is to be done heartily; neither is to be done by halves or shifts, but with a will; and what is not worth this effort is not to be done at all."

There are about three classes into which college students should find themselves divided—literary class, whose interest lies in communicating ideas to others, and in thus influencing the opinions and actions of their fellow-men; the scientific class, whose power lies in observing, arranging and putting facts in order; the practical class, whose interest is neither in the arrangement of facts nor in the communication of ideas, except as a means of achieving concrete results in the way of business or politics or some form of human endeavor. From the first class come our teachers, preachers, journalists and jury lawyers; from the second class come our engineers, physicians and accountants, etc.; from the third and last class come our manufacturers, merchants, consulting lawyers, political leaders and great statesmen.

Which class will you fit in, and what will be your calling? Seek to "know thyself" now while your college course is before you, and make every effort count towards success in your vocation.

The Western North Carolina Christian Conference will meet with the Christian Church at Ether, N. C., on Tuesday after the first Sunday in November, 1923, at 10 o'clock A. M., and will continue in session till the business is transacted. We wish that the chairman of each standing committee will make an effort to interest and encourage our people in their various departments. A long pull and a pull all together for a greater Conference.

MISSIONS

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Field Secretary.

THE FAITHFUL FEW.

A brother remarked to the writer recently that his Church could do great work if all the members would help; but a few had all the burdens to carry. This brother is not alone in his feeling and experience. The fact is that in almost every Church known to the writer, the faithful few have to bear the heat and the burden of the day. This is a deplorable fact. Usually, it is not the amount that we ourselves have to pay or the work that we do that hurts. It is the deeper and further fact that we have to pay more han our share or do more than our part of the work. Dr. Staley says, philosophically, that it is not bringing in two armfuls of wood that hurts the boy Tom, but the fact that Bill should have brought in one arm full and did not do so and left two for Tom to bring that hurts Tom. That is a great truth that goes all the way through human society. It is when we realize that our brother is not doing his part of the work and that we have it to do for him that the spirit of rebellion comes.

The world's burdens, however, are borne by the few. Our Men and Millions Movement would go more rapidly and more successfully if the ideal set before us could be realized, namely: that here is a work which challenges every member of the Church. The movement was intended to help every enterprise of the Church, and is doing so. It should, therefore, be supported by every member of the Church. If we are loyal to each enterprise and interests—that is to say, if we are loyal to all that the Christian Church is trying to do—we will certainly do our part in paying our pledges to Men and Millions and in helping to achieve the great objectives of this movement.

A few are meeting their payments and are doing so in the face of great odds and difficulties, but the work would be much more happy and the task not so difficult if all who were inspired by the movement in its early days would stand by it now and do their part unselfishly. We are hoping and praying that, as opportunity affords and conditions improve, an increasing number of those who made pledges will join the faithful few in carrying to a successful conclusion this our mightiest, most sacred and holiest movement.

J. O. ATKINSON.

WOMEN'S WORK IN NORTH CAROLINA.

To the Women of the North Carolina Christian Conference:

Dear Missionary Worker,—As your secretary, I am coming to you again, perhaps for the last time before the Conference year closes. Only a few more meetings with your local society before your report for the year will be before the annual Conference. Will your society be listed as a banner society?

Have you taken the December thankoffering? and the January self-denial offering? and then in July or August the rally-day offering? These three offerings should be taken, even by the Churches where there are no active missionary societies, sending same to our Conference treasurer, Mrs. W. R. Sellars, Burlington, N. C. These same Churches should see to it that some representative attend the annual Conference, which usually meets in October.

Sister, has your society met its obligations for this year? If not, there is still time. Begin now! July is "Literature Month." Use your literature superintendent, and take subscriptions for the Christian Missionary.

If you feel that your burden is too heavy for your society, won't you work just a little harder and strive to carry your society "over the top?" All together for the best effort yet for Jesus! It is His work, not ours, and He will bless us.

Can we rightly claim a part of His precious promises to the saints, when we deliberately refuse to do His will? Can Christians who will not or do not undertake God's missionary program for His Church, have the heart to expect of God the blessings for those who know His will and do it?

Yours for service,

MRS. J. W. PATTON.

HOW DOES YOUR CONGREGATION SING.

BY MABEL TRAVIS WOOD.

Hymn-singing is a congregation's opportunity for active expression in worship. The Churchgoer's favorite hymns, even more than his favorite Bible stories or verses, are a spiritual inspiration and delight to him. Why is it, then, that the collective singing in Churches is so often weak and ineffectual? Why, in not a few cases, does the singing of a choir of fifteen or twenty voices overbalance that of a congregation of several hundred?

Successful congregational singing does not just happen. It always has causes, which include a stimulating musical accompaniment, proper pitch of the hymn, free access to the words, and, most effective of all, previous training in singing together through informal song services under leadership. No matter how strong may be the individual inclination to sing, the lack of one or more of these requisites to good congregational singing produces haphazard results.

"When the rhythm of congregational singing is dependent largely upon the playing of a hidden organist, the congregation is at a disadvantage. For this reason, the eyes are more accurate in following the time-beating than are the ears. Therefore, the introduction of a director of singing is bound to benefit the congregational singing," advised Kenneth S. Clark, who heads the Bureau of Community Music of Community Service, in a recent bulletin, "Everybody Neighbors Through Song." With proper leadership, said he, a stirring community sing may be carried on within the Church with a program made up exclusively of hymns. He blamed the lax participation of men in Church singing largely upon the high keys in which so many hymns are pitched, and suggested that organists make transposition copies of hymns which they use most frequently. This bulletin, which contains valuable suggestions for the possibilities of service by the Churches in community music, is obtainable from Community Service, 315 Fourth Avenue, New York City; price 10 cents.

The growing tendency of Churches to arrange special services of song cannot fail to exercise a beneficial influence upon the singing of their congregations, as more congregational singing is the greatest essential for better congregational singing. Song periods of four or five hymns to start the service, with two or three additional hymns at the close, frequent evening services given over entirely to hymn-singing, and midweek song services, particularly if the singing is under dynamic leadership, will work wonders with the way a congregation sings. They build up its confidence in its singing ability, develop its rhythmic sense and arouse interest in and familiarity with hymns among the young people, who are usually not on as intimate terms with them as are the older generation.

When a director of Church singing has the assurance that every one is supplied with the words of the hymns, he knows that one of the great drawbacks to good congregational singing is eliminated. There are many occasions on which the use of hymn books is inconvenient, and various religious groups have asked Community Service to compile a religious song sheet similar to its community song sheets which have done so much to advance the neighborly recreation of community singing. This leaflet, containing the words of twenty-five favorite hymns, attractively printed, is now ready. The hymns include patriotic anthems, the most beloved of the dignified old hymn-tunes which strengthen our musical heritage and some of the modern Gospel songs. They are as follows: "Star-Spangled Banner," "America," "Doxology (Old Hundredth)," "Battle Hymn of the Republic," "Come, Thou Almighty King," "Rock of Ages," "Nearer, My God, to Thee," "Onward, Christian Soldiers," "Abide With Me," "How Firm a Foundation," "Lead, Kindly Light," "All Hail the Power of Jesus' Name," "I Need Thee Every Hour," "Holy, Holy, Holy," "God be With You Till We Meet Again," "Now, the Day is Over," "Stand Up, Stand Up for Jesus," "Work, for the Night is Coming," "He Leadeth Me," "Blest be the Tie that Binds," "Faith of Our Fathers," "Love Divine, All Love Excelling," "Joy to the World," "The Son of God Goes Forth," "America the Beautiful."

The leaflet will be found very valuable for use in the outdoor Church-yard sings which every summer grow more popular, and for use on such occasions as union services, prayer meetings, Church or Sunday School conventions, men's club meetings, Church picnics, and Gallilean boat services. Copies may be purchased at cost—$1.15 per hundred, $11.50 per thousand, plus the postage—from Community Service, 315 Fourth Avenue, New York City.

Churches will be interested in the results of a questionnaire recently sent out by the Etude Magazine to discover the favorite hymns of American Church-goers. "Abide With Me," "Nearer, My God, to Thee," "Lead, Kindly Light," and "Rock of Ages" were the four receiving the largest number of votes. The other choices indicated that the preference was for hymns of high literary standard and with the atmosphere of personal faith and devotion.

"OTHERS."

Lord, help me to live from day to day,
In such a self-forgetful way,
That even when I kneel to pray,
My prayers shall be for—others.

Help in all the work I do,
To ever be sincere and true,
And know that all I'd do for you
Must needs be done for—others.

Let "Self" be crucified and slain,
And buried deep: and all in vain,
May efforts be to rise again,
Unless to live for—others.

And when my work on earth is done,
And my new work in heaven's begun,
May I forget the crown I've won,
While thinking still of—others.

Others, Lord! Yes, others!
Let this my motto be:
Help me to live for others,
That I may live like Thee.

Christian Orphanage

GOOD NEWS FOR THE ORPHANAGE.

DEAR FRIENDS:

We were made to feel glad last week when we received from the Provident Trust Company of Philadelphia a copy of a deed of trust which was made by Mr. Lawrence S. Holt, formerly of Burlington, N. C., now of Washington, D. C., in which he gave the income on more than four hundred thousand dollars to charity and benevolent causes, and he has included the Christian Orphanage in his gifts and gives for its general expenses the sum of nine hundred dollars annually, to be paid $150 every two months. This deed of trust takes the place of one he made several years ago in which he remembered the orphanage. This is irrevocable, and will go on as long as the orphanage continues to exist. Mr. Holt has been exceedingly kind to us for the past several years and has helped us very liberally several times before. He has a very tender feeling for orphan children and helpless humanity. We often think of a conversation we had with him several years ago and of the lasting impression he made on us as he told us how he wanted to help the little helpless children, and, as he talked, tears would trickle down his cheeks. It is a great investment Mr. Holt has made, and one on which God's blessings will rest.

I only wish we had more big-hearted men like him. We feel sure that those who now cry for a home and are turned away would be amply provided for.

We have quite a number of Sunday Schools that do not make a monthly offering for the support of the Christian Orphanage. It has been our earnest wish that at some time we could report to our Church folks that every Sunday School in the Southern Christian Convention has been enrolled on the list. I am wondering if I will ever have that pleasure! Friends, we want you to realize that the Christian Orphanage is your institution, and that its success depends largely upon the interest you and your Church and Sunday School take in it. Let us all feel an interest in its success and lend a helping hand in taking care of 100 little children. Ask your Sunday School to make a monthly offering if it is not already making one, and we will be very grateful.

"COME, THOU FOUNT."

BY MAUD B. LITTLE.

One may be safe in asserting that our hymn book contains as fine a collection of poetry as the world has ever produced.

No service should pass without the singing of one or more of these hymns. Every organization of the Church should keep up their study, either by singing, reciting or reading them, often giving their history and a tribute to the author. It is a grave mistake to allow our young people to become unfamiliar with these old hymns.

The hymn under the above caption was found in an old collection of hymns, still in print, although written nearly two centuries ago.

The author, Robert Robinson, born in 1735 of lowly parentage, was apprenticed in early youth, by his widowed mother, to a London barber. Here he became converted under George Whitefield's preaching, and began to study for the ministry.

Later in life he became skeptical, drifting far from the spirit of his beautiful lines, which have quickened many in the Christian life, and have perhaps brought many souls into the kingdom.

By a strange coincidence, Mr. Robinson, in his travels, one day met a lady who commented so feelingly on his hymn that he was forced to admit its authorship, acknowledging penitently a longing for the return of the feelings which prompted their composition.

Thus, perhaps, Mr. Robinson's own lines may have been the cause of his return, by way of the cross, to the "courts above."

Evidently he was a great Bible student, as well as a deep thinker, as you will note by the following allusions, and many others which you may find hidden in His Word:

Come, Thou fount of every blessing—Prov. 14:27.
Tune my heart to sing Thy praise.—Ps. 16:9; Ps. 28:7.
Streams of mercy, never ceasing.—Isa. 35:6; Ps. 126:4.
Call for songs of loudest praise.—Isa. 38:20.
Teach me some melodious sonnet.—Jno. 14:26.
Sung by flaming tongues above.—Rev. 15:3.
Praise the mount, I'm fixed upon it.—Ps. 57:7.
Mount of Thy redeeming love.—Eph. 1:7.
Here I raise my Ebenezer.—Hos. 12:5.
Hither by Thy help I'm come.—1 Sam. 7:12.
And I hope by Thy good pleasure.—Luke 12:32.
Safely to arrive at home.—Jno. 14:1-3; Rev. 3:21.
Jesus sought me when a stranger.—Luke 19:10.
Wandering from the fold of God.—Jno. 10:16.
He, to rescue me from danger.—Luke 15:4.
Interposed His precious blood.—Heb. 9:12.
O, to grace how great a debtor.—Jno. 1:16.
Daily I'm constrained to be!—2 Cor. 4:16; 2 Cor. 5:14.
Let Thy goodness like a fetter.—Ps. 25:7.
Bind my wandering heart to Thee.—2 Thess. 3:3.
Prone to wander, Lord, I feel it.—Matt. 26:41.
Prone to leave the God I love.—Jer. 17:9.
Here's my heart, oh, take and seal it.—Ps. 51:17.
Seal it for Thy courts above.—2 Tim. 4:8.

THE CHRISTIAN SUN is the right-hand helper of all the enterprises of the Christian Church. It therefore should go into every home in the Church.

3,000 THE CHRISTIAN SUN. 9,000

There are between 8,000 and 10,000 families represented in the Southern Christian Convention, which means if a copy of THE CHRISTIAN SUN is placed in each family, a possible subscription list of 9,000 copies. There are now circulated approximately 3,000 copies, or about one-third of our Church families are reached. Hence, there should be added to the list 6,000 new subscribers in order to have the Church paper placed in every family.

Now, the great personal effort required to do this must be rewarded. To compensate this labor, if premiums are given, it will take 20 automobiles, or 40 radio machines, or 50 to 60 talking machines, or 90 to 100 typewriters, or 200 to 300 watches, etc. Don't you think you will have a good opportunity to secure one of these prizes?

But you need not confine your solicitations to your Church alone. You have friends in other denominations who will gladly assist you by giving a subscription. Make your appeal in a straightforward manner. True men and women are interested in the success of their friends and will lend a helping hand.

PREMIUMS GIVEN FOR NEW SUBSCRIPTIONS.

The subscription price of THE SUN, recently reduced, is now $2.00 per year—two six-month subscriptions at $1.00 each count as one year. One person may take as many as he may wish for himself or for others. Those in arrears should pay up and assist the solicitor by taking an advanced subscription.

SCHEDULE.

1. To one securing 350 Subscriptions, a Ford Touring Car will be given ($298.00 f. o. b. factory).
2. To one securing 150 Subscriptions, one Radio Equipment—Westinghouse R-6 Set, complete with batteries, tubes, phone and aerial equipment, the price of which is $150.00.
3. To one securing 100 Subscriptions will be given one Victrola ($75.00), or cash prize of $50.00.
4. To one securing 75 Subscriptions, one Remington Portable Typewriter, with standard keyboard and case ($60.00 f. o. b. Richmond).
5. To one securing 30 Subscriptions, one Gentleman's or one Lady's Wrist Watch will be given, guaranteed by Jahnke Bros., Jewelers, of Richmond, Va. ($30.00).
6. For 25 Subscriptions, one Gentleman's or Lady's Watch ($25.00), likewise guaranteed by Jahnke Bros.
7. To one securing 20 Subscriptions, one Standard or International Dictionary will be given.

To all authorized solicitors will be paid 10 per cent commission on all renewals, and 20 per cent on all new subscriptions. Those receiving prizes will not be entitled to commission.

Two renewal subscriptions will be counted as one in determining the winners of prizes.

Send in your name and address and receive the necessary report blanks and receipt books.

The contest will close on October 31, 1923.

Remittances made on this campaign are to be net. Post-office money orders constitute a safe plan of remittance.

The Friendly Home of Bethany.

The stories associated with the home of Bethany give an intimate glimpse of the life of Jesus Christ, and reveal His social nature. The home, located just over the crest of Olivet, east of Jerusalem, was His place of refuge after tiring travels. Here He was a welcome visitor and an honored guest. Happy was that home which had the Christ-approval, for He went there often. "Christ is the unseen guest at every meal," is a familiar motto on home walls. Is He the welcome, as well as the unseen, guest? From the home of Bethany, Jesus made His triumphant entry into Jerusalem. There He performed His greatest miracle. There He spent the nights of that last hard week on earth. Here He was greeted with joy, and called for when sorrow came. And all of this which the home meant to the Master was because of the folks who lived there—His friends. After all, that is what makes a home. Wealth alone cannot do it. Social rank nor political honor cannot. But "It takes a lot of living (and loving) to make a house a home.'"

They were three, those friends of Bethany. Lazarus, the brother, was probably the youngest. Luke does not mention him at the feast for Jesus. His was a subordinate position, but the brother loved by the sisters and Jesus alike. Christ called him "our friend" to the disciples when He told them of his death. Many friends were met to join in mourning for him when Jesus came.

Martha, "cumbered about much serving," was the elder sister, named first. Her love for Jesus was very great, though expressed differently than her sister's. Activity was her definition of service. Everything must be ready for the entertainment of such a guest. And "Jesus loved Martha" (John 11:5), and His rebuke missed the real joy of His coming, but her service was guided by the right impulse. "Man looketh upon the outward appearance, but God looketh upon the heart," and God could see the loving heart of the zealous Martha. The Marthas are depended upon still. Her zeal was needful, tempered by the loving Mary-heart. For Mary chose the "good part":

"O needful thing, O Mary's choice,
Go not from us away;
O Jesus with the loving voice,
Talk to us every day."

—McDonald.

Mary, the younger sister, sat at Jesus' feet and heard His words with joy. Worship was the expression of her love for Him. She gave the costly ointment, and annointed His body, and "she hath done what she could," was the Master's commendation. Could He say that of others who love to call Him "Friend?" No more was required. What a marvelous work could be done, if each of His followers would only do what they could do with Him!

How Jesus must have enjoyed being with these friends! Here His tired body could rest, and His spirit be refreshed by loving intercourse. When death came to the little home of Bethany, only Jesus could comfort. His grief was expressed in tears with Mary and Martha. Then, calling upon His Heavenly Father for power, Lazarus was raised from the dead. Jesus brought comfort there, and He alone can bring solace to the mourner of all times. How much His friendship means! What joy He can bring to every home! May the friendly home of Bethany be but a symbol for the Christian homes, where the Christ is never forgotten; the Christian homes where His kingdom is the supreme interest; the Christian homes where friendly folks live the principles which He came to teach. Only with Him can true friendship be strengthened and abide. May His love rule in our hearts!

"O Thou Great Friend of all the world, we would walk the way of friendly hearts with Thee. Teach us Thy way of loving, for we can be true and loyal friends only as we learn of Thee. Make us to know that the glory of love is to give, not to gain. Grant us the grace of love that serves and counts no cost. Give us love unshadowed and unmarred by strains of self.

"Touch Thou our eyes, that we may see the loveliness beneath the unlovely, the beauty beneath the unbeautiful. Make pure our hearts that those we love may be the stronger, truer, finer for our friendship. Shine through our lives, that every friend of ours may find it easy to be a friend of thine. Love us, our Father, and love through us. In the name of the Master Friend, in whose footsteps we would follow. Amen."

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC.

August 12, 1923.

Topic: "What Can be Done Toward Abolishing Poverty?"—Luke 16:19-30.

Thoughts for the Meeting.

The Scripture lesson is one of Christ's parables which Wm. M. Taylor pronounces "the most striking and terrible" ever spoken by our Lord. Its contrasts are glaring, and throw out a challenge to men to think of other people.

The wealthy man of the story was guilty because he did not think of the needy and suffering near to him.

"The wounds I might have healed,
The human sorrow and smart!
And yet it never was in my soul
To play so ill a part.
But evil is wrought by want of thought
As well as want of heart."

The story of the rich man and Lazarus is a lesson to the poor to be faithful to win the divine approval, and to the rich to guard against losing the best in life through selfishness.

The fate of the rich man could not be changed after death. He had lived his life. It was too late. "Don't write there," said a little newspaper boy to the dandified youth, when in the waiting-room of a railroad station he saw him about to scratch something with a diamond ring on the mirror. "Don't write there"! "Why not?" "Because you can't rub it out," was his wise answer. Christian Endeavor aims to keep youthful lives free from the "scratches" so difficult to rub out.

"Lord, make us truly wise,
To choose Thy people's lot,
And earthly joys despise,
Which soon will be forgot.
The greatest evil we can fear
Is to possess our portion here."

—John Newton.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR IN OUR DENOMINATION.

Never in the history of Christian Endeavor has this branch of Christian education done so much work as it is now doing. Throughout our land we hear and see the wonderful progress this organization is making among our young people.

In the Eastern Virginia Conference we have forty-one Churches represented at the Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention, and from these forty-one Churches we have only eleven Senior Christian Endeavor Societies. What is the matter with our denomination? Are we asleep when it comes to young people's work? Each one of our Churches has a Sunday School, which is the place to teach and impress the child and the young people to carry them forward, making them lead more noble Christian lives; but no place is given for them to express themselves openly and publicly. This is the very thing Christian Endeavor is doing throughout this wide world of ours, allowing the young man and the young woman to stand up and tell what their Christian training means to them.

At the Eastern Virginia Sunday School Convention I heard a number ask, "Why do we not have more Christian Endeavor work in our denomination?" I feel that the answer to this is: (1) That we do not impress the importance of Christian Endeavor; (2) that the pastors of our denomination do not hold the work up before the young people. I have stated a number of times that if a Church has a pastor that is not a Christian Endeavor pastor, it is in a bad condition. If the pastor of a Church is not a Christian Endeavor worker, make him one; and if you cannot do this, get another. A Church that does not look after its young people will be no Church in the next fifteen or twenty years. We all know that new leaders must take the place of the older ones at the head now, and if there is any place in the Church where Christian leadership and executive ability can be taught better than in a Christian Endeavor Society, I would like to know of it.

I am delighted that the executive board of the Eastern Virginia Sunday School Convention changed the constitution so as the heading will read "The Eastern Virginia Christian Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention," and that a place is set apart for Christian Endeavor work. I am hoping that, throughout the whole Conference and our denomination, that we will urge more Christian Endeavor work; and at the next Convention all of our Churches can report a Christian Endeavor Society functioning—helping to make our denomination the leader, as it has been in the past.

There is some talk that Christian Endeavor has run its course, and that it has accomplished all the good that there is for it to do; but I do not believe that Christian Endeavor will ever be abolished, but that these forty-two years of magnificent work is only the advancing rays of what is to come "For Christ and the Church." May we always hold this slogan at the head of Christian Endeavor, and step by step move onward to perfection of a young people's organization that will go down in history as the biggest factor in promoting Christian education among the young people of our land.

AN INDESTRUCTIBLE RECORD.

"The sin of Judah is written with a pen on iron, and with the point of a diamond: it is graven upon the table of their heart, and upon the horns of your altars."—Jer. 17:1.

Sin is an impassible barrier to Christian character. The sin of Judah was her idolatry, and that was the most offensive thing in human practice ever committed in the sight of God. It was so very offensive because it involuntarily put another in the place of God. That is a man-made substitute put in the place of God. All idols are not made of wood and stone. The worship of money is idolatry; the worship of self is idolatry; the worship of popularity is idolatry; the worship of a child is idolatry—nothing should be worshiped but Almighty God.

Let us study the outstanding features of this text:

I. Sin Writes its own Record when it is Committed.

Sin brings consequences, it begets memories, it intensifies guilt. The sinner may not read this record, but it is there and ineffaceable apart from the cleansing power of the blood of Jesus. We may forget it, but God will not forget it, and some day He will confront us with our sins. Sin always leaves a double record. One is on the heart of the sinner and one is written where the sin was committed. In Judah's case, her sin was written on the horns of the altar.

II. The Heart of the Sinner is the Table on Which his Sin is Engraved.

That is the reason it cannot be removed by any human hand. It is like the spot of blood on the hand in one of Shakespeare's plays—it could not be wiped out. It was there to stay, so far as any human power could be counted on to remove it.

Sin engraves itself on the heart of the sinner. It fixes itself in the character and memory. We may repent and get clear of the burden, but memory continues to keep the sin before the mind. The criminal finds no deliverance from his sin. Some time ago a man walked into the sheriff's office and said: "Take me and lock me up. I have walked up and down the earth for twenty-five years, but I can get no relief from the murder I committed." No doubt the soul's history in sin is indelibly written in the mind of the offender. No other recording angel is needed. Sin awakens a passion for sin, and the sinner clings to darkness.

III. Sin Scars Itself into the Sinner's Character.

One word, character, comes from the scar made by the engraver on the substance on which he is working. Hence, the force of our text. Sin writes itself, and its record, with a pen of iron and with the point of a diamond. It engraves itself upon the heart. Judah desecrated the altar of Jehovah by sinning there, and there he left a record of that sin. The fact that Judah was at worship, when she sinned, made the sin no whiter, but blacker. Some one has said that the sin of the week-day renders the offering at the altar on Sunday worthless. Its power for good is gone. Sin thus defiles the altar. It is held that when a man is drowning, his whole life comes in a rapid review before him. It may be that sin so writes itself in memory that when we face the judgment all the sins of our life may come piling in upon us, overwhelming us with a sense of guilt—crushing every hope.

IV. The Record of Sin is Indelible till it is Baptized in the Blood of the Lamb which was Slain from the Foundation of the World.

A sin committed is engraved in character. The chemist has never made a piece of soap that can wash sin away. Only the blood of Jesus can do that. Here is an awful law of sin: It cannot be forgotten till it is forgiven.

The sinner may hide his sins from his fellows, but he cannot hide them from God. Will God have to ask for the proof of the sinner's guilt? We doubt it, for the sinner carries the proof of his own sins in his own memory—simply unlock the gates of memory and the record is at once available. It is folly to try to hide sin. It is graved deep into character with a pen of iron, with the point of a diamond. The record is unmistakable.

There is no peace for the sinner till Jesus takes his sins away. No fuller has yet been found among men who can cleanse the character of the sinner. It cannot be washed away, and it cannot be rubbed out! Nothing but the blood of Jesus can remove sin from the character of the sinner.

The love of sin is proof of the guilt of sin. We cling to that which we love, never mind about the consequences; we wait for another day to consider the possibilities of condemnation.

"Lord, my eye
On Thee is fixed, to Thee I cry;
O purge out all my dross, my sin,
Make me more white than snow within.
Wash me, Lord, and purify my heart,
And make it clean in every part;
And when 'tis clean, Lord, keep it so,
For that is more than I can do."

UNIQUE PILGRIMAGE TO THE HOLY LAND.

The desire to visit the Holy Land is almost universal among Christians. For centuries, we know that pilgrimages from different parts of the world were made by many thousands of people, moved by a strong spiritual impulse and a desire to see the country where Christ was born, lived and gave His life to save us from eternal death.

An unusual opportunity is now offered for the first time to the Christians of America to make a pilgrimage to Jerusalem, as a result of good understanding between his beatitude the patriarch of Jerusalem, acting through his representative in America, Archbishop Panteleimon, and various prominent Americans.

The Holy Land Pilgrim and Tourist Society of America, 350 West Eighty-seventh Street, New York City, has been entrusted to take care of the practical side of the cruises. A ship, with accommodation for about 1,500 passengers, will sail on October 10, 1923, from New York to Jaffa (Port of Jerusalem) and back to New York in fifty days, with stops at the Azores, Lisbon, Alexandria, Jaffa, Beyruth, Smyrna, Pyraeus and Naples.

Prices will be very moderate, so as to bring the voyage within popular reach. The whole cruise on a large, comfortable boat to various Mediterranean ports and four days' stay at Jerusalem, with sightseeing in and around Jerusalem, will cost $295-up.

While in Jerusalem, the pilgrims will be received in a special session by the patriarch, who will confer on them a souvenir in memory of their visit. All this will put them in a very advantageous position for visiting the holy places.

In connection with cruises to the Holy Land, Archbishop Panteleimon has received the following letters from Bishop Gailor, president of the National Council of the Episcopal Church, and Rev. Charles S. Macfarland, general secretary of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America:

"His Grace Panteleimon Athanassiades, New York City:

"Your Grace,—As representative of the National Council of the American Episcopal Church, I beg to express my profound interest in your plan for a special tour in October to the Holy Land, and I hope that many of our clergy and people will avail themselves of this unique opportunity.

"The fact that enhances the value of the tour is that it is initiated and arranged by the representative of the patriarchate of Jerusalem, and that the tourists will be special guests of the patriarchate.

"This should bring our people to a closer understanding of your most ancient Church—"the mother of all Churches"—which through the centuries has stood as the faithful guardian of the places hallowed by the life of our blessed Lord.

" Faithfully yours,
(Signed) "THOMAS F. GAILOR,
"President of the National Council."

THE BIBLE AND SCIENCE.

Reverent scholarship is good, and there is no conflict between it and the Bible. But the speculative scholarship of our paganized colleges and seminaries is the most vicious curse of civilization and the Church. Let us have both the Bible and scholarship.

But if it is a choice between destructive scholarship and the Bible, then we take the Bible and reject the scholarship. The Bible schools and institutions already have much strong and worthy scholarship, and this will increase with their means and facilities. The liberal seminaries may prepare for abandonment, for they render no service, but damage to the Church and mankind.—The Presbyterian.

We thank God that the people are being awakened to the dangers of "modernism." Surely, we must hold on to the Bible, or we shall have nothing to hold to.

THE YOUNG PREACHER'S PRAYER.

"Stir up the gift of God which is in thee."—2 Tim. 1:6.

Stir up Thy gift divine in me
And let my soul aspire
To higher knowledge, nobler tasks.
O set my heart on fire
Until it burns for Thee, O Lord,
And breaks full into flame,
That I may be a light to show
The glory of Thy name.

Stir up Thy gift divine in me
And let my life aspire
To stronger service, truer toil.
O fill me with Thy fire
Until mine old self is consumed
And I am made by Thee
A Christ-like creature, glad to show
A holy life and free.

Stir up Thy gift divine in me
And let mine all aspire
To fuller friendship, larger love.
O fashion me with fire
Until I blaze Thy beauty forth
Through Thy rich gift divine,
That by Thy grace so bountiful
Thy character may shine.

We recommend it to all primary superintendents.

Church Work with Juniors. By Mme. Brockway. Judson Press. $1.00 net.

As we begin in our Church the task of correlating all phases of the work for boys and girls, we will find this book by Miss Brockway especially helpful. She has worked out a correlation of organization, materials, etc., such as is generally used in Christian Endeavor, missionary societies and Sunday Schools. This will be found especially helpful also for those doing work in a junior Church.

Junior Superintendents' Manual. By Hazel A. Lewis. Christian Board of Publication. 75 cents net.

Miss Lewis is director of children's work for her denomination and an expert junior worker. All that is said above in regard to the Primary Superintendents' Manual applies with equal force to the Junior Manual. Our Junior Department. By Jeannette A. McNaughton. Judson Press. 75 cents net.

This is one of the Judson Training Manuals. It may be used very successfully as a study book, having ten chapters, and covering very finely the work of a junior department. The style is original and chatty, making it very readable, as well as understandable.

Renew Your Health At Nature's Fountain

Without the Expense and Loss of Time Necessary for a Visit to the Spring

THE CRISIS

There comes a time in the life of practically every man and woman when their digestive or eliminative organs, or both, fail to respond to drugs prepared by human skill. In fact drugs seem to do them about as much harm as good for their systems rebel against all drugs. These are the cases which physicians call "stubborn" and "chronic" for the reason that they persist in spite of drug treatment. We do not refer to incurable diseases such as cancer and consumption, but to that larger class of functional disorders which we meet every day, where the organs of digestion and elimination are impaired.

For this class of cases our best physicians and our big city specialists send their wealthy patients to the mineral springs where, in the great majority of cases they are permanently restored or decidedly benefited. But what about the poor man who has not the money or the busy man or woman who cannot spare the time to spend several weeks or possibly months at a health resort? Shall circumstances deny them the restoration to health which Nature has provided? Read our answer in the coupon at the bottom of this page.

We have the utmost confidence in the Shivar Mineral Spring Water for it has made us thousands of friends in all parts of America and even in foreign countries, whose faces we have never seen. Yet we count them our friends for the Shivar Spring Water has bound them to us by lasting gratitude.

We ask you to read their letters, a few samples of which we publish below for your benefit, and if you find among them any encouragement as to your own health do not hesitate to accept our offer which has no limits or conditions except those shown on the coupon.

INDIGESTION

I was suffering with indigestion, stomach and liver disorders and all its train of horrid phenomena for several months. I had lived on milk, soft eggs, shredded wheat, a very insufficient diet for an active working man and, of course, from disease and starvation was in a very low state of nervous vitality and general debility. I ordered ten gallons of your Mineral Water which I used continuously reordering when necessary, and in four months gained twenty-nine pounds, was strong and perfectly well, and have worked practically every day since. It acts as a general renovator of the system. I prescribe it in my practice, and it has in every instance had the desired effects. It is essential to use this water in as large quantities as possible, for its properties are so happily blended and in such proportion that they will not disturb the most delicate system. It is purely Nature's remedy. A. L. A., M. D.

I feel it my duty to suffering humanity to make public announcement of the benefits I have derived from Shivar Spring Water. I have been a sufferer for the past twenty-five years from indigestion and dyspepsia. After one week's trial of Shivar Water I commenced to improve, and after drinking it for four weeks I gained fifteen pounds. I feel better and stronger than I have in twenty-five years. I strongly recommend this Water to any one with stomach trouble of any character. I am writing this voluntarily and trust it will fall in the hands of many who are so unfortunate as to be afflicted with indigestion and nervous dyspepsia. C. V. T.

DYSPEPSIA

For many years I suffered with stomach trouble as a direct result of asthma. I consulted the very best specialist in this country, and spent quite a large sum of money in my endeavor to get relief. However, I had about come to the conclusion that my case was hopeless, but by accident I happened to get hold of one of your booklets, and decided to try Shivar Spring Water. After drinking the water for about three weeks I was entirely relieved, and since that time have suffered but little inconvenience from my trouble. I cheerfully recommend the use of your Water to any one that may be suffering from stomach trouble. O. T. S.

It is a great pleasure to tell you that your Water has been a great benefit, I may say a great blessing, to me. My wife says it has helped me more than anything else I ever tried. I have been, for thirty years, a sufferer from stomach trouble, REV. E. H. R.

RHEUMATISM

I have tested your Spring Water in several cases of rheumatism, chronic indigestion, kidney and bladder troubles, and in nervous and sick headaches, and find that it has acted nicely in each case. It will purify the blood, relieve debility, stimulate the action of the liver, kidneys and bladder, aiding them in throwing off all poisonous matter. C. A. C., M. D.

I suffered with indigestion and kidney trouble, and a year ago was stricken with acute articular rheumatism; was helpless for months, and since using your Spring Water I am walking without any crutch and improving daily. Indigestion much relieved. I wish I could write Shivar Spring Water in the sky so that the world could become acquainted with it.

MRS. T. K.

RENAL AND CYSTIC

I suffered for eight years with kidney trouble and inflammation of the bladder to the extent that I would have to get up during the night some five or six times. After using this water only a few days, I am entirely relieved and suffer no more effect of the trouble whatever.

J. P. D.

My wife has had a bad kidney trouble for several years. She has been using the water only about three weeks and it has already made her a new woman. Her color is much improved, her appetite is all that she could wish for, her digestion seems to be perfect. We give Shivar Springs credit for it all. T. G. S.

A TRIBUTE OF LOVE.

Whereas, God, in His infinite wisdom and mercy, has seen fit to call from time to eternity Mrs. Mabel Brinkley Kelly; and,

Whereas, we recognize in the death of our friend and sister the loss of a noble, patient Christian woman, and desiring to express our esteem and high regard for her memory; therefore, be it resolved:

First, That we bow in humble submission to the great Creator's will, remembering that our loss on earth has been our sister's gain in heaven.

Second, That the members of Berea Christian Church extend their heartfelt sympathy and sincere condolence to the bereaved family and friends.

Third, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family, a copy be spread upon our Church minutes, and a copy be sent The Christian Sun for publication.

REED.

William Madison Reed died June 24, 1923, age 73 years and two months. Services were conducted at the home. On account of illness of the pastor, Rev. P. L. Duke officiated. He was a faithful member of the North Highland Christian Church. While his going away is our loss, it is his gain. He is survived by his wife, two daughters, and one son. He endured his suffering patiently until the end came, and his last words before he went away were "I am going through with Jesus—glory! glory!" May these words ever be a comfort to the bereaved ones, and may the family circle be unbroken when we shall gather around our Father's great white throne. He was laid to rest in Riverdale Cemetery.

Mrs. Mary J. Briggs, wife of the late Samuel Briggs, died July 21, 1923, age 72 years 9 months and 8 days. Seven children survive her—five girls and two boys: Mr. W. S. Briggs, Mrs. L. W. Huff, Mrs. A. H. Powell, Mrs. J. C. Clark, Mr. J. W. Briggs, Mrs. P. W. Hicks, Mrs. J. C. Harris; also fifty-four grandchildren and twenty great-grandchildren. Three to Make Ready. By Louise Ayres Garnett. Geo. H. Doran Company. $1.50 net.

A charming book containing three delightful children's plays—"Hill Top," "Pig Prince," and "Muffins." Each of these may be used in the open air, or for a short drama, purely as a matter of amusement. The moral tucked into each play is so covered with sugar-coating that it will be swallowed by the most captious child. Not the least charming part of the book is the music furnished for "Hill Top" and for "Muffins." "Four to Go" is found in a chapter on "General Notes on Production," which will help in making the staging of these little plays more easily. We bespeak the use of this book for any one looking for a charming new play for children.

PERRY.

James Perry departed this life July 3, 1923, at 11 P. M., aged 60 years 4 months and 15 days. He had been a faithful member of the Christian Church at Damascus, near Chapel Hill, for about 14 years. He was highly esteemed by his brethren and neighbors. You will better know it when we tell you that laymen out of three different Churches stood up during the funeral services and bore testimony to the life he lived. He did good for the joy he got out of it. To do something for his fellowman was the pleasure of his life. He would go among his neighbors frequently and ask them if he could help them in any way. It does seem that his mantle has fallen upon his four sons.

He was wedded to Mary Pendergrass March, 1881, and to this couple were born nine children. He leaves to mourn their loss a wife, two daughters, four sons, a Church and a neighborhood. May God bless this bereaved family and help the dear sons to be as true as their father was.

Funeral and burial services took place from Damascus Church. The attendance was large, and the floral offering was fine. Services by the rector, assisted by Rev. B. P. Harward.

P. T. KLAPP.

CHAPPELL.

John H. Chappell, a member of Pleasant Grove Christian Church, News Ferry, Va., died in the Old Soldiers' Home, Richmond, Va., July 3, 1923. The body was shipped to News Ferry and was interred in the family burying ground.

Brother Chappell was eighty-four years of age, and was a member of Pleasant Grove Church over fifty years. His faith in Jesus Christ as his Redeemer and Lord was evidenced by his regular worship of Him in His appointed house.

May the Lord grant that the faith of his children be none the less obvious. In the absence of his pastor, Rev. Joseph E. McCauley, service was conducted by the writer.

JOHN G. TRUITT.

EATON.

Mrs. Bettie Eaton, widow of the late Elijah Eaton, was born June 20, 1883, and died June 28, 1923, in Baltimore, where she had been making her home for several years. Her age was 70 years and 3 days. The remains were taken to Timber Ridge Christian Church, where funeral services were held July 1st. She is survived by four daughters and one son.

The deceased was for many years a member of the Timber Ridge Christian Church.

A. W. ANDES.

COX.

Little Mary Frances, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. I. Cox, of Parks X Roads Christian Church, died June 18, 1923, at the early age of 11 months and 13 days. Her life was as a rosebud, plucked from earth to bloom in heaven. For such, the kingdom of heaven is—children and those who are willing to become as little children, said the Master. May His blessings be upon the parents and loved ones.

T. J. G.

OLDHAM.

Mrs. Mary Frances Oldham died July 13, 1923, at the age of 82 years 8 months. She joined Antioch Christian Church sixty-two years ago, and was a consistent member until her death. Truly, a mother in Israel has fallen.

Sister Oldham was a woman every one spoke well of. She was a devoted wife and mother, and a good neighbor to those who needed her, never speaking ill of any one. She married W. L. Burke, and to this union was one daughter, Miss Belle Burke, who survives her mother. After being widowed, Sister Oldham married Marshall Oldham, and to this union was born eight children, and Brother Oldham previously had four children, making thirteen Sister Oldham mothered.

Services were conducted by the writer, and she was laid to rest in Antioch Cemetery to await the resurrection morn. May God bless and comfort the bereaved ones.

J. D. WICKER.

STOUT.

James Abner Stout, of Ramseur, N. C., died July 5, 1923, at the age of 68 years and 3 months. He is survived by his wife, Mrs. Abathea Stout; three sons—Oscar Stout, of Selma, N. C.; J. W. Stout, Sanford, N. C., and Ray Stout, Sanford—and two daughters, Mrs. Ethel Gunter and Miss Stella Stout, of Sanford, N. C.; several grandchildren, besides many other relatives and a host of friends, who lament his passing; but their loss is his gain.

He had been a faithful member of Parks X Roads Church for eighteen years. He said death was not feared, and spoke also of the city to which he was going, which hath foundation, whose builder and maker is God.

May the Heavenly Father comfort the hearts of the loved ones. A large congregation of friends from far and near attended the burial, and many beautiful flowers were placed over and around his grave.

THE SUN'S OBSERVATORY

Dangerous Poisons.—

Any sort of a poison is dangerous, isn't it? Yes, we presume it is; but some poisons are more dangerous than others by reason of the more deadly character, or by reason of the more one is likely to put into his system. The Presbyterian of the South puts it this way:

"Cigarettes are little things, and because they are so small most people seem to think they are harmless. Medical men tell us that they are far more injurious than cigars or pipes. This is due, it is said, to the fact that cigarette smoke is inhaled into the lungs. A physician of high standing has recently said: 'Whenever a young man addicted to cigarette smoking has a serious attack of pneumonia, his loved ones might as well kiss him good-by.' This shows how the lungs are weakened by such practice. And yet, men continue smoking cigarettes in ever-increasing numbers. And apparently no real effort is made to keep young boys from acquiring the habit. This is a subject that ought to be studied carefully by parents and teachers and others having the welfare of the human race at heart, and full instruction should be given, especially to the young, as to the consequences of the use of cigarettes."

Prize-Fighting.—

The world may be getting better, as some insist, but there seems to be many streams awfully filled with the filth of the flesh, pouring into the world's lap, and they make it seem quite a bitter pill. Only a few years ago this country seemed to wipe prize-fighting from the map of this generation; but, alas! it is again in full blast and going at a rapid rate. The prize-fighters seem to be the high-priced men of this great country. Even the President of the United States gets a far smaller salary than do the prize-fighters. There are no such gatherings known in America for size, as are the gatherings which assemble to witness a prize fight. The way they seem to have managed to override the law against prize-fighting in this country is a very simple matter. The prize-fighters recognize the fact that the law is against them. They went to work and got a law passed to permit the "manly sport" of boxing. Such a law was passed, and in a little while they were prize-fighting under that law, and in that way they wore out the law against prize-fighting till they again introduced the heathen custom, and now they seem to have a prize fight almost at any time and anywhere it may be wished. Only last winter, if memory serves us well, the friends of boxing tried to get a law through the Legislature of Virginia to allow the manly sport of boxing. What they were really seeking was the right to have a prize fight. They did not succeed, but you may be on the lookout, for the same or a similar effort will be made when the Legislature meets again, and then what? Shall old Virginia pass a law to permit boxing and then permit them to have, under that law, a prize fight? Let such a thing never be done.

The Government of Our Cities.—

The world seems to be one vast amphitheater of problems. In this day of progress we know of few things that make such progress as the matter of gocerning our cities, and the bigger the city, the bigger is the problem. It is getting to be so expensive as to seem to prohibit the government of our cities. It is getting to take so much to operate a city of government that it really looks like our cities may have to disband to keep the expense of governing itself from eating itself up financially. New York City has a population of 5,790,000, and it takes 93,000 persons to fill positions which they necessary have to have in order to run the machinery of city government. So it takes one person for every sixty-three of its population to govern the sixty-three.

Making allowance for the women and children who are not breadwinners, there is one city employee for every twenty-eight workers. That is, each twenty-eight workers must support one city employee. In Boston it is said that the proportion is 18 to 1. The people of this country are criminally long-suffering when they allow the politicians to place such burdens upon them. It is a well-established fact that the work of a city government is rarely ever done as economically as the same work would be done by a private corporation. There is no reason why a city employee should not render a full day's work, just as he would do if working for a private concern. If this can be secured, more efficient work will be done and the taxpayers will get better results at less cost than is the case now. Every man owes it to himself and to the country to see that all is done that is possible to secure good government for his city or country at as low a cost as it can be secured. This means that every man must do honest work.

The Kaiser Again to the Front.—

We get the following through an esteemed exchange, and we think it is worth letting the people know of the Kaiser and what he is doing. He still claims to be the head of the Church, and declares that there is no power on earth which can remove him from the head of the Church in Germany. As the head of the Church in Germany, he is writing a new Bible, or rewriting the Bible, and leaving out much of its present contents. Read as follows:

Kaiser Wilhelm, now an exile in Ooorn, is giving another evidence of his madness, and this explains in large part the madness which led him to throw the world into the greatest war of all history. No longer having to devote his time and thought to the affairs of state, he has turned to theology. We cannot say to the study of theology, but to developing a system of his own. The work that he is doing at present is that of revising the Bible. He begins by giving up almost all of the Old Testament. He says that, if the account of creation should be rewritten, it might be allowed to stand. But he claims that most of the Old Testament is not inspired and is of no value to the world today. He was and still claims to be the head of the German State Church, and says that no power on earth can remove him from that position. The man who gives up God's Word and teaches the people to do so, and who undertakes to establish a system of morality and religion of his own, is liable to do just what Wilhelm did. He puts himself above God, as was shown by the slogan he is said often to have used: "Ich und Gott" (I and God). Naturally, he did not regard the will of God, when it conflicted with his own will. There were many people in the world who hoped that, in the quietness of his enforced retirement, he would repent of the evil of his ways, confess his sins and ask forgiveness of God and of the world. Evidently he has no thought of doing so.

Are We Headed For Barbarism?—

Are we headed for barbarism? Years ago, prize-fighting was forbidden in this country, and we thought the ugly and brutal practice had been banished from this country forever, and yet it is back here again, and again the shameful and bloody battles between two men are to be witnessed in different parts of our country. The two men meet according to some prearranged plan, and notice is given to the public, and with the notice the date is also announced. It seems almost unbelievable, and yet it is true, these prize-fights draw the biggest crowds that assemble at any place in this country. Even the baseball games do not draw like a prize fight. Not only do they draw the people, but a larger amount of money is paid to witness a prize fight than for any other purpose. It is not uncommon for a prize fighter to make $100,000 for brutally fighting some fellowman, and no doubt there are many persons whose names stand upon some Church book who give more to support such a fight for one day, or maybe for only a few hours, than they pay for the support of the house of God for a whole year, and yet these men go along and pass for Christians. Oh! if only professing Christians would respect themselves a little—at least enough to keep out of prize fights. That our country tolerates and permits these prize fights is an awful testimony against our civilization, to say nothing of the Christianity which has been the power in the development of our country. Let us give the prize fight no quarters in this fair land.

NOTES-PERSONALS

Rev. P. H. Fleming is open to engagement as pastor, and ready and willing to give his whole time to the work. His address is Burlington, N. C.

There were quite a number of ministers, as well as laymen in attendance upon the Chautauqua from a distance. By far the largest attendance perhaps in its history.

"I am glad you are to give your full time to THE SUN. I think you are already giving us a very good paper, and I am enjoying its weekly visits."—Rev. J. F. Morgan, Winchester, Va.

Who shall be the man for the Berkley pulpit, made vacant by the resignation of Rev. E. B. Flory, who goes to Dayton, Ohio, to establish a new Church in the beautiful and growing city.

Rev. W. T. Scott, assisted by Rev. W. G. Crutchfield and others, last week held a series of meetings at Concord, in Caswell County, N. C. So far, we have no word indicating the results, but this will come later, as we trust.

Rev. H. Shelton Smith, Ph. D., is to have his address after August 1st at Defiance, Ohio. As we understand it, he is to be engaged with the Board of Christian Education, and his headquarters will be at Defiance, Ohio.

Rev. C. E. Gerringer has been in a meeting for some days at Apple's Chapel, in Guilford County, N. C. He was assisted by Rev. J. E. McCauley and Rev. P. T. Klapp. We look for good news from this meeting later.

Rev. H. S. Hardcastle, the new pastor of the Suffolk (Va.) Christian Church, has arrived. We tender to him and his good wife congratulations on coming to Virginia, and also on the arrival since they came to Virginia of a little girl in their home. Much happiness to you, friends!

Rev. Chas. H. Rowland, D. D., Franklin, Va., has been holding a series of meetings at Union, Alamance County, N. C. The meeting was conducted from July 22nd to 27th, and possibly longer. So far, we have no news except the opening sermon on Sunday, July 22nd, was able and helpful.

The many friends of Bro. Hermon Eldredge will be glad to know that Mrs. Eldredge, who, a few weeks ago, passed successfully through a major surgical operation, is doing well. It was a very dangerous operation, and while she is better and in good hope of complete recovery, it will still take several months for her to get to be herself again. Our people in the South will give these friends large sympathy in these hours of testing.

Dr. Geo. W. Watson, a member of the board of trustees of Elon College, has been on a visit to Virginia, taking a vacation and spending a few days with his daughter at Virgilina. He has returned and is looking well, although his age is showing its power over the body. He is maintaining a lively interest in our work, especially in the new buildings of Elon College. He is widely known in this part of the State, and has many friends. For many years he was a practicing physician in Alamance County, N. C. He has retired from his practice and lives at Elon College.

And what are you doing to make the Men and Millions Movement among us a success? Your help is needed—your part is a part of the great work to be accomplished, and if you leave your part undone, the work will, by so much, drag, and not do the work it ought to do and would do if you would help it.

We are glad to learn that Rev. Geo. D. Eastes, Portsmouth, Va., is slowly improving. We shall rejoice to know that he is on the way to speedy recovery. Let the prayers of our people be offered for him daily. He is yet a young man, and may have many years of usefulness among us, if so be that it may please the Lord.

Dr. W. A. Harper left Elon during the Chautauqua on an extended business trip. He was reluctant to absent himself during the Chautauqua, but business comes before pleasure. He will be away at least a couple of weeks, and it may be longer. We shall look for his return and the good news he may bring with a deep and abiding interest. We wish him great success.

The First Christian Church, Norfolk, Va. (Berkley), loses its pastor. The Rev. E. B. Flory has tendered his resignation as pastor of said Church to take effect October 1, 1923. He has received and accepted a call to establish a new Church in the River Dale section of Dayton, Ohio. Bro. Florry has made many friends in Virginia and North Carolina, and even as far south as Georgia and Alabama. They will regret to have him leave Virginia, but they will wish him well in his new field.

As we write these lines the Chautauqua at Elon is in full blast—the attendance is greatly increased over what it was last year; more than doubled, in fact. The interest on the part of most of those in attendance is very good. It is largely a body of young people, although there are a number of older people here. The young people are having a time. The first night (Monday) was called "Burlington Night," and the interest was well maintained. Rev. G. O. Lankford, D. D., president, and Rev. Mr. Opie, of the Episcopal Church of Burlington, made the principal address. Tuesday night was known as "North Carolina Night," and the program was given principally by our people of the Raleigh Christian Church, with Mr. Chas. H. Stephenson presiding. If the name of the night had been given to suit the occasion, it would have been better called "Fun Night" rather than "North Carolina Night." Dr. W. D. Parry was to deliver an address, but they kept up the fun-making so long that he gave us only a part of the address and closed at 10 o'clock. The address should have been given in the early part of the evening. Though it was so late when Dr. Parry got to speak, yet he held his audience well. Tonight (Wednesday night) is to be "Virginia Night." Dr. Staley is to preside, and Rev. I. W. Johnson, D. D., is to give the address.

The Baptist people of the United States are about to divide. They have stood solidly together for a long while. Rupture may yet be avoided, but we sincerely doubt that it can be. The division is coming at a most unexpected point. They are about to divide over the Bible, one side claiming that the Bible is not to be the rule of faith as a whole, and the other side claims the Bible is the revealed will of God, and therefore continues to stand as the rule of faith for the people of God. Those who are standing for the reliability of the Bible have organized what is known as "The Baptist Bible Union of America," and they are seeking to enlist the support and influence of all Baptists throughout the country for the Bible as the rule of faith and life. Of course, the modernists are fighting against this movement, but the fight does not stop the effort to organize the Baptists of the country in defense of the Bible. Already many Baptists have cast their lot in with the Union, and more will do so as the days come and go, and they can see the reason for such an organization. We do not believe for one moment that the Baptists of this country are ready to give up the Bible as the revealed will of God, and certainly the rest of us should give these Baptist stalwarts the help of our influence, and if need be of money too, or what would be better, if the men of other denominations who stand true to the Bible would begin to put themselves in shape for a similar purpose. God bless the men, irrespective of denomination, who mean to stand for the Bible till the end. No Christian people can afford to give up the Bible, for if they do they have absolutely no other source of authority for the Christian life, and to give up the Bible is to give up the Christian life, for we have no authority for the Christian life except in the Bible—the Bible alone is authority for the Christian life. We commend the action of our Baptist brethren in this most practical effort to keep the Bible in its place as the revelation of the truth of God.

CHURCH ATTENDANCE.

What per cent of your Church members are regular attendants at the Church services?

This question, if asked the pastors over the country, might possibly, and most probably would, prove a rather embarrassing one. However, it should not embarrass the pastor—but the members! This opinion now exists at our Church, after a very fair test. For two months a regular-attendance card was kept of each member of the Church. At the conclusion of this attendance campaign it was found that just four members out of the entire membership had been present at every service during those two months. One-half of the membership had attended at least one-half of the services, and the remainder of the members averaged having been present at two services.

Now, this situation has not caused us to lose heart, for we are again launched on a similar campaign for the next two months. We are optimistic enough to believe that at the end of this time the record of the two previous months will be exactly reversed.

Other Churches might try our plan and see what your result will be. We are of the opinion that it is going to mean better attendance, more interest, and the banishment of an embarrassing situation. MRS. JOHN B. STRATFORD.

A Weekly Presentation of Truth for the Christian Life.

EVERYTHING MUST COME TO JUDGMENT.

"For God shall bring every work into judgment, with every secret thing, whether it be good, or whether it be evil."—Eccle. 12:14.

"Whether we work or play, or sleep or wake,
The life we live passes into judgment."

Man has no great liking for judgment unless he is himself permitted to administer it to another. He is willing to review the actions, thoughts and motives of others, but it is no fancy of his to have another judge his motives and actions. It is a good thing that man is not the judge of men, since his judgment is so liable to be warped by selfish considerations. Our text tells us in very plain language that God will review in judgment every action, thought and motive, whether it be good or evil. From God's judgment, there can be no escape, neither can an appeal be taken to another court. Paul tells us that we must all stand before the judgment seat of Christ (see Rom. 14:10). That seems an all-sweeping statement, and there is but one way of escape, and that is by faith in the Son of God.

The teachings of the Bible declare that judgment will be of the most searching kind. Only one class of people can hope to escape—they who, through faith, are under the blood of Christ. Some of us are trying to persuade ourselves that God's love is so great that His judgment must necessarily be very light. That will be true of them who are His by faith, but His love cannot avail for the unbeliever, living in his sins. God is love, but God is also just, and to the people who refuse His love, His justice must come in power and vengeance. The love of God and His justice are measured to man according to his faith or his unbelief. Upon this point, the Lord has spoken in unmistakable terms. He says: "I, the Lord, search the heart, I try the reins, even to give to every man according to his ways and according to the fruit of his doing" (Jere. 17:10).

The heart is hidden from human eyes, but God looks into the life with a marvelous searchlight, and when He searches, He finds what is there—be it good or bad. From His eye nothing can be hidden. Thus it seems clear that the Lord will look us through and through. God does not judge us by what He sees on the outside, but He searches the heart to its depths and to its outmost limits.

Did you say: "Yes, but that is Old Testament teaching"! That is true, but it is also just as surely New Testament teaching. In Matt. 16:27, Jesus teaches the same, when He says: "For the Son of Man shall come in the glory of His Father with the holy angels: and then He shall reward every man according to his works."

Again, in Rom. 2:6, Paul teaches us that God will render to every man according to his deeds. If your deeds have been according to the Gospel, then your rewards will be likewise. If your deeds have been evil, your rewards will likewise be evil. One of the great dangers to men is trusting in the long suffering of God, after it has been exhausted. God is long suffering, but there is a limit, and beyond that His mercy is withdrawn.

Some seek to excuse themselves from the penalties which the judgment will impose, on the ground that they are weak and so liable to sin. They seem to forget that when men sin, it is in the face of the fact that God has provided deliverance for them, and that their failure is due to the fact that they failed to use offered help. This fact leaves them without excuse, and they must be judged by the law of God.

But how can even God Himself pass judgment on all of the millions and billions of sinners who have lived since Adam? It may not be such a task as you imagine. The Bank of England has a little machine which passes judgment on every coin which passes through the bank. It is automatic in its action. Every coin passed judgment on itself by its own weight. If it is of standard weight, the machine sends it to one side. If its weight is faulty, then the same machine sends it to the other side, and when the weighing is over, all the good coin are on one side, while all the bad coin will be found on the other side. Now, if a man can make such an arrangement for determining the character of a coin, can it possibly be anything strange that the Lord has a plan that will automatically settle the judgment against you in the day of days? There will be no mistakes in the judgments rendered. The moral and spiritual weight of each person will settle the matter of the man's destiny. To avoid the destiny which God assigns, that is impossible.

Coward or brave, can shun his destiny."
"No man of woman born,

—the destiny which his own character has assigned to him. There are persons who think that God destines every man for good or for evil. It is not so. God lays before the man the good way and the evil way. Your choice of the way settles your destiny—hence the great importance of a right choice!

"God has so framed us as to make freedom of choice and action the very basis of all moral improvement, and all our faculties, mental and moral, resent revolt against the idea of coercion."

We hear much said about the weaker brother as "a back number," "old fogy," "a hopeless crank," etc. Now, brethren, it poorly becomes Christian men to use such language, and we urge you not to do it. The United Presbyterian has some good words to say along this line, and we commend them to our readers, as follows:

In the early days of the Christian Churrch there were persons in its membership who were very scrupulous regarding the eating of meats and the observance of special days and seasons. The broad-minded Apostle Paul gave counsel to the stronger Christians to deal kindly with those of less rugged faith, to respect their scrupulous notions and to practice self-denial for their sake. Perhaps the weak brother may be regarded as an inconvenience, and even a mild nuisance at times. We look upon him as "queer" in his religious convictions and practices, petty and narrow in his conception of things. He may be so far behind the times that his modes of thought and action are more closely fitted to the period of James I than that of President Harding. What is to be done with the weak brother? The Scripture does not say that he is to be permitted to run the Church, to map out its programs and write its creeds and dictate its policies. But he is to be treated with consideration and charity. We are not to apply to him such uncomplimentary terms as "back number," or "old fogy" or "hopeless crank." Be generous toward him, and never forget that he is a brother in Christ Jesus, and at heart may be just as sincere and devoted as other fellowers of the Master. We are to practice self-denial in consideration of the moral safety of others. Paul declared that if the eating of meat would cause his brother to violate his conscience and go wrong, he would eat no meat while the world standeth. The "personal liberty" plea, of which we have heard a good deal, has a lot of selfishness in it. It is an expression of that egotistic, non-Christian philosophy which considers only personal inclinations and desires, and is serenely willing to let the other fellow take care of himself if he can. Real religion says, "I will make daily sacrifices in order to help my weak brother keep straight and true." In the vast majority of cases the "personal liberty" argument is nothing more than the cry of incarnated selfishness. It is the mark of noble souls that they gladly help to carry the burdens of those who are weaker than themselves. In doing so they "fulfill the law of Christ."

THE WORLD-TRANSFORMING LIFE.

A young Japanese, admitted to the study of Dr. Parks, of St. Bartholomew's Church, New York City, asked abruptly, "Sir, can you help me to find the beautiful life?" Dr. Parks answered:

"Do you wish to talk with me about religion?"

"Yes, sir; I want merely to find out about the beautiful life."

"Have you read the Bible?"

"Yes, sir; I have read some, but I don't like the Bible."

"Have you ever been to Church?"

"Yes, I have been twice, but I don't like the Church. I am trying to find the beautiful life. Many of you people do just as our Japanese people do—they are bad, they cheat and tell lies, yet they are all Christians. That is not what I want; I do not want your religion. But there is something I want. I cannot tell what it is; I call it the beautiful life, and they told me perhaps you could tell me about it."

"Where did you hear about it?"

"I never heard about it, but I saw a man in a boarding-house in San Francisco, soon after I landed—a poor old man, not an educated man like myself, who have studied in the University of Japan, and now am studying in one of your great universities; a poor man he was, a carpenter, but he had what all my life I have wanted. I thought it might be in the world, but I never saw it in my own country; I call it the beautiful life. How can I find it? This old man went about helping everybody; he was always happy, he never thought about himself. I knew him three weeks, and watched him all the time, and felt that I must have what he had. I have seen some other people who have had it. I do not know what it is. It cannot be your religion because you do not have it."

Dr. Parks read to him the thirteenth chapter of First Corinthians, that beautiful "love chapter" that means so much to us, and asked, "Is that it?"

"Yes, perhaps; it sounds like it. But how can I get it?"

Then Dr. Parks told him very simply the story of the perfectly beautiful life, and said: "Now, you have just to follow that life."

As his visitor left, he gave him a copy of the New Testament.

"Can you not give me a more modern book? You know Japanese are very up-to-date."

"No, it is not in any other book. This is the one Book you need. Study it, and pray that light may be given you to live this beautiful life."

Two years later the young man again visited Dr. Parks hurriedly just before leaving for San Francisco, called to an important position in his native land. His message was already written on his radiant face. "Sir, I have found the beautiful life—I have found Jesus." Then he went back to Japan to tell his own people of that life. —Wilbur F. J. PRESSLEY BARRETT, Editor,
Elon College, N. C.

FIFTY YEARS IN THE MINISTRY.

On August 10, 1873, with fear and trembling, I stood in the pulpit in Union Christian Church, Southampton County, Va., and preached my first sermon. The text was (Heb. 3:1)—

"Wherefore, holy brethren, partakers of the heavenly calling, consider the Apostle and High Priest of our profession, Christ Jesus."

Like many young men, I took a text which was too big for me; bigger than the man, and more than he could properly handle. No matter now how poor the sermon was then, it was the beginning of what God has permitted to be at least fifty years in the Christian ministry. It was a moment I have never forgotten. It seems almost as if it were but yesterday, so quickly have these fifty years come and gone. I can scarcely believe it possible that between that day and this, fifty long, and in some respects trying, years have come and gone. However, to dispute the facts will not change the truth.

Many times during these fifty years I have felt that the end was near, but in mercy the Lord of the harvest has permitted me to remain till this day. How well I have used my time and opportunities it is not for me to say, but I do know that many disappointments, blunders and failures have seemed to crowd my pathway, till again and again I have been possessed of the thought, and oppressed by it, that I am at best but an unprofitable servant, and yet the fact that the Master has put up with all of these, and allowed me to continue in His service, fills me with gratitude and thanksgiving. How good He has been again and again to give me another chance, and still I know, as no one else among men knows, that my life should have been a much better and a more fruitful life.

When I was a young man, I read in the Illustrated Christian Weekly an account of the last illness of the late Rev. John S. C. Abbott, D. D., of New England. As he lay there in his last illness, after a most useful life spent in service, as a minister of the Gospel, a historian and a man of letters, he declared that he was going into the presence of his Maker with not a thing to his credit, nothing on which to count as a plea for salvation, except the merits and the atoning blood of the Son of God. I was deeply impressed with his words, but I was greatly tempted to think the words were only words born of a sort of false modesty. I have never forgotten his statement, and now I wish to confess that I am prepared to believe what he said out and out, for again and again, in these later years of life, I have felt what he expressed—it is indeed all of Christ and none of self, so far as my hope of salvation is concerned. And now fifty years away from the starting point, I am having a sort of Mount Pisgah view of the end of the journey. In making these fifty long steps to this promontory, I must confess that the way has been checkered, and at times most difficult, but there has been far more of blessing than otherwise in the journey, and today I thank God for the privilege of the way I have come and for the prospect before me. If He can use me further, I am His to command; but if my work is nearing the sunset hour, then I trust I may just as cheerfully answer His last call and go home, beyond the river.

I seem to be out on the stormy sea of life, the breakers are many and high, and I am watching to catch the first glimpse of the shore-line beyond, but there are too many billow-caps in the way, and the mist is still too thick to permit my vision to penetrate so far, and I am waiting and working till these mists have rolled away, when the old ship of Zion on which I am traveling, as I trust, shall enter the haven of rest and I shall be forever with the Lord and the dear ones who have gone on before. The very thought is full of comfort and hope. All I now care to say is: after fifty years—

I am Still Homeward-Bound.
(Adapted.)

"A little longer tempest-tossed,
A little while to wait;
A few more days of chilling frost,
And then—the golden gate.

"A few more billows yet to meet,
White-crested by the foam;
A few more sorrows—then how sweet
Will be the rest at home.

"A little nearer every day
When falls the eventide;
The harbor is not far away
Where I shall forever abide.

"Yes, homeward bound, homeward bound,
By wave and tempest driven;
With fav'ring gale and swelling sail,
I hope to reach the port of heaven"!

THE POINT IS WELL TAKEN.

When we may have the direct teaching of Jesus to cover a thought, we ought to be submissive to that teaching—we ought to accept it as final and as full of authority.

It was Jesus who said: "Not that which goeth into the mouth defileth a man, but that which cometh out of the mouth, this defileth a man."—Matt. 15:11. We may, however, keep in mind the fact that what comes out of the mouth is more or less regulated by what goes in the mouth. If a man fill his stomach with impure food, he may do that with impunity, but presently when the stomach is made very sick and it begins to vomit, then he may get at what it means by saying it is not that which goes into the mouth that defiles, but that which comes out, and so it is, as Jesus taught, when a thing goes into the stomach no harm may be done, but when it gets ready to come out, then is the mischief wrought. It is the coming out process that proves the evil that has been done.

It is related that Thomas Bone, a missionary, laboring among the canal men, on one occasion approached a small company of laborers who were swearing. He said, as he came near them: "Good morning boys. Can any of you tell me just what kind of stuff that mill is grinding without going to look into the hopper?" Nobody could. And then one man asked Mr. Bone, saying: "Can you?" "Yes," he said; "I can, by watching what kind of stuff comes out at the spout." The reply was cleverly made, and the men laughed heartily at what the missionary had said. Then Mr. Bone again said: "Judging by what has been coming out of the spout, there must be some pretty bad stuff in the hopper." The story has application to many others than sailor boys. If you will watch what comes out of the lives of men, you can come pretty close to guessing what has been put in them. And this had a wide application. What is your life giving out? Tell me, and then I can tell what you have been taking in, and what you have been taking in settles largely what you are and what your life will put out.

Two audiences, of which I was a part, will illustrate the point well. In the first audience a speaker presented some rich truths. He not only presented rich truths, but he did it well. After the congregation had been dismissed, I noticed that the people were very chatty one to another, and I naturally supposed that they were discussing the rich spiritual repast which had just been served to them from the pulpit—but I was mistaken. On passing among the people, I observed that they were giving no thought whatever to the sermon that had just been preached, but they were gossiping and joking and telling funny tales to one another.

Soon after that I was in that same, or a similar, congregation, and heard a man "make a fool of himself" just to amuse the people—and he succeeded quite well. The people "laughed themselves sore," and then when the audience was dismissed, the people could not say enough in praise of the man who had made a fool of himself (and we must admit that he did the job well); and not only so, but that was what the people were talking about as they mingled together and as they went out. One would say: "Wasn't that fine?" The other would reply: "Fine, very fine." Another would say: "How did you like the work of that man?" "It was very good." And another was asked how he liked it, and he said: "I never enjoyed anything more in my life; it was the finest thing I ever heard."

We could but say: "Not that which goes in defiles the man, but that which comes out." The sermon brought nothing out, so far as I could observe, but the mimicry did. Then I said: "I see the difference. In one case the people took in and they gave out. In the other case they did not take in and they could not give out." The rich truths of Gospel grace could not be taken in; not that they did not have capacity sufficient to do so, but they were so full of the world and its spirit, they had no room for anything that was better. In the other case, they had taken in so much of the world and had so much of the world spirit in them, that they found it quite easy to swallow just anything that was offered them which was in keeping with what they had been taking in through the days that had come and gone. You see, we could tell by what they were putting out, just about what they had been taking in, and there you are! Now, which do you think is the wiser? If they had been taking in just what they were putting out in their expressions of appreciation of the man who had been "making a fool of himself," then there was not much evidence of their having taken in the thought which the Gospel offered them, although many of these people were prominent members of the Church. Now, what sort of Christianity are we building up? Do you like the output of the second crowd? We say the second, because the first did not seem to have any output—for the rich truths of the Gospel were so poorly received that there was no response, or practically none, at all. In one case, the truths were as rich as gold, but they brought no sign or indication of appreciation. In the other case, the mimic fed the people on foolishness, and they (many of them Church members) were most lavish in their praise for the man who had given them nothing on which the spiritual man could live, but they found it easy to feed on and appreciate what the man gave them who was simply "making a fool of himself." We said many of these people who went almost wild over the man who was "making a fool of himself" were Church members. Yes, and to a certain extent these were the same people who had found nothing in the rich truths of the Gospel, as presented in a great sermon, which called not out their words of praise and appreciation. Now, tell us, will you, what sort of Christianity did these people have—these who could appreciate a man "making a fool of himself," but could not appreciate the gospel truths as given out in a great sermon by a true and noble character from the pulpit? Which crowd were you in, and how do you like the looks of yourself, as seen in the light of these facts?

WILL CHRISTIAN TAXPAYERS STAND FOR THIS?

One day last February, the Rev. J. Frank Norris, D. D., pastor of the First Baptist Church, Fort Worth, Texas, delivered a stirring address before the Legislature of that State in support of a law prohibiting the teaching of evolution in tax-supported schools. The length of the address precludes its publication in our pages, but we hope it may be printed in pamphlet form and sent broadcast over the country, for, in our judgment, it surpasses in some respects even that of William Jennings Bryan, delivered the year previously on the same subject and under somewhat similar circumstances.

Dr. Norris was careful to say that the bill he was supporting was not to prevent the teaching of evolution, or to interfere with any one who believed in it, but simply to prevent its teaching in schools supported by public taxes.

He was equally careful to say that the bill did not oppose science—science means the things you know, not the things at which you guess, and evolution is merely guess, and a poor one at that.

The Bible is not opposed to science, and Dr. Norris showed that an impressive proof of its divine inspiration is found in the scientific facts it states which were hundreds, and in some cases, thousands of years in advance of their discovery by man.

He was careful to say further, that the evolution he was opposing was not identical with development in which everybody believes, but that it was something which denies God as Creator and practically eliminates Him from the universe. Luther Burbank can develop one plant from another plant, but it is still a plant, and he can make nothing else out of it; but that is not the evolution which these university professors are talking about. They are talking about something which traces man himself back from an animal to a vegetable, and from a vegetable to a mineral, and from a mineral to a primordial cell. The origin of the cell is a mystery.

They demand academic freedom, these professors do, i. e., the liberty to teach anything they please; but Dr. Norris pointed out to the legislators that such freedom was, in the end, more dangerous than the freedom to sell whiskey or to carry concealed arms. They might have that freedom, if they desired it, but they must not ask us to pay their bills while they are using it to destroy the faith which underlies our free institutions. It was not denominational schools that Dr. Norris was talking about, of course, but schools supported by public taxes—State schools and universities.

It was contrary to law to permit any religious creed or dogma to be taught in our public schools or colleges, and evolution was just that—a religious creed or dogma. It has its own view of God and creation, and is teaching it, contrary to the Christendom, whether Protestant or Catholic, of all the centuries. Neither Protestants nor Catholics, Jews nor Gentiles are insisting upon teaching their dogmas in our public schools, nor would they be permitted to do so. If they did, why, then, should these evolutionists force their views upon us, and at our expense?

Would we permit Buddhism to be taught in our public schools, or Mohammedanism, or Bolshevism?

As a matter of fact, evolution is Bolshevism in the long run. That is to say, like sin, when it is full-grown, it brings forth death. It eliminates the idea of a personal God, and with that goes all authority and government, all law and order.

And if some one should say, what if evolution is yet proven to be true, what if science shall ultimately establish it? The answer is, that when it does, that will settle it, but it has not done so yet. Evolution is in the region of probabilities all the time—"it would seem," "perhaps," "it may have been," "as yet we do not know," "so far as we can guess." These are the terms of evolution on which it is proposed to overturn the verities of the Bible and the verities of sound government in the nation and in the home.

Speaking of proof, Dr. Norris reminded the Texas legislators that in 1913 the evolutionists heralded to the world that they had at last discovered the missing link—the "Piltdown Man," as he was called—because a few pieces of bone and a tooth had been found on Piltdown Common, Essex, England. They brought these to a museum in New York, and after "scientists" had reconstructed the man out of them, thousands of school children were led to the museum to behold him—half man and half ape. They were told this was the missing link.—Weslyan Methodist.

But by and by, another scientist, himself an evolutionist, but a little skeptical, discovered that the foot was that of a chimpanzee and the tooth that of a gorilla, and that he could produce thousands of others just like them. The jawbone came from a still different animal.

Of course, we cannot go through the whole of Dr. Norris' great address as we should like to do, but he concluded with words of awful warning that ought to stir the legislators of Texas and of every other State. The reign of lawlessness threatening the existence of society itself is arresting the attention of our thoughtful citizens everywhere. Illinois seems to be putting its stamp of approval upon the crime of murder in the town of Herrin. Our jails and penitentiaries are crowded, and not by adults, but by youths of tender years. The more divorces a woman has, the brighter star she becomes in the moving-picture show. God is being ruled out of the life of men and of the nation. Let atheistic evolution have its way, and how long will it be until the recent incident in Russia is repeated in the United States, where professors met in the streets of Moscow and burned God in effigy.

The whole world is trembling in the balance, and instead of permitting the faith of our young men and women in God and in the Bible to be destroyed, the Legislatures of this country should, by solemn resolution, call upon the people of every name and creed to fall upon their faces as did those people of Nineveh and cry unto God for mercy.

"Gentlemen of the Legislature," said Dr. Norris, "there are three institutions that we love—the home, the Church and the school. The home, where children worship father and mother as uncrowned monarchs, let none invade its sacred precincts. The Church, let no atheistic university professor supported by the people, take the boy fresh from the side of his simple home and blight his virgin faith and send him back to his little country Church with the croaking voice of modern infidelity. The school, let war come, let the whole world be a sea of flame and blood, but give me America with homes of unsoiled virtue. Churches with unshaken faith, schools with Christian men at the head of them, and I will give you a nation that all the arms and nations of the world shall be unable to destroy."—Moody Bible Institute Monthly.

THE PEOPLE WHO DO ATTEND CHURCH, AND WHY.

The most efficient agency of human service on earth is the Christian Church, and they who would make their lives count should be counted among those upon whom the Church may count. Every non-attendant upon religious services virtually votes for the elimination of the institution from society. If we believe that the world needs the Church, we have but one clear, unmistakable and unanswerable way of stating it; that is, by regular Church attendance. The man who goes to Church stands for an indispensable institution, even as a good citizen stands for the State by voting.

The great master passions, such as love, honor, justice, patriotism and brotherhood, are kindled at the altars of the house of God. The most expensive thing about a Church from any point of view is the empty pew, and no well-conducted Church can afford it, even on the low plain of business efficiency. Church attendance is conducive to religious thinking. Take God out of the human mind, and you eliminate the greatest incentive to noble thinking and living, and the greatest safeguard of society. A churchless community, a community where men have abandoned and scoffed at or ignored their religious needs, is a community on the rapid downgrade. Church work and Church attendance means the cultivation of the habit of feeling some responsibility for others. At Church we meet and nod or speak to good, quiet neighbors, and go away feeling a little more charitable toward all the world, even toward those excessively foolish young men who regard Church-going as a soft performance. We may not hear what we term a good sermon, but we will hear a sermon by a good man, who, with his good wife, is engaged all the week in making hard lives a little easier; we will hear read or take part in reading some beautiful passages from the Bible and take part in singing some good hymns, all of which are indispensable in the building of Christian character.

I believe that going to Church is a duty we owe to the world, "for none of us liveth to himself, and none dieth to himself." The nature and extent of our obligations to our fellowmen, it seems to me, are rarely considered sufficiently to be adequately understood. How much, and what, do I owe to humanity? Literally, everything I have, everything I am; and this is so literally and so simply true that no man has a right to say, "I will do as I please with my possessions, my time, or my powers." If I have a strong and fair body, have I a right to be proud of it and do what I please with my physical strength? The long struggle and effort of the race in every stage of its progress, from brute propensity toward angel, has evolved whatever is fine and fair in the human form; and it is an outright gift to me. Is my brain power mine? The human race, from the beginning, has been developing and creating the human brain. When men have tried to think straight and clear, they have been creating brain cells as much as the athlete in his exercises creates lung cells.

IT MATTERS NOT.

F. M. Dunaphant.

It matters not that I am growing old;
Youth holds for me no long-enduring charm.
The "silver threads" will give me no alarm,
Nor waning strength a greater love for gold.
Though weak, infirm, and void of spirit bold,
I still shall weather life's incessant storm.
The gibes of youth can never do me harm,
For greater wisdom will the years unfold.
The "lonesome latter years" I shall not know.
When dimly shines the lonely evening star,
And wistfully the whispering breezes blow,
I shall in blissful silence cross "the bar"
And meet "my pilot" 'yond the sunset glow,
Where glory sheds its fadeless light afar.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

The kitchen and the cook have not had their true place in human appreciation. As a rule, the kitchen is the poorest room in the house and used the most. It is small, crowded with necessary and unnecessary things, poorly ventilated, and unattractive. Here, fumes and heat test the nerves and heart of cooks. Few people see the cook or the kitchen. The parlor, the dining-room, the sitting-room are open to guests. Here, are the decorations, the comforts, the electric fans. Here are the pictures, the magazines, the books, the morning papers. Care is taken in the construction of every room more than in the kitchen. Yet out of the kitchen come the things that sustain life—three meals a day for a hundred million people, many of whom eat their breakfast without thinking of God or the cook! Many are more inclined to complain of their food than to give thanks for it. It might be a fair estimate to count twenty million families in one hundred and ten million population. That would mean twenty million cooks. There are not that many in any other one occupation. These cooks are housewives or employees of all ages and ranks. They handle more food products than the railroads and steamships combined. They handle all that is transported and millions of tons that go no farther than from the garden, orchard, smokehouse, hen's nest, and milk pail and churn, to the kitchen. All the factories that manufacture cereals, breads, cakes, butter, sugar, salt, pepper, lard, baking powders, vinegars, and syrups, do not handle as much as the plain cooks, for they handle all these and more. The cooks make a great army ministering to the real life of the nation. Has any monument been erected to cooks? Has any painter adorned the walls of the art gallery with portraits of cooks? Has any library been dedicated to cooks? Has there been a great convention of cooks? Who feeds the world? Cooks!

Go back in the kitchen. It is a hot day. The fire burns. The pot boils. The oven bakes. The pan frys. The foreheads shed very life. The arms are bare. The brain plans. The hands shape and turn, lift and hold. The dinner comes out and sits in proud satisfaction on the dining-table, awaiting the guests. All is three times a day for three hundred and sixty-five days—or say three hundred and fifty days—over a thousand times a year. Think of a mother's lifetime spent largely in the kitchen. Think of the hired cooks who come early and prepare the morning meal. How many pay for the cooks? How many praise the cooks? How many complain? Well, this has not brought us to the dishwashing, which is as often as the cooking. When men sit or lie down to rest after the meal, the cook is washing dishes and cleaning up. Then what? Scrub the floor, plan the next meal, collect the material and begin again. Those who imagine that cooks do not have to think could learn lessons in the kitchen, where cooks read cook-books, make experiments, and achieve results. Good cooks are wise, if they do not work in the front room.

"We may live without poetry, music and art;
We may live without conscience, and live without heart;
We may live without friends, we may live without books—
But civilized man cannot live without cooks."

They are in the engine room, the power-house of the home, the hotel, the boarding-house, the restaurant, preparing the victuals that nourish the race. Kitchens should be larger, better furnished with conveniences, and the cooks should have our appreciation, our sympathy, and our prayers. There is more good health, good service, and good religion in the kitchen than well-fed people dream of.

ELON LETTER.

Knowledge will not save the world, else Greece would never have decended from her pinnacle of fame. Belief will not save the world, else there would be no hell; because the Scriptures tell us the devils believe and tremble, but they are devils still.

And so the extreme modernists and the extreme fundamentalists are both wrong. The modernist, or the higher critic, or the scientist, or whatever you wish to call the man who assumes that learning, knowledge, accurate scholarship will save, is ignorant of the racial erperience with sin. Knowledge has its place, but it is in itself powerless as a regenerative force. The fundamentalist, or authoritarian, or whatever you call him, who assumes that the acceptance of certain revealed truths will save, is ignorant of the Scriptures from which his truths are taken and also of the racial experience with sin. Belief has its function, but it in itself is powerless as a regenerative force.

Wherein, then, is our hope?

It is in a personal experience of God, using both knowledge and belief as paths of approach to and understanding of Him. How are we to secure such a co-ordination of the essential forces that make for Christian character? The answer is easy and based on the racial judgment—it is through Christian education, whose foundational purpose is to unite experience of God, knowledge, and revelation into a beautiful and symmetrical character. Out of institutions dedicated to this ideal have arisen the ministers and the lay leaders of the kingdom of God. It cannot continue to be otherwise. Christian education is the hope of the world. It is the fate of Christianity. As goes Christian education, so goes the Church of the living God, and as goes the Church, goes the nation. Education other than that of the Christian type gives us Kaiser Wilhelms and Prussianism. Much learning without Christian motive leads to personal, national, world chaos. Science in the service of man and of God is a beneficent force, making for the joy, the pleasure, the happiness of mankind. But science in the control of un-Christian men means world wars and the destruction of every moral virtue and spiritual value of life. We know enough now to kill the race overnight. All that prevents it is the Christian principle of loving service. Should this Christian principle ever lose its sway over the hearts of men, sad will be the plight of humankind. Christian education alone can prevent such a catastrophe.

How?

By motivating life in terms of Christial idealism, while the scientific discoveries of life and the truths of revealed religion are being co-ordinately taught the ripening mental powers of youth. This is the province of Christian education. The law of the land prevents tax-supported institutions from teaching our Christian faith. The Christian Churches must find a way to teach religion to those who study in these institutions or they will be democracy's undoing.

Meanwhile, in the Christian colleges, positive Christian nurture is always to be had, and these institutions, the real seminaries of spiritual altruism, are, as matters now stand, the hope and fate at once of our Christian civilization. Christian colleges stand for truth, the truth of revealed religion and the truth of scientific discovery. They recognize God as the author of religion and of science, and can find no reason for conflict between these two paths of approach to Him. The ultimate good of science and of the Christian revelation is safeguarded in the reverent atmosphere of spiritual faith characteristic of the genuinely Christian college. Above all, does such a college cherish as its inherent duty to introduce its students to God as Father and Jesus as personal Seviour and ever-present Friend, with the Holy Spirit as a conscious reality directing and motivating all life and conduct. Christian education teaches those who come under its influence to use science and religion to promote the welfare of humanity and the coming kingdom of our God.

And that is why Christian education is the hope of the world and is the fate of the Church of God. Thoughtful, reverent Christian parents and young people abounding in the altruism and idealism which are the native breath of youth, must pause long and prayerfully in deciding the proper attitude to be taken in the choice days of college life as between Christian colleges and colleges not able, for various reasons, to inculcate Christian truth along with the secular knowledge of life and learning.

BETHLEHEM LETTER.

Carefully filled out application blanks are coming in nearly every day now. It is inspiring to read the earnest letters of inquiry from prospective students.

The need and the opportunity for Christian education in this field becomes more challenging at every turn. I have mailed catalogues to all the addresses I have been able to get, and have handed out a good many catalogues personally. However, I feel sure that there are still a good many who would like to have catalogues but have not received them because no one has sent their names in. If you do not have a catalogue, write me a card and you will receive one by return mail.

The work on the building is moving along very satisfactorily. They are putting the roof on now (August 1st). The interior finishing will be rushed along as rapidly as possible.

It has been suggested by several that a good way to furnish the dormitory rooms would be to get different Churches or individuals to take the responsibility of furnishing one room. Wherever this matter has been mentioned, so far, the people have welcomed the opportunity enthusiastically. The Rock Stand Church was the first to promise to furnish a room, and others are following her example. The rooms will be named for the Churches or individuals who furnish them. The expense of furnishing a room is about fifty dollars. Money for this purpose should be sent to J. J. Carter, treasurer, Bethlehem College, Wadley, Ala. A committee will buy the furniture for the rooms in wholesale lots. Don't wait for an individual invitation in this matter. Think it over, talk it over with your friends, agitate it in your Church, and write us that you have decided to furnish a room.

THE ELON CHAUTAUQUA.

The Chautauqua and School of Methods of the Southern Christian Convention met for the second time at Elon College this year on July 30th to August 5th. It was the largest and best meeting which the Chautauqua has ever enjoyed. The work was systematically arranged, and courses of real benefit were offered.

There were 116 registrations this year, and almost all of those who registered attended classes faithfully. Certificates were awarded for the attendance on the course, nine of which were given, and three of which one person was able to take.

Courses in Bible, primary work, young people's work, Christian Endeavor expert, graded social service for the Sunday school, organization and administration of the Sunday school, a course for pastors, and interesting courses in missions and stewardship were offered. Besides the regular class-work, there were lectures of great interest and help given at the morning lecture hour and at the evening meetings of the Chautauqua.

The faculty were well-fitted for the work which they taught, and they did fine work. Miss Emma G. Lemen, who is with the Sunday School work of the State of Pennsylvania, gave the course in primary work. Her attractive personality made the course a very popular one. Miss Lemen is a well-known children's worker, and her work in the Junior Chautauqua was of a high order.

Rev. J. H. Lightbourne gave a most excellent course in Bible for young people. He is a very attractive personality, and his course was intensely interesting to the young people.

The young people's work was taught by Mr. Hermon Eldredge. His course was largely attended, as were his other meetings during the Chautauqua.

Revs. J. F. Morgan, E. B. Flory, Dr. H. Shelton Smith, Rev. J. H. Lightbourne, Mrs. Alice V. Morrill, Dr. J. O. Atkinson, and Dr. W. W. Staley were members of the faculty, and all did excellent work. The classes were well attended, and they were courses which appealed to the people in almost every line of Church work, as well as some fine courses of content.

The evening meetings were largely attended, and at those sessions some of the most interesting lectures of the Chautauqua were given, as well as other Chautauqua features of music, readings, and story-telling. The programs were so arranged as to appeal to every age and to every person interested in Church work and in the best in the amusement field.

At the opening session of the Chautauqua on Monday night, the program was furnished by the First Christian Church of Burlington. Dr. G. O. Lankford presided, and Dr. Thomas F. Opie, rector of the Church of the Holy Comforter (Episcopal) of Burlington. Dr. Opie spoke on the theme, "God and Education," and sounded a fine opening note for the work of the Chautauqua. Dr. Opie declared that "God and man, added together, made a universe; and take God away from the universe, and you didn't even have a 'fool's paradise.'" The address was one of the most powerful of the week.

Tuesday night was "North Carolina Night," and the program was in charge of the Raleigh Christian Church. With the fine work of Mr. Sherwood Brockwell, the Raleigh people were enabled to set a leading pace for the evening meetings. Mr. C. H. Stephenson, president of the North Carolina Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention, presided, and the address of the evening was delivered by Dr. W. D. Parry, pastor of the Raleigh Christian Church. Dr. Parry spoke on the "Great Game of Pretend," and his address was a very charming portrayal of the pretences of the average man intellectually, socially, and religiously.

The Virginia delegation had charge of the program on Wednesday night. Dr. W. W. Staley presided, and the address of the evening was delivered by Dr. I. W. Johnson, of Suffolk. Dr. Johnson discussed the contributions of Virginia to religious freedom. He gave some interesting facts concerning the early beginnings and growth of the Church. He declared that the founding and continuation of the Christian Church were real contributions to religious freedom.

Thursday night was "Young People's Night." W. B. Terrell presided. Mr. Terrell is a member of the Burlington Church, and is one of the young ministers of the Christian Church. The address was delivered by Mr. Hermon Eldredge on "The Law of the Road." It was an inspirational address, and impressed upon his audience the importance of remembering the children.

The First Christian Church of Greensboro had charge of the program on Friday night. Mr. W. B. Truitt presided and discussed the analogy between the Sunday school and an automobile, which had a number of most valuable suggestions. The Greensboro choir rendered a number of most pleasing selections, and Miss Della Cotten, of the Greensboro Church, gave two readings of interest and humor.

The Saturday night meeting was "Elon Night," and consisted of stunts, and other humorous features. The "Happy Hour" on Saturday was given over to an entertainment by the Junior Chautauqua.

Dr. C. H. Rowland preached at the Sunday morning services, and the Sunday School was in charge of Mr. Hermon Eldredge, of Erie, Pa. Rev. J. F. Morgan, pastor of the Winchester Christian Church, conducted a Christian Endeavor meeting at the "Happy Hour" on Sunday, and Mr. Hermon Eldredge finished the Chautauqua with a fine address on "Opening Doors."

Perhaps the best part of the Chautauqua, combining as it did instruction and inspiration, came at the morning lecture hour. Dr. R. C. Helfenstein delivered three lectures on "Evangelism." His first lecture was on "Pastoral Evangelism"; this was followed by lectures on "A Church Program of Evangelism" and "Educational Evangelism." At the morning lecture hour on Saturday, Dr. J. O. Atkinson spoke on "The Venture of Paul." This address seemed to have had a large appeal for those who heard him.

One of the most interesting features of the week was the Junior Chautauqua, in charge of Mrs. Robert Harden, Mrs. J. W. Patton, Miss Mary D. Atkinson, Miss Josephine Farmer, Mrs. C. M. Cannon, Miss Mary Graham Lawrence, Miss Alline McAdams. Here seventy-five children gathered for Bible stories and games and songs, and were a very real part of the Elon Chautauqua.

Dr. W. T. Walters, president of the Board of Religious Education, and Miss Lucy M. Eldredge, field secretary of the board, worked untiringly for the success of the Chautauqua. The attendance this year was nearly three times that of last year, and this bears ample testimony to the fine work of those in charge of the work. Many suggestions have come in by the request of the board. The Chautauqua in the coming years promises to go on increasing in value and interest.

PEOPLE'S CHURCH AWARDS CONTRACT FOR $100,000 MODERN BUILDING.

At the services Sunday at People's Christian Church, announcement was made by the pastor, Dr. R. C. Helfenstein, that the contract for the new Sunday School and social center building, adjoining the present edifice on Bradford Street, had been awarded.

Estimates for construction, furnishing and equipment will involve an expenditure of something over $100,000, which amount has been raised in pledges.

From an architectural standpoint and from the standpoint of utility, the building will be one of the best in the State, being designed to meet the needs of the modern religious education and social service. The building will provide for departmental Sunday School work, separate classrooms for each class and provision for graded study and worship. The building will also provide a large community hall for community gatherings of various kinds, which room will also be used as a gymnasium and recreational room. In short, the building is to be a modern Church home designed to be of service to the entire community life.

The committee in charge has visited similar buildings in Wilmington, Philadelphia, Washington and New York in order to get the best ideas to assist in planning a building to meet the local needs. The committee also consulted with Dr. H. Shelton Smith, religious educational expert for the denomination, and with Prof. Weigle, who is at the head of the department of religious education of Yale University.

The construction work will include a beautiful memorial tower which will serve as an entrance to the Church auditorium and to the new building. The interest of the public-spirited people of the entire community in behalf of the project is apparent, and the success of the congregation in making such an enterprise possible for Dover is appreciated by the entire community.

The contract calls for the building to be completed by February 1, 1924. Norman Hulme and J. A. Dull, of Philadelphia, are the architects, and James A. Hirons, of Dover, is the contractor. The architects will have full supervision of the construction work. The contractor is to begin work at once.

The junior department of the Sunday School is to have the honor of breaking the ground at the exercises to be held Wednesday afternoon next at 3 o'clock.

The making possible of this new building for People's Church and the community has been due largely to the efforts of the pastor of the Church, Dr. R. C. Helfenstein, and his efficient corps of workers on the building committee.—Wilmington Evening Journal.

GOD WATCHING OVER US.

Helen Keller's mother used to lean over her little Helen's cradle, where Helen was all entombed in her little body that weighed fifty pounds, and her ears were deaf, saying: "Oh, Helen, Helen, how I love you! Oh, Helen, what your father and I would do for you! We would work our fingers to the very bone if you could only understand." The mother sobbed her love over little Helen, the dumb and blind girl, and there were not many things in the world so heartbreaking as that mother, as she held this little girl to her bosom. And yet, all the time Helen Keller was saying to herself: "Oh, if mother would only speak to me! Oh, why are mothers giving only the whisperings of their love?" Ever little Helen would say: "I wonder if I have a father and mother, and, if I have, why clouds and darkness are round about them." When she was seven years of age she began to think that fathers and mothers were only seen through a glass, darkly; and yet her father and mother were breaking their hearts trying to reveal themselves to Helen. What a symbol of God leaning over the battlements of His heaven, speaking to us through all the summer, unrolling His will through all the procession of the seasons, giving to us His music in all its solemnity of sweet sounds.—Hillis.

THE BEATITUDE OF THE SURE-FOOTED.

This article is one of the "Monday Messages" which appear each week in the "Virginian-Pilot." It is from the pen of the Rev. J. T. Whitley, D. D., who was many years ago the editor of "The Christian Sun." He has for many years wielded a facile pen, giving expression to strong and wholesome thought. His friends among our people who yet remain in the flesh will be glad of a message from him.—Editor.

"Blessed is he, whosoever shall find no occasion of stumbling in Me," said Jesus to the disciples of John the Baptist who had come from their teacher with an anxious question. Let us call this a commendation of the sure-footed disciple, who knows the way so well that he does not trip over the roots and stones that project above his path.

The figure of speech that the Master used is that of a trap-stick, or snare (skandalon)—which means any impediment placed in the way and causing one to stumble or fall. As one who is made to stumble, naturally feels ruffled and displeased, the word came to include the notion of being "offended," and is thus expressed in the common version of the New Testament. The meaning that underlies this expressive figure as here used is thus set forth by competent scholarship: "To cause a person to begin to distrust and desert one whom he ought to trust and obey."

Now, John the Baptist was sure-footed enough when preaching and baptizing, and introducing Jesus as the Messiah to the people. But later on, when he had languished for months in a dungeon as Herod's prisoner, and Jesus was performing mighty miracles, the fact that the great Nazarene did not interpose to release him, and that the kingdom of God, as he understood it, was apparently making no progress, puzzled and discouraged him. No longer was he sure-footed, but his faith was staggering. So he sent to Jesus the question: "Art Thou He that cometh, or look we for another?" The reply went back in a form that ought to have reassured him, and probably did so, and the final word was a gentle reproof: "Blessed is he, whosoever shall find no occasion of stumbling in Me."—Matt. 11:2-6.

The citizens of Narazeth, the home town of Jesus, on one occasion are said to have been "offended in him," or scandalized, as the word may be rendered. He had come for a visit, and in the synagogue of his childhood had taught the townspeople, "insomuch that they were astonished, and said, Whence hath this man this wisdom, and these mighty works? Is not this the carpenter's son? Is not his mother called Mary? and his brethren, James and Joseph, and Simon, and Judas? And his sisters, are they not all with us? Whence, then, hath this man all these things? And they were offended (caused to stumble) in him."—Matt. 13:54-57.

The disciples thought themselves sure-footed that last night before the crucifixion, when they closed the hour of devotion with a hymn and followed their beloved Master to the Mount of Olives. "Then saith Jesus unto them, All ye shall be offended (caused to stumble) in Me this night: for it is written, I will smite the shepherd and the sheep of the flock shall be scattered abroad. * * * But Peter answered and said unto Him, If all shall be offended in Thee, I will never be offended. * * * Even if I must die with Thee, yet will I not deny Thee. Likewise, also, said all the disciples." Yet, before daylight next morning, when imminent danger arose, "all the disciples left him and fled," and Peter the champion boaster denied with oaths that he even knew the lonely Nazarene! Alas, the man who thinks himself most sure-footed in the way of faith and duty has need of abundant humility and prayer.

To the thoughtful observer it is evident that many persons who are more or less closely attached to Christ become easily scandalized on His account. Because He does not manage things in just the way that they desire or expect, like John the Baptist, they inquire doubtfully whether He is indeed to be trusted and followed to the uttermost. Or it may be that, because of His lowly origin and human characteristics, some of us join the townspeople of Nazareth in questioning whether He can be indeed the Son of God and Saviour of the world. Perhaps our too-confident feet stumble sometimes when we have come to our Gethsemane and found that the way of discipleship is the way of persecution and peril. Like Peter and the others on that fateful night, we find the way so dark and full of pitfalls that we stumble into self-seeking and leave our Lord at the crisis of need. These are dangers that beset us all, as every experienced disciple has found out for himself, and as every beginner in the pilgrim way must surely learn ere long. "Forewarned is forearmed," and the fact that these perils are made plain to us in the Scriptures may well serve to strengthen our faith and make steady our steps.

For every sure-footed disciple of the Master, and for every one who is trying hard to become sure and steady, there is a blessing. The word of Jesus is pledged for this beatitude: "Blessed is he, whosoever shall find no occasion of stumbling in Me." This means that the trusting heart is the happy one. We walk by faith and not by sight, but this does not mean credulity. It signifies a confidence based upon the character of God's dear Son, and not dependent upon our being able to understand all His plans, or to reconcile every difficulty that Christianity implies. Many questions that arise in our thinking must be reserved for answer until we no longer see "in a mirror, darkly," but "face to face" with the infinite source of wisdom. Meanwhile, it is both our duty and high privilege to follow our Leader with unfaltering steps, until the shadowed way of this earthly life shall merge into the luminous avenue of the blessed life to come.

STUDY LITERARY MASTERPIECES.

By Wm. Thornton Whitsett.

If one would know the great things in literature he should spend much time with the masters. There is much truth in the statement, "The world knows nothing of its greatest men." We spend so much time and effort in our discussions of the lesser lights in the world of letters that we sometimes forget the great suns that burn steadily in the firmament of fixed renown. It is often said that for the preservation of liberty we must frequently turn to the study of the fundamental principles; and with equal truth we may claim that for the formation of a correct taste and a keen and proper appreciation of the best in the world's thought, we must know well those few supreme artists of speech who stand as the great original authorities.

One may study a score of writers, nay hundreds! and not receive the real insight, the enlarged vision, the gain in grasp of far-reaching thoughts that may come from a close communion with one or two of the choicest spirits of the race. Delve deeply into the philosophies of Plato and Socrates and Aristotle, and one need not linger long as he traverses the ways marked out by Kant, and Descartes, and Hamilton, and James, and many others. He will find that it has been said with truth that Plato alone makes sad havoc of the originalities of all succeeding thinkers.

The same principle applies with even greater force in all other lines of literature. Turn to poetry. Spend weary days with the pages of every poet from, say Chaucer down to the present moment, and then for a change lay them all aside and give your attention entirely to Homer, Virgil, Dante, Goethe, and Shakespeare. There will come to you a sense of power, a feeling that you are drawing upon original sources, and you will be almost persuaded that, knowing these five master singers, it is hardly necessary to cultivate a very intimate acquaintance with many of the succeeding lesser lights.

The same is true in moral and religious writings. The books of a thousand years are valuable; they have much that will be helpful and inspiring; but they can never take the place of the close communion with its direct touch, with the very words of the Christ as He speaks as never man spake before.

We dwell too much with lesser lights, and reflections, when we may turn our eyes and gaze upon the great central suns. Commentaries and explanations and learned disquisitions all have their place, but to gain true strength we need to go to the originals ourselves, and make our own interpretations, and draw our own conclusions.

Standing once upon the mountain peak, we can take in all the smaller hills and lower elevations, and we gain a sense of values, a proportion of perspectives, that can never be had by spending all our time roaming over the lesser hills. Once get the comprehensive view for yourself, and ever afterwards you will be enabled to see things in a justness of proportion that would have been otherwise impossible.

Would you have the mind enlarged to its full capacity? The appreciation and taste of what is best set to proper standards? The ability to estimate and judge cultivated? Then, go often to the study of those who, by their wonderful gifts, have been the interpreters of what is deepest and richest and finest in life. There will result such a sense of growth and power as will repay a thousandfold for the effort. In no other way can there ever come a sense of the certainty of values, and a confidence that you are really estimating things by their true standards of value. Nothing can take the place of the study of original sources of human knowledge. The masterpieces must be known if we are to rightly estimate all lesser productions.

With our presses pouring out their floods of books in every line of thought, there is great need that we do not become confused. Ink and paper alone can make no real book. Thought is supreme. The real standards are fixed, and secure. If you have time for nothing else, then see that you know the great books that stand as the ultimate climax of man's reach of thought. Knowing these you can afford to not know all others; not knowing these, the knowing of all others will not atone. "In every epoch of the world the great event is the arrival of a thinker in the world."—Carlyle's "Heroes and Hero Worship."

ESTO PERPETUA.

As I have pondered o'er the sweep of years,
Marking man's story since his primal hour,
And in my vision seen exultant power
Yielding so soon to shivering, coward fears;
Assyrian, Chaldean, Persian, each appears
One moment brief above all else to tower,
Then quickly at another's foot to cower;
So classic Greece, and Rome's embattled spears.

I would discern the reason for their fate,
If it be not beyond all mortal ken,
That standing clear upon the outspread page
And read and heeded ere it be too late
Might point this Midas-grasping land of men
To fairer days with each advancing age.

Questions and Answers.

Question.—When you tell us that a certain book is the Bible, what do you mean by that expression—the Bible?—Inquirer.

It means the Book we call the Bible is the perfect revelation of the will of God, given for the benefit of His people, that they might know the truth and that the truth might make them free to do the will thus revealed to them. This was true not only with reference to the people of the day in which this great Book was given, but it means the same to all peoples in every age and in every country under the sun. It is through this Book that He speaks to us—to the people of every country and age; every class and condition of the human family to whom this Book is sent. In it is a message for every class and condition of the human family. It is for the high and the low, for the rich and poor, for the learned and the ignorant, for the old and for the young. Its language is so simple that a child may find his way back to God through its teaching, and yet it is so profound that the greatest intellect can never exhaust it. The messages of this Book speak not alone to the mind, but also to the heart. It touches the deepest springs of human thought and feeling. It searches the hearts of men and reveals themselves to themselves, till they can see what manner of persons they are. Thus the Bible, as Paul puts it in Heb. 4:12, "For the Word of God is quick, and powerful, and sharper than any two-edged sword, piercing even to the dividing asunder of soul and spirit, and of the joints and marrow, and is a discerner of the thoughts and intents of the heart." When I say the Bible is the Word of God, I mean it is what God has said to the world concerning its salvation and its privilege to have eternal life in Christ.

Question.—The following quotation is credited to George Clark Peck. Do you think he takes the right view of the question he discusses?—Sandy Ridge.

The quotation referred to is as follows: "Napoleon said he made good soldiers by telling them that they were good soldiers. Everybody likes to live up to his reputation. The surest way to help a man disappoint his baser self is by crediting him with a good self; by capitalizing him, so to speak, as hope sees him. In a way, we feel morally committed to strike twelve if someone sets our hands at noon. Even our pitiful shifts at make-believe confess a deep hunger for the approval of others. Give a dog a bad name and you have killed his enterprise to be a good dog. Expect good out of folks. I used to wonder at Christ's persistent expressions of faith in His friends. I did not understand how He could rate Peter and Thomas so high. Now I know. He was playing for the great stakes of the soul. He visualized men as His love required of them. He knew that one of the surest ways of redeeming them was by making them ashamed to fall below His dream for them. Hence He gauged them at their highest and treated them as scions of the royal line."

No. We cannot agree with Mr. Peck. And we do not believe that Jesus Christ praised unworthy disciples in order to make them worthy. It is contrary to the spirit of Jesus. We know that there are men who hold this view, but we believe they are mistaken. If you have a man under you that is working for you, or under you, for another, who is very earnest and faithful over trying to do his best, then such words of encouragement as Mr. Peck speaks of will no doubt be helpful to him and enable him to reach a higher degree of efficiency than he could otherwise do; but to offer such help to a man who is a dullard, or who is not trying to do a worthy part, and in that event you may praise him all you wish, and you will make yourself a pretender, but you will not produce out of such a man a workman that is worthy of the name. I believe it is right to offer words of encouragement and approval to men who are trying, but, after doing their best, fail. To such men, words of encouragement will help much. You may as well spend your breath on the desert air in the hope of transforming the very atmosphere and making it sweet with the fragrance of the rose as to hope to get a good workman by praising a worthless one. We do not for one moment believe that Jesus used such tactics in order to bring an indifferent disciple to be a worthy one. To me that is the same as charging Jesus with saying what He did not believe, and we know He was not that sort of a character. That is very much like the theory of some leaders who claim that the way to enlist the sympathy and interest of a man who is worthless to the cause is to put him into office. This argument is that such responsibility will induce him to take his place and straighten up and make a good worker of him. That may be true, but in a public life of almost fifty years, I cannot recall an instance when such a course brought such results. To the man who is doing his best, words of encouragement will be invaluable, but to the man who does not care what he does and does not care whether he succeeds or not, words of praise will fall on the empty air, and nothing will come of it.

Question.—Is there any real difference between science and the Bible? In other words, do they agree or disagree?—Jasper.

Between the Scriptures and science there is no disagreement, so far as we are informed. Between the Scriptures and science, falsely so-called, there is a gulf between the two. The Scriptures are true, and false science is false, so we cannot with any wisdom contrast them. God is the Author of both the Bible and true science, and of course He would not dispute Himself—never! Mr. Bryan puts the matter thus: "There is no antagonism between religion and real science. Science is classified knowledge; therefore, nothing is scientific unless true. No truth can hurt the Bible. No truth can harm Christianity. Our objection is to the unsupported guesses put forth by scientists in the name of science. The guess to which we most object is that man is a descendant of the brutes. The document published this morning obscures the issue. If the man who wrote the statement had explained that the theology denounced as mediaeval teaches that the Bible is true, that Christ was born of the virgin, suffered for man's sin and rose from the dead, it is probable that some of the men named would have refused to sign. If these men believe that man came up from the animals, why don't they dispense with their long and high-sounding words and use every-day language? Let them point out the parts of the Bible that they reject and the public can understand their issue."

Question.—What is the meaning of the word "Deuteronomy," as applied to one of the books of the Bible?—John T.

Some claim that the word "Deuteronomy" means a repetition of the law. This is doubtful. Deuteronomy is the Greek for "These are the words," meaning these are the words of the law. Deuteronomy is one of the great books of the Bible and is full of sublime thoughts for the human family. The book of Deuteronomy is in Hebrew, but its name comes from the Septuagint, the Greek version of the Old Testament.

THE HOLY SPIRIT'S RELATION TO THE BELIEVER.

Sunday, May 20th, was Whitsunday, the day which commemorated the Day of Pentecost. It is always appropriate to sing at such a time that noble hymn of Gregory the Great:

Come, Holy Ghost, our souls inspire,
And lighten with celestial fire;
Thou the anointing Spirit art,
Who dost thy sevenfold gifts impart:
Thy blessed unction from above
Is comfort, life, and fire of love.

Enable with perpetual light
The dullness of our blinded sight;
Anoint and cheer our soiled face
With the abundance of Thy grace;
Keep far our foes, give peace at home;
Where thou art guide, no ill can come.

Teach us to know the Father, Son,
And Thee, of both, to be but one;
That through the ages all along,
This may be our endless song:
Praise to thy eternal merit,
Father, Son, and Holy Spirit.

Consider the relation of the Holy Spirit to the believer's life. It has been set forth thus:

"The seal of the Spirit.—Eph. 1:13; 2 Cor. 1:22; Eph. 4:30.

"The witness of the Spirit.—Rom. 8-16; 1 John 5-10, 13.

"The indwelling of the Spirit.—John 14-17; Rom. 8-11; 1 Cor. 6-9; Gal. 4-6.

"The fulness of the Spirit.—John 3-34; John 7-38, 39; Acts 2-4; Acts 4-31; Eph. 5-18.

"The baptism of the Spirit.—Mark 1-8; Matt. 3-16; Acts 1-5; Acts 2-37, 38; Acts 10-45; Acts 11-16, 16.

"The strengthening of the Spirit.—Eph. 3-16; compare Luke 22-54-60 with Acts 2-14.

"The power of the Spirit.—Acts 1-8, 4-31-33; 1 Cor. 2-4; 1 Thess. 1-5.

"The inworking of the Spirit.—Eph. 1-8; Phil. 2-13; Col. 1-29.

"The leading of the Spirit.—John 16-13; Ps. 32-8.

"The teaching of the Spirit.—John 14-26; 1 John 2-27.

"The liberty of the Spirit.—2 Cor. 3-17; Rom. 8-2.

"The comfort of the Spirit.—John 14-16, 18, 26; Ch. 15, 26.

"The intercession of the Spirit.—Rom. 8-26.

"The fruit of the Spirit.—Gal. 5-22, 23; Rom. 6-22.

"The fellowship of the Spirit.—Phil. 2:1; 2 Cor. 13:14; 1 Cor. 12, 4-12; 1 John 1-3, 7.

"The sanctification of the Spirit.—1 Thess. 5-23; Heb. 13-12; 1 Pet. 3-15; Heb. 2-11; 1 Pet. 1-15, 16."—Pentecostal Herald.

HE CARES.

A lady told me recently that at a very critical moment in her life she was saved by what she has ever since regarded as a remarkable experience. She had been in deep trouble, and was thoroughly wretched. She saw nothing ahead, the night seemed starless, dark and black. In her despair, she determined to end her unhappy life. She walked to a large pond in the vicinity and sat down upon the edge of it a moment to think. Then, when she was on the point of plunging in, she felt a pressure upon her shoulders from behind, holding her back. No human being was near, but she is sure somebody held her back. She tried to break away from the restraint, but she could not. She believes that it was God who saved her. She is now a happy and useful Christian and Church member.—Ewart.

MISSIONS

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Field Secretary.

The Raleigh News and Observer of July 23rd carried the following rather unusual news item:

"Al. Staton, former football star of the Georgia School of Technology, has turned down a $10,000 job to work as a missionary in South America at $100 a month. Suppose everybody was like Al. Staton, anxious to do good rather than to make money—what a different world it would be!"

There is a vast difference in working quietly away on the mission field at $1,200 and living in the notoriety of the football world at $10,000 a year. It certainly is refreshing to find that there are some young men yet left and coming out of the schools who cannot be purchased at any price, and put service above dollars. And who will say that Al. Staton has not chosen the better part, and is in for a better time, more real joy and vital living than he would have realized as a ball star! J. O. A.

SOMETHING UNUSUAL IN CHURCH BUILDING.

Our Lanett Christian Church, costing $9,000, is nearing completion, according to a letter just received from the wide-awake and beloved pastor, Rev. H. M. Gray. Pastor Gray and his people determined to build on the "pay as you go" basis, and they have lived up to this schedule, and now only lack $126, which they purpose having in hand by the time the work is done and the Church complete. It has been decided to put in pews, costing $1,600, which will make a total cost of Church and seating $10,600.00. Brother Gray says that it is a modern, up-to-date building, and one that any congregation may be proud of. Since last Conference, the Church has received twenty-four members, which show that congregations trying to do things in the Master's name increase.

Lanett Christian Church has done a most unusual thing in building so quickly (their campaign for funds began February 1st, and the building operations some two months later) and paying as the work went on. Such a program is not only inspiring to that congregation, but should be to others as well. J. O. ATKINSON.

HOW MUCH ARE YOU WORTH?

If a man makes a solemn promise to do certain things, it would seem that he should be intensely interested in keeping his word. For, after all, there is no higher commendation that can be made for a man than that he is a man of his word. We are worth just as much as our word is worth, no more and no less.

It is perfectly true that many persons persuade themselves that to be a Christian one needs only to have a certain attitude of mind or a certain assurance of acceptability to satisfy God's demand upon him, but this comfortable feeling is one by which he satisfies himself rather than an acceptance of the responsibility for service that Christ puts upon him.

For Christ accepted discipleship on the basis of service rendered rather than that of satisfying curiosity or the comfortable assurance of easy familiarity with God.

Any one who reads the Gospels with the desire of ascertaining what he ought to do, must acknowledge that Christ expected obedience from His disciples, and such an obedience as involved service and self-sacrifice. To evade the latter is to forfeit our discipleship, as innumerable instances in the Gospel remind us. The intolerable thing to Christ was that the disciples should do nothing but say, "Lord! Lord!"

The man who buried his talent was a worse offender than the thief whom He forgave.

The rich man who neglected the duty that lay before him every day was of less esteem to God than the beggar full of sores and inefficiency.

The foolish virgins who had no oil in their lamps were shut out rather than the woman who was a sinner and loved much.

Those who failed to feed the hungry, clothe the naked or house the stranger were condemned more severely than Zacchaeus, who was a grafter on society, or Simon who was a political fanatic.

God expects that we recognize the principle contained in the statement: "All things come of Thee, O Lord, and of Thine own have we given Thee." It were infinitely better that we never had money or talents than having them to refuse to use them as God directs.

Let us face this issue fairly as Christians, that we are committed by our solemn promise to use our talents in God's service as He directs and not as though the possession of money or talents entitle us to use them as though we never expected Him to call us to account for their use."

Bishop I. P. Johnson, of Colorado, wrote the above. If he is correct in saying that one is worth just as much as one's word, no more and no less, then it certainly behooves us to prove our worth by living up to our word.

ROMANCE OF HYMNS AND TUNES.

"There is sure romance in our Church hymnody, romance that is thrilling, gripping, and soul-stirring," says Edward E. Hipsher, in an article in The Etude, accompanying the magazine's publication of America's favorite hymns. We herewith reprint the story of the three hymns standing highest in the estimation of those who voted for their favorite hymns:

"Abide With Me."

Because of ill health, Henry Francis Lyte (1793-1847), an obscure Devonshire parson, found himself unable to continue his pastoral work and prepared for a southern journey. He planned a final communion service, though, as he wrote, "scarcely able to crawl." While administering the sacrament he said to his flock: "I stand before you seasonably, as alive from the dead."

Tearful parishioners partook of the sacred elements he distributed. Having given a last adieu to them, he retired to his chamber. As the evening shadows gathered, he handed to a relative this immortal hymn to which he has added music. It was his swan-song; for, but a few days later, he passed away, with "Peace, joy" on his lips.

The tune, "Eventide," popularly associated with these verses, is one of the few surviving compositions of William Henry Monk (1823-1899), in his day a well-known English organist and composer. He taught vocal music in King's College, the National Training College, and Bedford College, all of London. He was a musical editor of several hymnals, among them the standard "Hymns, Ancient and Modern." His last post as organist was at St. Matthias Church, Stoke Newington.

This hymn has a wonderful record as a soul-saving medium. It is true to the Gospel, and has been a source of comfort to multitudes in distress. It is one of those which have a peculiar appeal to the lowly.

"Nearer, My God, to Thee."

This hymn ranks among the best in the English language. One may safely say that it is the most widely popular of all written by female hymnists. It was from the pen of Mrs. Sarah Flower Adams (1805-1849), a woman of fine literary taste and in later life known for her religious zeal.

Because she worshiped with the Unitarians and contributed to their hymnals, she has been persistently classed with them, thus bringing down undue criticism on her best-known hymn, from the orthodox. Some have quarreled with it because of its close adherence to the story of Jacob at Bethel. In spite of these objections, devout worshipers the world over sung it with their own interpretation, and are satisfied.

It is an incomparable lyric. The refrain, "Nearer, My God, to Thee, nearer to Thee," is so graceful, so simple, and so blends with the whole poem as to lend greatly to the lyric effectiveness. The aspiration of the hymn is emphatic, and the climax grows with each verse in triumphant upward steps.

The music, "Bethany," is an old English tune harmonized by Lowell Mason (1792-1872), one of the best known of the early American musicians. He was self-taught, became director of a Church choir (Medfield, Mass.) at sixteen, and located in Boston in 1827, where he became president of the Handel and Haydn Society. He taught classes and was the pioneer music teacher in the American public schools. He published many collections of music with great financial profit.

Though lacking a distinct evangelical expression, "Nearer, My God, to Thee" is unsurpassed in popular esteem. It was the favorite of President McKinley, and he died with its strains on his lips.

"Lead, Kindly Light."

The popularity of this hymn is just a little baffling. One would scarcely risk classing it as a great poem, a great hymn, or a really lyrical piece of English. Yet, in spite of its many jars in rythm, it has passages of striking beauty. Then, a spirit pervades the poem that lifts the darkness which oppresses those in trouble or grief. The heart-touch of the last two lines is scarcely equaled in our language.

The poem was written by John Henry (Cardinal) Newman (1801-1890), while becalmed for a week on a sailing vessel in the straits of Bonaficio. Born in London, educated for and ordained in the English ministry, he entered the Roman Catholic Church in 1845. His celebrity rests on this production.

The tune "Lux Benigna," is the composition of Rev. John Bacchus Dykes (1823-1876), an English divine and musician. Of fine scholarly attainments, he received the degree of doctor of music in 1861. Among his fine hymns, this one is peculiarly effective. Doubtless no small part of the popularity of the hymn is due to the music, so vividly reflecting the spirit of the words.

The real meaning of the hymn has been a subject of lively discussion. Often attacked as atheistic because omitting direct reference or appeal to the Deity, its spirituality is of the type which lifts the soul. When asked, in later life, to interpret the closing lines, the author declared them to be the fruit of some "transient" state of mind, though, doubtless, they were the result of a furtive vision of his own loved ones "lost awhile."—The Watchword.

LETTER FROM BRO. ELDER.

Dear Christian Sun:

I have held revivals in the following Churches in my field: Ambrose, Kite, Enigma, Vanceville, and Rondoll's Crossing. Rev. Jessie H. Dollar was with me in all these meetings. He did the preaching and did it well. My Churches were delighted with him. His wife was with him in three of these meetings and endeared herself with my people. Bro. Dollar is a promising young man, and bids fair to be a great preacher.

We had about twenty-five additions to these Churches. I have been with Bro. Hunt, at New Hope, Ala., for several days in a very fine meeting. It was good to be there. This is the oldest Church in Georgia and Alabama and the mother of all the Churches. I was born and married in view of this Church; was converted and joined the Church here forty-three years ago tonight; I preached my first sermon here; taught school there three years. Most of my people are buried here. It is a dear, sacred place to me. It is always a pleasure to be with Bro. Hunt. He is a great and good man, loved by a large constituency. I had the pleasure of meeting Prof. Hook, president of Bethlehem College. I also went over to the college, and found them busy on the building. They are at work on the third story, and are expecting to have it ready by September. The college building will be an imposing structure. I am to go to North Alabama the week following the second Sunday in August to help my brother, J. W. Elder, in a revival for two weeks.

On July 25th we organized the Wyche Elder Memorial Association at the old homestead near New Hope, in Chambers, County, Ala. We met in a grove, and had a fine spread, at which seventy-four partook. Rev. G. D. Hunt made a wonderful address. The writer made a short address. An organization was formed. Mr. Jesse Elder, of Anniston, Ala., was elected president; Mrs. Francis Osborn (nee Elder) was elected secretary and treasurer; Miss Jana Stephenson was elected assistant secretary, and the writer was elected to write a history of the Elder family.

This association is to meet annually on the Wednesday after the fourth Sunday in July at the old homestead. Rev. W. W. Elder came to Alabama and settled here in 1849. He was the only preacher of the Christian Church in Georgia or Alabama at that time, and constituted New Hope Church.

May the good Father of us all guide in the work of the kingdom. H. W. Elder.

3,000 THE CHRISTIAN SUN. 9,000

There are between 8,000 and 10,000 families represented in the Southern Christian Convention, which means if a copy of The Christian Sun is placed in each family, a possible subscription list of 9,000 copies. There are now circulated approximately 3,000 copies, or about one-third of our Church families are reached. Hence, there should be added to the list 6,000 new subscribers in order to have the Church paper placed in every family.

Now, the great personal effort required to do this must be rewarded. To compensate this labor, if premiums are given, it will take 20 automobiles, or 40 radio machines, or 50 to 60 talking machines, or 90 to 100 typewriters, or 200 to 300 watches, etc. Don't you think you will have a good opportunity to secure one of these prizes?

But you need not confine your solicitations to your Church alone. You have friends in other denominations who will gladly assist you by giving a subscription. Make your appeal in a straightforward manner. True men and women are interested in the success of their friends and will lend a helping hand.

Premiums Given for New Subscriptions.

The subscription price of The Sun, recently reduced, is now $2.00 per year—two six-month subscriptions at $1.00 each count as one year. One person may take as many as he may wish for himself or for others. Those in arrears should pay up and assist the solicitor by taking an advanced subscription.

Schedule.

1. To one securing 350 Subscriptions, a Ford Touring Car will be given ($298.00 f. o. b. factory).
2. To one securing 150 Subscriptions, one Radio Equipment—Westinghouse R-6 Set, complete with batteries, tubes, phone and aerial equipment, the price of which is $150.00.
3. To one securing 100 Subscriptions will be given one Victrola ($75.00), or cash prize of $50.00.
4. To one securing 75 Subscriptions, one Remington Portable Typewriter, with standard keyboard and case ($60.00 f. o. b. Richmond).
5. To one securing 30 Subscriptions, one Gentleman's or one Lady's Wrist Watch will be given, guaranteed by Jahnke Bros., Jewelers, of Richmond, Va. ($30.00).
6. For 25 Subscriptions, one Gentleman's or Lady's Watch ($25.00), likewise guaranteed by Jahnke Bros.
7. To one securing 20 Subscriptions, one Standard or International Dictionary will be given.

To all authorized solicitors will be paid 10 per cent commission on all renewals, and 20 per cent on all new subscriptions. Those receiving prizes will not be entitled to commission.

Two renewal subscriptions will be counted as one in determining the winners of prizes.

Send in your name and address and receive the necessary report blanks and receipt books.

The contest will close on October 31, 1923.

Remittances made on this campaign are to be net. Post-office money orders constitute a safe plan of remittance.

Subject: "Stephen, the Martyr."—Acts 6:1-8:3, 22:20.

Golden Text: "Who shall separate us from the love of Christ? Shall tribulation, or anguish, or persecution, or famine, or nakedness, or peril, or sword?"—Romans 8:35.

Devotional Reading: Romans 8:31-39.

The Life and Work of a Christian Hero.

Being a follower of the Lord Jesus Christ is not an easy task. Always has Christianity called forth heroes and heroines. Ever does the Gospel of Jesus Christ need faithful preachers and teachers, ministers and laymen, brave men and women to sound forth its great call to men to believe. The early Christians were great characters. Their lives still stand out to remind us, their successors, that the program of Jesus Christ is worth living for, and worth dying for. Stephen's life was not in vain, because it was ended by stones hurled by angry men. Stephen lives today as his life-story is studied by a host of Christian students. Stephen lives today as his loyal stand for the faith influenced the life of the first great missionary, the Paul who gave to the world a great life-story, and writings which can never be forgotten. Stephen, the hero, exhibits, through his belief and deeds, the faith in God which must characterize the man or woman who is needed most today to correct modern evils, and clean up today's corruption. What were some of the secrets of this faith which led him with a forgiving spirit for his enemies to kneel down and "fall asleep."

(1) *Stephen was a "man full of faith * * * and of power."* The two go together. Faith develops and produces power. The man of faith is the worker of power.

(2) Stephen was a man of prayer. "And when they had prayed," the Bible says, they went to their work. Without feeling close to God, Stephen could never have been the first Christian martyr. It is when we are nearest Him that we are the strongest, and only when we forget to think of His power, to talk to Him and His children, to live close to Him daily, that life is weakened and power destroyed.

(3) Stephen was given a great responsibility. The Church needed men for a certain service—that of "deacon"—and Stephen was one chosen. That responsibility developed his character. It was good for Stephen when he was appointed deacon. It was good for the Church to have his services. Discovering men and women who may be Christian heroes and heroines is part of the work of Christian leaders. Placing a responsibility there, and giving a task there, often develops a Stephen in Church work.

(4) Stephen knew the Word of God. Read Acts 7:2-53, and see how thoroughly informed he was on the Holy Scriptures, the history of the Jewish race, God's chosen people, and how well he interpreted it to the people of his day. This speech, a great one for study and meditation, led to his death, but Stephen was ready. He had done his part. The story is told of a youth who, after rescuing seventeen people in a great Chicago fire, lost his own life. As he was nearing the end, and a fond relative stood by his bedside, he was heard to murmur something like this: "Some men have their chance at thirty, others at fifty. Mine came at twenty, and I am glad I could do it, and am now ready to go." That is the heroic thing. That is the great thing in life, to be ready to do the task whenever it comes, and then, like Stephen, be ready for the end.

It took a David Livingstone to go to Africa and to die on his knees there, to stir a world to an interest in the "dark continent." It took men willing to sacrifice their lives to discover a remedy for the plague of yellow fever. Progress in science, in invention, in government, and even in Christianity have always called for martyrs. that advance might be made for the welfare of the world. Stephen, the first Christian martyr, stands out as a Christian hero, a man to be admired, and a life to be emulated. May we be faithful to the God for whom he died, to be called to service by Him, to sacrifice surely, to death perhaps, but always men of faith and power, of prayer and study, ready to face responsibilities for Him.

"Faith of our fathers! living still,
In spite of dungeon, fire and sword;
O how our hearts beat high with joy
Whene'er we hear that glorious word!
Faith of our fathers! holy faith!
We will be true to thee till death!

"Faith of our fathers! we will love
Both friend and foe in all our strife,
And preach Thee, too, as love knows how,
By kindly words and virtuous life.
Faith of our fathers! holy faith!
We will be true to Thee till death"!

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC.

August 19, 1923.

Topic: "How to Get on in Life."—Deut. 8:1-18.

Thoughts for the Meeting.

The successful life is the life which places God first. His commandments and their observance bring happiness and peace. Verse 1.

To think of God's guiding care must bring one to more love for Him and greater obedience. One Thanksgiving Day a year is not enough. Verse 2.

God looks on the heart. From there are the "issues of life."

A man may be physically well and strong, and mentally trained and alert, and socially friendly and beloved, and yet his life is incomplete without the development of his spiritual nature. Bread is not his only need. To "get on in life," he needs God. Verse 3.

A great land is before us. To possess it, is our challenge. God's opportunities are very great. Verses 8, 9.

"It is he that giveth thee power to get wealth." What you have belongs to Him. He made it possible for you to be rich, or famous, or to do anything worth while. Verse 18.

A business man has a motto hanging over his desk something like this:

"When the great Scorer comes
To write against your name,
He'll scribe not that you won or lost,
But how you played the game."

To get on in life is to live fairly, lovingly, and truly, with the fear of God and the love of man in the heart.

"We are not here to dream, to drift." Life's responsibilities are too great. "There is work to do." Work not to be shunned, but to be received as "God's gift."

Plans for the Meeting.

Ask several members to come prepared to tell a quality which makes for success in life. Put each on the blackboard, or on a large sheet before the society. Then, in a season of brief prayers, seek God's guidance in developing these qualities.

Have your college students tell the part that the college—our college, Elon—may play in helping young people to get on in life. If your Church has not celebrated "Elon College Day," the Christian Endeavor Society may well plan a program in connection with this topic for such a service. Give teachers, former students of Elon, and high school boys and girls, the prospective Elon, all a part in the service.

Special music, short, well-prepared programs help to make these midsummer meetings one of greatest interest to all. Make your Christian Endeavor Society "get on" by putting your whole self into the plans for its meetings and work. It is worth while.

Junior Christian Endeavor Topic: "Lessons from Gideon."—Judges 7:2-8, 19-22.

RELIGIOUS EDUCATION AND DOINGS.

The Chautauqua opened at Elon Monday night, July 30th, with a full auditorium for "Burlington Night." Interest in the night meetings and class-work was very good from the very beginning. At the close of the second day, the registration was ninety, with more to come in. The full record of the Chautauqua, to come next week, will be full of interest to all our people.

A very successful daily vacation Bible school was conducted recently in the Liberty (Va.) Christian Church, under the leadership of Miss Agnes Whitt. The people of the community were so much pleased with the Bible work accomplished that the teachers were asked to extend the school a week longer, and an additional week is planned for a little later in the summer.

Bethel (Wake County) held a very fine daily vacation Bible school, opening July 22nd. With the Baptist Church co-operating, the school was a community affair. Mr. W. S. Johnson is the progressive Sunday School superintendent of the Bethel Sunday School, and largely due to his untiring efforts and those of his wife, Mrs. W. S. Johnson, the work of the school was presented and carried on.

The second session of the Holland daily vacation Bible school showed a great gain over the first year, both in attendance and in the actual work done. The field secretary was present the first two days of the session, which was a real school, under the leadership of Rev. J. H. Lightbourne, Miss Goodwin, Mrs. Holland, Mrs. Rawles, Miss Lillie Holland and others. A teacher-training class for adults was carried on daily in connection with the school.

The Newport News Christian Church and the Second Presbyterian Church of that city joined in holding a daily vacation Bible school, the attendance on the opening day being about 140. Winchester Sunday School also co-operated in a community daily vacation Bible school.

The Chautauqua has come to have a real place in our program of leadership training. Each year more and more of our people should plan to take

Has your Sunday School sent in its "Children's Day" Offering? Mr. Stephenson is planning soon to publish a list of the schools which have sent in this offering, but wants it complete before publication.

He reports: 1922—39 schools sent in $217.00; 1923, July 31—28 schools have sent in $236.00.

This is fine, but where are the other 175 Sunday Schools which must be interested in Sunday School growth and better work and Christian Endeavor progress, for which the work of the Board of Religious Education stands?

Do you love your children?

Do you love other children?

Then have a "Children's Day" for your own children, and send in an offering to help others. Send your offering very soon to Mr. C. H. Stephenson, 214 South Wilmington Street, Raleigh, N. C.

Because of necessary resignations, two places on the Board of Religious Education were filled at its recent meeting. The new members of the board are Mr. J. W. Payne, of Wedowee, Ala., and Mr. W. M. Brown, of Burlington, N. C., both enthusiastic Sunday School leaders and strong additions to the board.

Material is being compiled for the 1923 edition of the Handbook, issued every year by the Board of Religious Education, containing minutes of all Conventions and reports from all Sunday Schools and Christian Endeavor Societies. All reports should be sent in.

Miss Lucy M. Eldredge, the field secretary, has gone to her home in Pennsylvania, to be away for several weeks. During her absence from Richmond, she will keep up the office end of the work, and may be addressed at 715 West Eighth Street, Erie, Pa., with any inquiries or information regarding the work.

The Sunday School and Young People's Missionary Society of the Antioch Church (Valley of Virginia) recently held a very successful "Children's Day," giving a pageant which was enjoyed by all. A liberal offering was given to missions and the Board of Religious Education.

BETHEL D. V. B. S.

It was decided to put on a daily vacation Bible school at Bethel July 23, to last one week. Collins Grove, a Baptist Church nearby, was invited to join us, which they gladly did, and furnished three excellent teachers.

The school was undenominational, and an outsider could not have told the Baptist from the Christian, so close was the relationship. Miss Lucy M. Eldredge was with us three days and conducted the school as long as she stayed. She made more friends during her short stay here than any one ever has in this community for the same length of time. She is such an earnest, devoted worker that you just have to be her friend if you know her. We felt grieved to have her leave us so soon, but her work called her away.

Every child that attended expressed a desire to have a daily vacation Bible school next summer, to last for at least two weeks, and every one wants Miss Eldredge to be with us. Some went so far as to say they wanted it to last six months. We had 78 on roll this session, with an average attendance of 68; 56 did not miss a day. A funeral on Monday of a neighbor kept several from the school that day.

Our pastor, Rev. M. T. Sorrell, was with us, and faithfully taught a class of boys, and in the afternoon of each day he gave a lecture on "Revelations," which was very beneficial to our students of Revelation. His work called him elsewhere Sunday, so that he could not be present at the "Children's Day" exercise. But the Baptist pastor, Rev. Mr. Gardner, was present, although physically unable. After the exercises, Mr. Gardner presented the ribbons to the winners; also he gave us a good address, emphasizing the two main ways in which we can witness for Christ. The first was by our daily lives; the second, what we give to the world. The program for Sunday was composed mainly of the things the children learned during the week in the school. The flag drill was very impressive, as were the other features. Every one seemed to be happy.

Two children won red, white and blue ribbons with a star. One child won red, white and blue ribbon; 19 won red and blue ribbons with a star; 7 won red and blue ribbons; 12 won red ribbons, and 3 won blue.

On Friday, each pupil was presented a book of the New Testament, which was appreciated. The object of the daily vacation Bible school is to get the Bible in the home, the hand, the head and the heart. And it is certainly worth the time and trouble it takes—or should I say pleasure it takes?—to train the children for the work of the vineyard. Every Church would do well to try a D. V. B. S. Miss Eldredge will tell you how to succeed.

Again we thank Miss Eldredge, Mr. Sorrell, Miss Mabel Stephens and Miss Ruth Hare for making the success of the school possible.

MRS. W. S. JOHNSON.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR FOR BOYS.

My friends, as a relief from the many speeches and discussions you have heard today about adult problems in the Sunday School, I want to call your attention to the children's part in the Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Society, and I confess that I have had considerable trouble in finding a good keyword for such a talk. Of course, my father uses big words for his speeches, such as "work" and "ideal," but I realize that if I used the word "work," you older people would say that I was too small to have worked very much, and if I used the word "ideal," you would say that I did not know what I was talking about. And so I have chosen a word that I can qualify with, and it is the word "boy."

This word, I am sure, you will remember because your speaker and his keyword are one and the same. From the first letter I get my first point. Be a booster. I think this is most important for children, because I know we either boost or knock the things around us, and this soon develops into a habit. I know this is true in school, where some of the children are always knocking the teacher, while others are always boosting her. For my part, I say be a booster, especially in Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Society. Boosting helps the officers, helps the teachers, and helps the school itself. You will be surprised how much the superintendent will appreciate your boosting him and the school, even though you are children, and a boost for the Sunday School teacher always makes the lesson more interesting and gives her more courage to teach it. Always boosting the Sunday School in general tends to elevate it in the minds of other people, especially those outside of the Sunday School, and in this way helps the school to fulfill its mission of winning the people through its children.

And so, first of all, I say be a booster. Boost the Sunday School and boost the Junior Christian Endeavor, and you will feel better and the Sunday School itself will greatly benefit from your boosting.

From the second letter in the word "boy," I take my second point, which is have an objective. I know that most grown-ups have the idea that children never plan for the future, but live from day to day and in their play-world without any thought of the ultimate goal, but this is not true. We may have childish objectives in life, such as the movie child wonder, Jackie Coogan, who last week told the newspaper reporters that his ideal was to be a fire chief, still we do have ideals. In fact, children are great hero worshipers. We imitate those about us and aspire to be like them, but too often our ideal is fanciful. It is not real; not a living part of us.

And so my second point is, have an objective in view. If you aspire to be a good teacher, work toward that end. If you aspire to lead a junior society, work toward that end. If you aspire to be a superintendent, work to that end, and eventually you will get there.

I remember the first time I ever attended Junior Christian Endeavor at the Raleigh Christian Church. The leader handled the meeting so well that I aspired some day to occupy his place, and I believe this very desire was the chief reason why a year later I was elected president of this society for three straight terms. Then, get your objective fixed in mind and your work will be more unified and your results will be more effective.

My last point as suggested by the last letter in the word "boy" is, yes sir, and this is probably the most important part of my speech. To all children and grown ups in this Convention, when an officer or a teacher asks you to do anything, always say, "Yes, sir." I know so many children in our own Sunday School who, when they are asked to do something, always make excuses. They either have something else to do or want to play. How much finer it would be if they all would always promptly say, "Yes, sir," I will do anything you ask to help the Sunday School and Junior Christian Endeavor; "Yes, sir," I am at your service.

This, my friends, is the message of a boy to you. "B" for booster, which we all should be; "O" for objective, which we all should have; and "Y" for yes, sir, which should be our reply always when called upon to help in doing God's work; or, in the language of the poet—

"A cause to boost I have,
A God to glorify,
A never-dying soul to save
And fit it for the sky.

From youth to hoary age
My objective to fulfill;
Oh, may it all my powers engage
To do my Master's will!

Arm me with jealous care
As in Thy flight to live;
Yes, sir, thy servant Lord prepare
A strict account to give!"

CARL COGHILL.

CAN YOU SPEAK ENGLISH?

We think the Chinese language is hard, very hard, and it is; but in saying that, we forget that our own language is hard, and sometimes very hard, even to one who has been taught the language. If a man from the Sunny South should meet a man from the north of Scotland, though both speak the English language, it is not at all likely that either one could understand the other. Tere is an example of the point we are trying to make. We copy from an exchange:

We often hear about the English-Speaking Union and various other societies which are busy cementing the ties of friendship and relationship between America and England, and we say over and over again that we are brothers, or at least cousins, and that we speak the same language. Yes, we do, but a bit differently, don't you think? A correspondent of the Youth's Companion found out, to her sorrow, how differently we do speak the mother tongue.

"All that I wanted," she writes, "was a spool of white thread. So, although it was my first morning in old Oxford, I set forth on my quest. A person should have no difficulty in a place where his own language is spoken. Certainly not!

"Nearing the business district, I stopped a bright-faced boy and asked him where I would find the nearest dry goods store.

" 'Dry goods store? Store, ma'am? What now would you wish to store?'

" Shop, I mean,' I said, correcting my mistake. 'Dry goods shop.'

" 'Dry goods? What would dry goods be, ma'am?'

" 'Why, cloth, of course, and things of that kind. Goods, you know.'

" 'Oh, cloth! You would be wanting a draper's shop. Turn to your right on yon corner, and there'll be a draper's.'

"Thanks to him, I went on and entered the draper's shop, which at first glance appeared for all the world like a dry goods store. I asked for a spool of white thread.

" 'Thread? Very sorry, mad'm, but this is a draper's, and thread can be had only at haberdasher's.'

" 'But isn't a haberdasher a person who deals in men's furnishings?'

" 'Not in the least, madam. It is a shop of pins, needles, buttons, threads, and the like. There is one a bit of a way on.'

"I found the haberdasher's shop, which was merely a notion store. Sure of my ground at last, I asked a rosy English girl for a spool of white thread. She fetched a ladder and climbed to the highest shelf, where after some rummaging she found a ball of cord.

" 'Oh, no,' I protested; "I wanted thread.'

" 'Certainly, ma'am; this is thread.'

" 'Help!' I almost cried. Then I patiently explained: 'What I want is—is something with which to mend, to sew a shirtwaist.'

" 'Shirtwaist? Shirtwaist?' the girl pondered. "I pointed desperately to the shirtwaist I was wearing.

" 'Oh, blouse!' she cried. 'Perhaps what you wish is a reel of cotton.'

"Thereupon she produced the coveted spool of thread."

DOES GOD CARE?

Does God care that millions of blood-bought men and women are dying without hope—lost, lost, lost, forever lost in eternity's night, never having seen the light, or heard the good tidings of a Saviour's love? Does God care that 70,000,000 never have their hunger satisfied; millions dying from famine, while we in the homeland feast and fatten on His bounties, having not only the necessities, but spending $5,000,000 annually for luxurious foods?

Does God care that 25,000,000 child widows in India are doomed to lives of unspeakable degredation and woe; no joy in their lives and no hope in their death, while we in this enlightened land may, unhindered, enjoy the privileges, comforts, and numerous blessings of our homes and the family relationship, and the heavenly home at last?

Does God care that in one year 64,000 of our American girls drop out of sight and are lost, and the 3,000,000 of prodigal boys, and 400,000 men and women behind prison bars?

Does God care that so many fathers and mothers give their children little or no religious instruction? That 20 per cent of our youth have not an atom of religious education?

Is not God divinely interested in every phase of moral uplife and betterment of society and the individual?

Does God care what our business interests are and how we conduct the same, and how we spend the means with which He has intrusted us?

Does God care how and where we spend our time, and how we talk? Does God care what our example and influence is in our homes, in the Church and before the world.

Does God care if we desecrate His holy Sabbath day, and fail to keep it holy as He has commanded?

Does God care how we, as women, dress, when it is proven beyond successful contradiction that the present suggestive immodest dress of women is largely responsible for the wave of immorality sweeping over our country, causing the downfall of the majority of the girls who go astray, and its effect upon men is to inflame the passions, debauch the mind, destroy the soul, and break up the foundation of the home, which is one of God's institutions?

Does God care where our children receive their instruction that is to fit them up for life's work, whether it be in the schools where the Bible is not even read and where in many cases not even a good moral example and standard is placed before them, or in our Christian schools, where they will be taught to believe the Book of all books from lid to lid, and where no poison of "higher criticism" is injected to ruin their young lives?

Does God care if we neglect to seek first His kingdom and His righteousness, and to lay up our treasures in heaven, but seek first our own profit and pleasure and the praise of men?

Does God care when we close our hearts against the warnings and entreaties of the Word and our friends, and are filled with our own ways and selfish ambitions, that much of our religious activities are of the flesh and not of the spirit of the meek and lowly Jesus? Seeking in all things to glorify God and live in His fear and favor?

Yes, God cares, and if we don't it will go hard with us when the "judgment books unfold."—Anna Kirk Folger.

A clergyman who was contemplating accepting a call to a Church, being still undecided, saw on the wall of the First Congregational Church in Buffalo, the text: "Fear not, I will help thee." He got off the car and went back to read the rest of the sentence, which was: "For the Lord thy God will hold thy right hand, saying unto thee, 'Fear not, I will help thee.' " These words came to the young minister as from the mouth of God, guiding him in an important crisis of his life.—Rev. Edwin Whittier Caswell.

FREEMAN.

Aaron Freeman, after a brief illness, was carried to Ashboro Hospital, where he underwent an operation, from which he never recovered. On July 21, 1923, he fell asleep. He was upright in all his acts. He professed Christ in early life, joined Dover Baptist Church, and after moving in the Big Oak community, joined the Big Oak Christian Church, where he held his membership till death. He was ordained a minister of that Church several years ago, and held that office till death. Services were conducted by W. L. Wilson, of the Presbyterian Church. The Lord gave, and the Lord took. A FRIEND.

When a young Chinaman said that he "preferred Christianity to Confucianism because it is easier—to be a Confucianist, one has to study," he, like a flash of lightning in the dark, revealed imminent danger to Christianity, the substitution of cheapness for spiritual reality and worth at any cost. The history of triumphant Christianity is the history of true heroism, and as long as this continues, our religion will take the world. But cheapen it, and its banners will droop and its fires go out on the hilltops of life. "He that would save his life shall lose it." Only the heroic can save this self-indulgent, chaotic age with its mountains of difficulties all around.—Rev. C. H. Buchanan.

The Christian ministry is not only incomparably honorable, in that it deals with those pledges and benefits which instantly and eternally enlighten and enrich men, but the transcendence of its authority is such that it must sober the man who bears it and cause him to feel even more deeply than those who hear it the awe of the word which he preaches. The preacher otherwise related to his commission has lost his adjustment or else is an intruder in the pulpit. Let the man sent of God to preach diligently renew the assurance of his call, and let him heed first and fully the warning which he gives to others.

THE CROSS OF CHRIST.

Hail, Cross of Christ! I cling to thee
In love and faith, where'er I be;
Thy grace of Jesus crucified
My trusting soul hath satisfied.

I need no other guiding light
To lead my feeble steps aright;
Till I be Thine in Paradise,
Lord, keep Thy Cross before my eyes.

Oh, sad and sweet that holy sign
That rose to make salvation mine;
Oh, sad and sweet that symbol dear
Which typifies a Saviour near!

Its sight recalls the suffering love
Which cleft a path to Heaven above;
It soothes my sorrow, heals my care,
And leads me to the place of prayer.

Oh, Cross of Christ forever sweet,
Here I may fall at Mercy's feet,
A beggar vile and full of shame,
And rise a prince in Jesus' name!

REV. JEREMIAH W. HOLT.

The many friends of Rev. J. W. Holt will be grieved to know that he passed away at his home, near Burlington, N. C., on Friday morning early, August 3, 1923, after long illness. He had been declining in health for more than a year. Funeral services were conducted from the Burlington Christian Church on Saturday afternoon at 2 o'clock, Rev. G. O. Lankford, the pastor, conducting the services, assisted by Revs. W. W. Staley, P. T. Klapp, and Rev. P. H. Fleming. Besides these, there were a number of ministers present, and a large congregation well filled both the main auditorium and the Sunday School room. Bro. Holt was born in 1848, making him at the time of his death about seventy-five years of age. He had been a minister of the Gospel about fifty years, and was always, in the pulpit and out of it, a brave man, having the courage of his convictions. A suitable sketch of his life will be prepared and published in The Christian Sun at no distant day. The Sun tenders to his family and friends sincere sympathy in this time of sorrow.

WHITE.

Mary Alvarado White was born July 24, 1857, and died July 30, 1923, being sixty-six years and six days old. She has been a member of Oak Level Church from childhood. She was the daughter of Harrison and Martha White. Surviving her are three brothers, T. M., B. A., and C. T. White. D. A. LONG.

BREAKING UP THE NEST.

God at times breaks up our nest,
Lest, sunk in slothful ease,
Our soul's wings moult and lose the zest
For battle with the breeze;
But ever wait with arms of love,
To bear our soul's all ills above.
—John Oxenham.

WE PRAISE THEE.

"To whom shall we go? Thou hast the words of eternal life."—John 6:6-8.

Oh, word of God incarnate!
Oh, wisdom from on high!
Oh, truth unchanged, unchanging!
Oh, light of our dark sky!
We praise Thee for the radiance
That from the hallowed page,
A lantern to our footsteps,
Shines on from age to age.

THE SUN'S OBSERVATORY

Baptists for World Peace.—

The Baptist World Alliance, meeting at Stockholm, has adopted resolutions calling upon all Baptist Churches to assist in promoting world peace through urging their governments to make the maintenance of peace their first aim and to co-operate in forming international tribunals for the settlement of disputes. Rev. Dr. E. Y. Mullins, of Louisville, Ky., president of the Southern Baptist Theological Seminary and of the Southern Baptist Convention, was unanimously elected president of the World Alliance.

Dollar Wheat.—

On the Board of Trade in Chicago, wheat has dropped to the bargain-counter basis of $1.00 a bushel or less. This means, according to good authority, that the grower of wheat gets less than the cost of producing it.

According to the Department of Agriculture, about one-half the total gain in the value of farm products this year over 1922 is due to cotton. The department figures the total increase in money at $494,000,000. And the forecast by the department for tobacco is also for a gain of about 100,000,000 pounds. But, according to the same authority, the total receipts from wheat will be $100,000,000 less than in 1922.

Farmers in the Middle West will not be encouraged to raise wheat at the $1.00 price. The general depression of the market means also a depression in the mental condition of the man whose business is raising food for the rest of us. The effect of such depression will be the natural effect of causing a certain class of farmers to retire from their farms and give way to the renter. That this is the effect of low prices for food production is seen in the fact that the total production of food on American farms is 3 per cent less than last year.

But the discontent on the part of the most necessary toilers of the country is a more serious thing than any economical condition. The mental attitude of workers is a tremendous factor in a nation's history. It may not be reckoned with by the men who figure out statistics at Washington, and who advise the farmer to stay on the farm, waiting for a change in prices; but it is reckoned with by thousands of farmers' wives who do not see why they should toil at hard labor all their lives, with little prospect of paying off mortgages, or seeing needed education for their children.

The tragedy of $1.00 wheat is the tragedy of working for nothing. How long would the members of trade unions endure such conditions? The present problem of the farmers calls for national sympathy, national wisdom and national co-operation.

If You Had it, What Would You Do With it?—

What would you do with it if you had a billion dollars, was asked of a former member of the national Cabinet. He began by saying that he would begin by trying to persuade the people that neither he nor any other man ought to have a billion dollars, and then he would proceed to get rid of it. The best thing that suggested itself to him, according to his letter in answer to the question, was to go out into some of the Far Western States and develop some of the waste land of those States and establish farmers upon them, providing the homes and equipment that they might need. If there were any great scarcity of farming lands in this country, that might be a good use to make of some of the money, but we do not believe it is the best use to which it could be put. If any one wants to give us a billion dollars, and no editor of a Church paper could ever be the owner of a billion dollars, unless it was given to him, we believe we could make a better use of it. We do not know just where we would begin, but here are some of the things that we would do. We would give such help to worthy schools and colleges as would equip them to do the best work possible in educating the youth of our land. We would provide the means to aid every deserving boy and girl who needed help in securing an education, this help to be given in a way that would encourage the student to strive for self-support. We would aid the Church in doing its great work of giving the Gospel to those who are without it in the home land and in heathen lands. This help should be given so as to inspire the Church to do greater things than it is doing, and not to let it feel that it is to be relieved of its own responsibility. In the same way we would aid weak Churches to give their pastors a comfortable support. We would help the Church to take care of the aged and infirm of its own membership and any others whom it ought to provide for, making special provision for orphans and dependent children. We would make the best Church paper that money and brains could produce, and see that, so far as possible, it was sent into every home in the Church and into as many others as could be reached. If there was any of the billion dollars left, we think we might find some way to use it for the glory of God.

Reason Behind Bok Peace Award.—

Edward W. Bok, former editor of the Ladies' Home Journal, who has offered a fortune of one hundred thousand dollars for the best plan to secure international peace, explains that the reason which led him to make the offer are the needs of taking consideration of peace plans out of politics.

"The League of Nations is in politics; the purpose of the award is exactly opposite—to lift the question out of politics," Mr. Bok said.

"The award has nothing whatever to do with the covenant of the League or with the World Court.

"The award is a serious effort to get somewhere with an acute problem. The whole idea has been carefully thought out for months. Men and women connected with the League would not have affiliated with the policy committee of the award if it were propaganda. Its strength lies in the fact that it is independent, non-political, and non-commercial. Otherwise, it would not be worth the effort.

College Library

"The money part of the award is simply a dramatization of the idea in mind, that serves to attract public attention to it in a way that no other factor could do. To some, the money will be the great and chief attraction, but not to all—not to men and women who will prepare plans which will probably receive the most serious consideration. The award gives them something more valuable than the money part—a well-organized channel for expression; an opportunity to present their ideas, with the assurance that they will receive an earnest consideration of the government.

"Last February I decided to make the award. Since that time I have been consulting the best minds in the country with regard to the plan itself, the wisdom of making it, and its conditions.

"I did not finally decide upon founding it until I was assured that some of the most prominent men and women in the country who have given long and earnest thought to this question would co-operate."

John W. Weeks, Secretary of War, has written Mr. Bok about the award as follows:

"No war sentiment exists in the United States, and I do not believe our citizens would countenance this country engaging in a war of aggression. In the present agitated condition of the world, however, the peace of the world is not assured. In fact, in its present unsettled state, there exists the possibility of war which might even involve our own country. It is for that reason that the War Department is urging sufficient preparedness for defense.

"No one could feel greater gratification than I if we could insure the future generations against war."

Franklin D. Roosevelt, former Assistant Secretary of the Navy, writes the donor:

"It is sadly easy to talk about the co-operation of the United States with other nations in promoting the peace of the world. To get anywhere, the United States must first co-operate with other nations to eliminate the things that disturb or threaten the peace of the world.

"The award will spur on the constantly increasing public opinion, which, either from the selfish motive of tthe pocketbook or from the higher motive of the desire for international justice, is favoring our assistance in righting world wrongs. We are rapidly getting away from the old fallacy of the Chinese wall around the United States."

NOTES-PERSONALS

Elon College opens for the fall semester on September 5th. A full registration is anticipated.

Rev. W. T. Walters, D. D., of First Christian Church, Richmond, Va., is attending the Virginia Valley Central Conference.

The managing editor is away this week attending the Virginia Valley Central Conference in the interest of THE SUN. The Conference is in session at Timber Ridge Christian Church, of which Rev. A. W. Andes is the pastor.

The friends of Elon College will be delighted to learn that the Elon College building fund has been rounded up. The interest in Elon College is three thousand miles long and fifteen hundred miles wide.

Rev. G. O. Lankford, D. D., left Burlington last Wednesday for a brief but busy visit to Alabama, to assist Rev. G. D. Hunt in revival services at Antioch Church, beginning August 12th. We hope to have a report of a great and good work done in this effort.

We learn through Rev. G. O. Lankford, D. D., the pastor of the Burlington Christian Church, that since last Conference there have been added to the membership of that Church twenty-four persons, and the work is said to be in fine shape, and with splendid prospect for enlarging its usefulness.

Rev. Geo. O. Lankford, D. D., will, while he is in Alabama, attend a family reunion at his father's home. The reunion will occur on August 18th. That will be an occasion for all, but it will especially be a day of joy to the son who comes home from his residence in a distant State. We wish for this family a happy occasion and the most delightful association, even though it be but for a short while. How these family reunions remind us of the great reunion above! After absence of different members of the family, there is a coming together for larger and happier fellowship forever.

Rev. E. B. Flory, pastor of the First Church, Norfolk, Va., who is soon to go to Dayton, Ohio, to organize and build up a new Church in the northern part of that city, preached at the Burlington Church on Sunday morning, August 5th, and Dr. Lankford, the pastor, says it was a good sermon and much enjoyed by the congregation. Bro. Flory has made many friends in the South during the one year he has been a pastor in these parts. While they see him leave us with regret, they wish him well in the work he goes to do in that western city of a thousand factories.

Rev. Chas. H. Rowland, D. D., Franklin, Va., who has been in Alamance for a week or two, taking his vacation, preached for our Burlington people on Sunday morning, July 29th, and he gave them a good and helpful sermon. While Dr. Rowland was in the county he held two protracted meetings, and also attended the Elon Chautauqua, and all that in vacation time, and yet some people find it difficult to see why a preacher should need a vacation. The truth is that it is quite difficult for some of our preachers to get a vacation, and for the reason there are so many doors open to them they find it difficult to take even a little vacation.

During the Chautauqua, Dr. Staley gave a course of instruction on the work of the pastor, which was pronounced one of the best, not merely fine, but really helpful. We were unable to attend many of these courses given in the Chautauqua, and for the reason that the work on THE SUN would not permit. The matter for THE SUN must be gotten ready and sent, even though we could not attend the lessons that were being so well given in almost a stone's throw of our desk. Many think, no doubt, "Why can he not get off to attend such occasions?" Well, if you will undertake to get up matter to fill THE CHRISTIAN SUN columns just for one week, we have no doubt you would find the minutes few when you could get off to attend this or that. However, we are glad that others could attend these various courses of instruction, if we could not.

The Chautauqua management is in good spirits over the success of the Chautauqua of this summer. It was almost three times as largely attended as it was last year. They feel very hopeful for the future, and have set their goal for next year at a membership of three hundred. With such a large number enrolled, the future of the Chautauqua would seem to be most promising. Let us see that the Chautauqua shall become a means of blessing to the work of the Church. The exact number, if we remember correctly, enrolled this year was 118. Last year, we believe, the number was only 40. Well, anyhow, there is a big increase in attendance, and Dr. Walters and Miss Eldredge are happy over what has been attained, and they are planning for a large increase next year.

We hear that Rev. P. T. Klapp preached a great sermon at Danville, Va., the first Sunday in August. His subject was "A 100 Per Cent Religion." The claim that it was a great sermon does not rest on its flowery language, nor on its fanciful thought, nor on its compliments of a personal character, nor yet on its power to make the hearer feel that he was good enough for ordinary mortals; but its greatness did rest on the truth it presented. Did you ever think about it that way? Jesus gave us a religion that is worth its face value. What is your religion worth? Is it worth only 50 cents on the dollar? Then is it enough to take you through to glory? If a man gives you his note for $100.00, and when he comes to settle he tells you he can pay you only 50 per cent on the dollar—what do you think of him? Would you think of his honesty as up to a high grade? Of course you could not. Well, then, if when you go to give an account to God, if your religion comes up only to a 50 per cent religion, what will God think of you?

The work on the Bethlehem College building at Wadley, Ala., is progressing nicely, and they are expecting to open on time—September 12, 1923. That will be a big day in the history of the Georgia and Alabama brethren. It will mark an advance in the work of the Christian Church in the farther South, for which they have been long looking. We believe, under the blessings of God, it will mark a new era in our work in that country. Let every one who can do so, lend a helping hand to the establishment of Bethlehem College. Locally, it should have the support of every individual who can lift his hand in support of this institution. It will mean the development of many of the boys and girls who may have a chance to attend the institution, and in years to come, talents that were developed in that college will be shining for God and His truth. Then those who have helped in its establishment will have cause to rejoice, and they will see that their money is paying compound interest at a high rate in the lives and the services these boys and girls may give to the Church and to the world.

Nothing can give a clearer insight to our late President's character than his attitude as a newspaper man. President Harding's newspaper creed, pasted on the wall of the editorial room of his newspaper, the Marion Star, warns reporters and editors to "be truthful, be fair, and, above all, be clean."

The following is the text of that creed:

"Remember, there are two sides to every question. Get both.

"Be truthful. Get the facts. Mistakes are inevitable, but strive for accuracy. I would rather have one story exactly right than a hundred half wrong.

"Be decent; be fair; be generous.

"Boost—don't knock. There's good in everybody. Bring out the good in everybody, and never needlessly hurt the feelings of anybody.

"In reporting a political gathering, get the facts; tell the story as it is, not as you would like to have it.

"Treat all parties alike. If there's any politics to be played, we will play it in our editorial columns.

"Treat all religious matter reverently.

"If it can possibly be avoided, never bring ignominy to an innocent woman or child in telling of the misdeeds or misfortune of a relative. Don't wait to be asked, but do it without the asking.

"And, above all, be clean. Never let a dirty word or suggestive story get into type.

"I want this paper so conducted that it can go into any home without destroying the innocence of any child."

Again and again we have urged our readers not to send their money for THE CHRISTIAN SUN to the editor, but to the publisher. We do not like to handle money which belongs to others, especially when it is just as easy to send it where it really belongs. Only recently a brother sent us a check for a certain purpose, but did not say to whom it should be paid. I had to write and go to make inquiries as to what person I should pay the money. It cost me quite a bit of postage and time in writing letters to find out just what I should do with the money, and finally when I found to whom the money should go, the money had been delayed for about two weeks. Now, it would have been much better if the party sending the money had sent the same to the man to whom it should have been sent. It would have saved much time and postage and effort to find out to whom we should have sent it. Let it be understood that no money which is intended for THE CHRISTIAN SUN should be sent to us, for when it reaches us, then it is still hundreds of miles from THE SUN office and not in the hands of the man for whom it is intended. We must insist that money which is sent to THE CHRISTIAN SUN be sent direct to Prof. P. J. Kernodle, 1536 East Broad Street, Richmond, Va. Please give this matter attention, and do not send the money to the editor, for he is, in many cases, as far from Richmond as is the writer who sends it, and in many instances much farther.

[The editor is a busy man, and subscribers will please note what he says above. The account of THE CHRISTIAN SUN is kept at the First National Bank of this city, through which all checks are collected. If remittances are made in accordance with "REMITTANCES," as stated in first column of page 16, due credit will be given.—Managing Editor.]

The Editor's Pulpit

A Weekly Presentation of Truth for the Christian Life.

ARE YOU ASSURED OF THE NEW BIRTH IN YOUR OWN LIFE?

SOME EVIDENCES OF THE NEW BIRTH.

"Whosoever believeth that Jesus is the Christ is born of God: and every one that loveth Him that begat, loveth Him also that is begotten of Him." —1 John 5:1.

Uncertainty is a great hindrance in the Christian life. To know that you are a child of God, according to the teachings of the Bible, is the high privilege of the Christian. How can the Christian life be a comfort to one who does not know that he is a Christian?

In a ministry of almost fifty years, I have met so many Church members who, though Church members, had no assurance of the new birth for themselves. The most they could say was: "I hope I am a Christian, but I do not know it." Indeed, I have met many who think one cannot know that he is certainly a child of God. I have even known some who would show a degree of resentment to such a thought. They even quote 1 Cor. 2:9 as authority for not knowing your own birth of the Spirit. That verse reads:

"Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love Him."

That to them seems to give them assurance that they cannot be assured of the gift of the new life in Christ. They did not read far enough. The next verse explains by saying: "But God hath revealed them unto us by His spirit." You see, Paul was talking about the natural man; he cannot know of the great gifts of God, but in the next verse he was speaking of the Christian when he said: "But God hath revealed them unto us by His spirit."

So it seems clear that the child of God ought to have assurance, the assurance of the Spirit, as to his own salvation.

Our text is very clear as to knowing that we have been born of God. It sets forth the relationship between man and God. Its importance may be readily grasped if we stop to consider that the eternal destiny of man and the glory of God are involved. If God be able to save us from sin, He certainly is able to give us assurance of salvation. Do you not think so?

The Bible is very clear in its declarations of the fact that the believer may know where he stands as to his own salvation. In John 1:12, we read: "But as many as receive Him, to them gave He power to become the sons of God, even to them that believe on His name."

You cannot born yourself. Jesus gives the power to a repentant and believing soul to become a child of God; and do you think He would give you the new birth and not let you know that He had given it to you? I do not.

Now, if you have believed on Jesus, He will give you power to become a child of God. Do you think you could receive such power and still have no knowledge of the fact? I do not.

The one thing needed especially by Church members in this day of uncertainty in Christian experience is assurance. It may be helpful if we may find that what are some of the very plain evidences of the new birth, for then you may examine yourself by these evidences and determine for yourself whether you have been born of the Spirit or not.

I. True righteousness is one evidence.

If a man has not righteousness in his life, he may justly doubt that he has been born of the Spirit. If he has this righteousness in his life, it will give him assurance of his sonship in Christ. Hear the Word: "If ye know that He's righteous, ye know that every one that doeth righteousness is born of Him."—1 John 2:29.

That is plain, very plain. If you have been born of Him who is righteous, then His righteousness will show itself in your life. That ought to settle it for you, so that you will know that you have been born of the Spirit, and that is what every true Christian ought to know.

II. New-born souls do not practice sin.

"Whosoever is born of God doth not commit sin: for His seed remaineth in him and he cannot sin, because he is born of God."—1 John 3:9.

You see the new birth is a stay against practicing sin, or working sin. If one is born of God, that fact alone sets him against sin and turns him to God. Now, if you love sin, you may be sure you have not been born of God. On the other hand, if you hate sin and stand against it, that is good evidence that you have been born from above.

III. Men and women who have had the new birth, love one another.

Now, is it in yourself? Do you love all of God's people? Then that is evidence of the new birth. Listen to the Word as to this matter: "Beloved, let us love one another, for God is love; and every one that loveth is born of God, and knoweth God. He that loveth not, knoweth not God: for God is love."—1 John 4:7, 8.

What could be plainer? The new birth moves the person to whom it is given with the wonderful love of God. If that be true, how could one help knowing that he had been born of the Spirit? The opposite is quite as plain. If you love not, you do not know God, for God is love.

IV. Genuine faith in Christ is another strong evidence of the new birth.

Here is the Word to sustain that declaration: "Whosoever believeth that Jesus is the Christ is born of God."—1 John 5:1. Do you exercise a saving faith in Jesus Christ? Then the new birth is yours.

V. Victory over the world and its allurements is evidence of the new birth.

"For whatsoever is born of God overcometh the world: and this is the victory that overcometh the world, even your faith."—1 John 5:4. The world cannot resist the faith of one who is born of God. Do you have victory over temptation, over trial, over affliction, over disappointment? If so, such victory is an evidence that you have been born from above.

VI. The person who has the new birth is kept by the power of God; the wicked one is not even permitted to touch Him.

What a truth! How plain it is! If you are born of God, you will not go out into sin, for He who has given you the new birth is keeping you, and will not permit the wicked one to touch your faith and the life it inspires.

VII. Through the new birth the believer is made a partaker of the divine nature, so giving him a divine kinship with Jesus.

Let us give attention to the Word of God as to this high gift. "Whereby are given unto us exceeding great and precious promises, that by these ye might be made partakers of the divine nature." —2 Pet. 1:4.

And when you have the divine nature, you will delight to do the things which God loves, and that will be another evidence that you have been born of God. O believer, see that you have these evidences of the new life in Christ, and then surely you may know that you are a child of God. It is so important to know that your life has been given to God and that He has accepted it in Christ. Such an experience will bring great comfort to the believer's heart and mind.

A STRONG APPEAL.

The work of the Scripture Gift Mission continues to show both the great need and the remarkable results of distributing the Word of God. Among appeals from very many States in the Union, one comes from a military chaplain in California, asking for five hundred Testaments for distribution among the soldiers. Practically all the men going to the Philippines, Hawaii and China pass through his hands, and the same is true of men returning from these overseas stations. In 1922, over 30,000 soldiers passed through the post at which this chaplain is at work, and the majority of them had no Bibles. The chaplain gave away hundreds of Testaments, and many of the men professed faith in Christ. He wants every man who thus takes a stand for the Lord to possess a Bible, and he writes to the mission asking for 500 Testaments, assuring the mission that they will be placed only where the largest good will result.

Another and very different letter comes from a logging camp in Michigan and shows what an earnest worker is able to do. At a recent meeting in camp, a number of men accepted Gospels. The next day, at another camp three miles distant, to which the worker had walked, a service was held, with definite results in connection with the acceptance of portions of the Bible. Then came another walk of five miles to a camp where services were held in a home. Fifteen families live at this camp and a number had no Bibles. The worker had only one copy which he could leave. The next day, another walk of six miles brought him to a camp where similar experiences resulted. The service was filled with adults and children, and they had not had such a gathering there for three years. A drive by automobile took the worker to another logging camp, with equally admirable results, while the next day, after a walk of sixteen miles, two camps were visited, and definite results accrued, both among adults and children. All this shows beyond question the great value of the work of the mission in distributing the Scriptures and preaching the Word.

Those who wish fellowship in this great work are invited to send in their gifts to the secretary of the American branch, Mr. R. B. Haines, Jr., 119 South Fourth Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

UNION, ALAMANCE, N. C.

Our protracted meeting at Union, Alamance County, began on the fourth Sunday in July and continued until Friday evening. Dr. C. H. Rowland, of Franklin, Va., was with us and did the preaching. His sermons were good, well delivered, and much appreciated. His messages, manner and delivery impressed me as having the qualifications of a pastor-evangelist. We were delighted to have him with us. The attendance was large, and the interest good throughout the meeting. There were eleven public professions, ten additions to the Church and nine baptisms. Bro. Joel Holland, of Franklin, Va., was with us a part of the meeting and assisted us in the song service. We were glad to have him with us, and appreciated his help. P. H. FLEMING.

THE QUESTION OF ETERNAL PUNISHMENT.

In a day of upheavals in religious thought, such as we have today, we need not be surprised that men and women are questioning the most weighty matters—questions which have long been settled, so far as public opinion can settle such matters. Indeed, it would be a surprise if this were not true. The natural mind of man is fond of discussion and contention, and because this is so, many people have no other thought of their responsibility than to air their opinions on the most weighty questions, and that regardless of authority. Indeed, this class of people have little or no regard for authority other than their own opinion. What they think and say, that is the standard by which they settle questions of the most weighty matters. They fear not the law of God or man, their own ipse dixit being quite sufficient to satisfy themselves.

The more weighty the question, the more readily do these men raise their protest, declaring against that which does not meet their approval. Among such questions is that of eternal punishment, which they profess to believe is unworthy of a God of love. They argue that it is unreasonable that love should inflict such punishment on any mortal. They claim to think that a little punishment would not be out of the way, but when it comes to eternal punishment, that is out of all reason, and that a loving Father cannot so punish His creatures. There are two things to be said of that view. (1) It is not God's will that any should die. He brings life for every one that will accept it, and even urges that all men, everywhere, should accept it and live with Him in peace and righteousness forever. That is God's ever-present plea with man. (2) God does not send men into eternal punishment, not even for their most awful sins; but men choose such a fate for themselves, and they choose it in the face of God's most gracious offer of free and full salvation from sin and its consequences. And, of course, since man is a free moral agent, he can choose his future for himself. Now, if a man choose to live and suffer in hell forever, how can he be prevented from reaping the fruits of his own choice? Yes, we believe it is a fact that men who suffer eternal punishment do so on their own choice. It is the outgrowth of their own course, and, as such, no one is to blame but themselves. Let an illustration suffice to make the case clear. Suppose our own government should prepare a place of great happiness and a place of great sorrow and suffering. Then, it gives notice that the way is open for the people to choose their own future home. They can choose the one place and be forever happy, or they can choose the other place and be forever miserable. Now, if any part of the people are made forever miserable, whose fault is it? Can you, will you, dare you to say that the United States government is to blame for the fact that it gave its people the privilege to choose the place in which they preferred to live? If ten thousand chose the place of sorrow and suffering for their home, who is to blame but themselves? It is certainly not the fault of the government, and, if not, it cannot be the fault of any one except those who made the choice for themselves. The government did not send the people there; it only gave the people their choice as between the two places. If A and B choose to make the good place their home, and C and D chose to make the place of sorrow and suffering their home, is the government responsible for the mistake they make? Now, in the goodness, mercy and wisdom of God, He has seen fit to make two great places of abode—one for the righteous, and one for the wicked. He has sent out warning of the suffering of those who chose to live in the home of the wicked. He has also sent out a description of the joys of the home of the righteous, and He invited all to go there and make it their home. Now, if a part of the people shall deliberately refuse to go to the place of happiness, and, of their own accord, go to the place of suffering, and that after repeated warnings of the danger of doing so, then if a part choose to go there in defiance of all warnings given, and in the face of the invitation to go to the other place, who can be blamed for it except themselves? So, the matter of going to hell is a matter of individual choosing. You go where you choose to go. Then, what right have you to complain that your lot is one of suffering and despair? You chose it, and in the face of warning as to the character of the place!

That is just a little parable to show how unreasonable is the complaint which is made against people having to suffer in hell forever. A person cannot say that he did not know of the awfulness of the place, for he was told again and again of its awful sufferings; and not only so, but he was begged not to make it his home. A message was sent back to him from one who had gone there, saying do not come to this place, for I am tormented in this flame (read Luke 16:19-31), but he gave no heed to it, but went straight on to this place, which was in fact prepared for the devil and his angels (read Matt. 25:41).

God prepared heaven for His people. Then He prepared hell for the devil and his angels. He did not prepare it for man, but for the devil and his angels. Now, if a man loved the devil and his angels so well that he chose to live with them rather than with God and His angels, who is to blame—God or the man who made a bad choice? Will you dare to answer that question, except to say that the man who made the choice of his own free will and accord is himself to blame, and no other. The conclusion is inevitable—there is no other answer with even the semblance of reason in it to give.

Now, then, let us quit all this effort to blame God for men going to hell. Let us, rather, put the blame where it belongs, and then do our best not to go to occupy a cell with the devil and his angels. Let us devoutly seek the house of many mansions in glory, where peace and joy and life everlasting shall be our portion forever.

In our next, we shall discuss the matter of "Eternal Punishment—Is it True? Is it Right?"

SHORT NOTES ON THE BOOKS OF THE BIBLE.

No. 6—Joshua.

Joshua is the beginning of a new division of Holy Scripture. It gives an account of the entrance of the Israelites into Canaan and their conquest of that country. To them it was the land of promise—the land which the Lord their God had promised to them long before. At last they had come to dispossess the people who had long occupied it and to possess it themselves. However, Israel never possessed all the land the Lord had given them. How like them are we? The Lord has filled His Word with promises, and we have taken a few of them, and we have let the others go without possessing them.

Palestine, as given to the Israelites, was bounded on its eastern shore by the Mediterranean Sea, extending from Egypt, northward even to Sidon, but eventually it included Phoenicia, Lebanon and Syria on the north, and Syria, Ammon and Moab on the east, Idumea and the Arabian Desert on the south, and the Mediterranean on the west. Do not forget, however, that the land of promise was much larger than the land of possession. God gave them much more than their faith was able to appropriate. Remember also that possession came by dispossession. After God had given them the promise of the land, Israel had to go over and drive out the people who then lived there. In the country were found various peoples, such as the Anakim, Avim, Emien, Homrim, Rephaim, Suzim, and others. There was quite a conflict for the possession of this land between these peoples and the people of Israel to whom God had given it.

Joshua looms up on the horizon as the chief man of the time. The book of Joshua covers his career as a leader among the people of God. He was born in Egypt of the tribe of Ephraim. He was captain at Rephidim. He was with Moses in the mount, and, with Caleb, urged the people to go up and possess the land. It has been said that Moses appointed Joshua as a leader and the Lord anointed him. That is the natural order. Our conferences sometimes accept certain men as candidates for the ministry, but if the Lord does not approve by anointing them as His servants, then failure is inevitable. As Moses' successor, Joshua was like Moses in zeal for the cause of truth and God. Joshua was a man of real ability and great sagacity as a leader. It has been said that the rod was Moses' symbol, while the spear was Joshua's.

One of the great feats of his leadership was the crossing of the Jordan, but let us not forget that this feat was accomplished under supernatural interposition. When the priests, bearing the ark, touched with their feet the onflowing river, the current was at once arrested. These priests stood in the river-bed till all passed over. Then when Israel had reached the banks of the river on the other side, the stream began again to flow. Two heaps of stones were erected by the people of God to commemorate two great national events in their history. One of these heaps commemorated the desert pilgrimage, and the other the miraculous passage.

The reproach of Achan's bad conduct was wiped out and Israel was again in favor with God and going forward on its journey. The covenant was renewed and the people again prepared to keep the Passover. Under the captain of the Lord's host, they took the typical stronghold of Jericho, and they did it without striking a blow. That seems a strange thing as between rival armies, but the same thing occurred in the late World War when General Allenby took Jerusalem without firing a gun, and that was not so far from the scene of Joshua's great feat. Israel did suffer defeat at the city of Ai, but it was because they allowed a theft in their midst. Defeat showed them that something had gone wrong and they hunted the evildoer and punished him for his wickedness. How much do we need such a hunt for wrongdoing in our Churches! Hunt the sins of the Church and get rid of them, and then, as of old, the Church will have new power and will gain great and glorious victories. Getting themselves again straightened out, they set up the Tabernacle in Shiloh, they appointed the cities of refuge, and then the covenant of separation was ratified, and Israel was again prosperous. Then came the death of Joshua at the age of 110, and with that scene the book of Joshua closes. Israel's history as presented in the book of Joshua is of unusual interest. Those were stirring days and times of trouble. It required a man of a strong faith in God and a bold and daring disposition to do the things that were needed in that day. The study of the book of Joshua is a lesson which ought to be studied by the modern Church—its lessons are invaluable, even in these modern times.

The book of Joshua is in two parts. From chapters 1-12 we have the conquest of Canaan. Then from chapter 13-24 we have an account of the partition of Canaan among the Children of Israel. In making this partition, Joshua, noble and unselfish soul that he was, gave out all of the land of Canaan and reserved not a place for himself. But Israel, noble-spirited, would not stand for that, and so they gave Joshua a city, or a place, in which he might dwell, spending his last days in a beautiful retirement. It is not exactly stated in a definite way, but it is pretty clear that they told Joshua to choose some place which he thought would suit him, and in Joshua 19:50 we are told that Joshua asked for the city of Timnath-Serah as his place of residence. By examining the name of Timnath-Serah, we may get an insight into the life and character of Joshua which we might not get elsewhere.

Timnath-Serah is a Hebrew word, and it means the "City of the Sun." So we see that Joshua had a very different estimate of the place he should live from that of Lot. When Lot was told to take his choice, he examined the country before him and then chose the plains, which were rich and well-watered. He had an eye to making money; but Joshua, the Lord's servant, when he was told to choose a place for his home, he chose Timnath-Serah, which was a hilltop and in the full light of the sun. This fact is rather suggestive, and may suggest to us of today a thought which is well worthy of our consideration. Joshua was not concerned about how he would get a living for the physical man, but he was concerned about spending his last days in the full light of the sun—a symbol of the divine presence—and he chose his home on the hilltop of Timnath-Serah, where he might live in the light of the sun, and not only so, but where he might die in the presence of God and the light of heaven. What a beautiful home Joshua had for his last days, and then he went home to God.

"Is not this the land of Beulah:
Blessed, blessed land of light,
Where the flowers bloom forever
And the sun is always bright?"

ANOTHER "MISSING LINK"—CAN IT BE PRODUCED?

There seems to be a certain element in human society which is very reluctant to acknowledge God as the Creator, or Jesus as the one by whom God made the worlds. (See Heb. 1:2.) The effort to give such glory to another seems not to wear out. Again and again, some false prophet comes to the front to put another into God's place. They are so anxious to make it appear that things come about in some way, other than the one the Bible mentions. How happy some people would be if they could only establish the fact that there is no God, or if He exists at all that He is wholly unable to fill the place which the Scripture declares He did fill! Most likely, such people do not know how to sing—

"All hail the power of Jesus' name!
Let angels prostrate fall,
Bring forth the royal diadem,
And crown Him Lord of all."

It is useless to recount all the efforts which have been made seemingly with the one purpose to rob God and His Son of the glory which belongs unto them. Even an effort to do so would fill many pages, so we will be content to give the latest of such efforts, that our readers may see how the puny hand of man is arrayed against his Creator and Saviour. They are seeking to rob Deity of the glory of creation and redemption. Capper's Weekly, a paper having almost a million circulation, is the mouthpiece of this so-called recent discovery. The item is given as follows:

"A theory that the earth and the other planets were formed from fragments rent from the sun by the powerful tidal attractions of a passing star eons (ages) ago is advanced by J. H. Jeans, F. R. S., in the annual report of the Smithsonian Institution.

"According to this theory of the origin of the solar system, what probably happened at the moment of the cataclysm, Jean says, is the attraction caused the sun-mass to eject two arms, or jets of matter, one toward the attracting star, and the other in exactly the opposite direction.

"Due to instability of the distribution of density in one of the masses, condensation formed in it and ultimately it broke up into separate detached masses. The surviving jet formed our sun; the fragments of the burst jet are our planets."

Of all the nonsense we have run up with, this is the poorest. We can but wonder if that man Jean really expected any person of sense to believe his theory! Suppose we accept his statement that the sun and our world were created as he suggests, will he, will any one, tell us where the matter of that passing star came from? There must have been a creator behind the passing star, and if that be true, why could He not have created matter for the sun and planets and given them shape and place in the solar system just as truly as He created and gave shape to the passing star. Mr. Jean's theory is too thin; it has nothing to it, except it shows the desire of deified (?) man to take the honor and majecty of the Creator from Him and give it to poor man in his folly and helplessness.

We have heard much of the "missing link" in another theory of man in an effort to upset the theory of creation. Now we have another "missing link" in another effort to show that God is not the Creator of the sun and our planets by claiming that a passing star threw off fragments and made the sun and our planets. What faith (?) this man must have to believe that an inanimate body can throw off a part of itself and then make it into the great sun and the beautiful planets, and then throw them out into space, each having its own orbit or pathway through the infinite distances of the universe, and so construct the worlds as we now have them. If any man can believe that, he ought to have no trouble in the world to believe that God, the infinite source of every good thing, is the Creator of the universe, and that would take in the passing star and its fragments. Surely we have some queer mortals!

"THAT MAN HAS THE COURAGE OF HIS CONVICTIONS."

Did you ever hear that said of a man? Of some particular man? Well, what did you think of him? Of the man who had the courage of his convictions? Certainly, if you are a man worthy of the name, you ought to have thought well of the man who had the courage of his convictions, but all men do not have the courage of their convictions, and they can go along and say nothing and keep the great majority of the people very friendly with them; but the man who has convictions and then has the courage of his convictions—well, he cannot have so many friends, because he will have to take a stand with many of his friends and acquaintances which they will not like, and then he makes himself unpopular with them. As for me and my house, I think I would greatly prefer to have friends who would have the courage of their convictions, for then I know that I can count on them. In other words, I am quite sure I know where they stand, and can find them any time I may need them. The other fellow, who is to make himself popular by not showing his colors—well, I do not just know what would happen if I were in a close place and needed some one to stand up and speak the truth for me; he would be afraid of losing his popularity if he should take his stand for me, and so, though he knows the facts well, yet he is afraid that he might have some one to stand against him if he should show his friendship for me. At best, that man may be all right for ornament, as a friend, but he will not stand when one is in a close place, nor serve as a friend when a trying test comes. It is not always a popular thing to be true to the truth, or to one's convictions, but what we lose in the way of friends we shall more than make up in character, and character is never out of place when the test comes. Let us all make the effort to do the right thing, and then stand by the right thing—never mind about the fear of criticism. Do the right thing, and then take the consequences—be a man in your place. It always pays to be a man—it has done so in the past; it will do so in the future.

THE MINISTER'S HELPER—WHO IS HE?

One question which ought to be uppermost in the minds of the people, but is not very often apparent in preaching the Gospel to the people, is the constant need of the inspiration and guidance of the Holy Spirit. Not only do the people overlook the subject, but men and women who are attempting to lead the people of God in the search of divine truth seem often to neglect it. Often some preachers make no acknowledgment of the work of the Spirit in their work for the winning and saving of men to Christ. We have known men to do much work professedly for Christ and the Church, and rarely make any reference to the office and work of the Holy Spirit. It is no wonder that the success of such men is very limited. Without the help of the Spirit, any man's success will be very limited in fruitfulness. It is almost like a man trying to whittle down a big tree with a pocket knife when he has a fine-cutting saw and a good helper standing by. Why such an one prefers to whittle a tree in the thought that he is cutting the tree down when, in fact, he has at his command the best helper the world has ever known for cutting down men and women who are living in sin. God help us—all of His servants—to come to know the Holy Spirit as our helper in preaching the Gospel to the people. No doubt about it, much preaching counts for little or nothing when the minister seeks to do it in his own strength and wisdom. Some dear men seem to have such exalted ideas of their own qualifications as to feel no need of special help from above. When that is the case, we know what happens—the people do not yield to the Gospel. They hear something, it is true, but the word preached goes in one ear and out of the other, and the poor sinner is left high and dry, not being touched in mind or heart by the preaching. Brethren, the time is at hand when such neglect of the Holy Spirit is inexcusable on the part of those who proclaim that they are called to the ministry. If God has called you to preach the Gospel, He has also called the Holy Spirit to go along with you to be your Helper in pulling down the strongholds of sin and in building up the strongholds of righteousness. Oh, beloved brother, do not go to your work without your heaven-given Helper—the Holy Spirit!

ELON LETTER.

Readers of the Elon Letter will remember that last summer I had occasion to quote from the Burlington News certain editorials written by its good editor, Mr. O. F. Crowson. Friend Crowson never ceases to express his appreciation of our college. During the Alamance campaign he gave whole-page adventisements to the cause, writing the ads. himself and, besides, served on the "Flying Squadron" of the campaign committee, as well as a member of the general steering committee. He continues to stand for Elon like a load of bricks. Twice this summer he has editorially spoken in no uncertain terms of his interest in Elon.

The First Editorial.

On July 5th, the Burlington Daily News spoke thus editorially:

"We are glad to note that a large number of Alamance County boys and girls are making reservations for the fall term of Elon College, and the prospects are that the enrollment from this county will be much larger this year than ever before.

"Our people are realizing that we have right in our midst a Grade "A" college, with all the advantages, and yet near enough home to save the expenses of travel, and near enough to permit the student to visit home often without added expenses of travel.

"By the time that the college opens for the fall term, they are going to have a good-looking place, with new buildings completed and with others nearing completion, and we are all going to be proud of our college. There is no college in the South that has such a program of building and improvement mapped out as has Elon College. She is going to stand out in all her glory with handsome, modern buildings, beautiful surroundings, and will attract the attention of the whole State.

"We have always been proud of Elon College and the great work that she has been doing, but it will be with increased pride that we can point to her in the future. With her program of building and enlargement, with all the new, modern conveniences, she will offer to the boys and girls inducements that she has never been able to offer before.

"We are glad to know that there is such a demand for room from our boys and girls, and we would like to see an enrollment this year of 100 from Alamance County, and we believe that this number will not be missed very far when the fall term opens for business."

The Second Editorial.

On July 23rd, this same good friend wrote in his columns as follows:

"Our people do not know what splendid opportunities Elon offers for training teachers. For one year spent in the teacher-training department, ten dollars is added to the teacher's salary and a State certificate issued. Two years brings a corresponding increase.

"We wish to call special attention to this two-year course. Some young people preparing to teach do not feel they can spend four years in college, so they go to a training school. Elon offers all such opportunity to take a two-year training course, and if later they can return they can graduate in two years. We hope all the standard colleges will soon make this arrangement.

"Four years at Elon gives the highest teacher's certificate the State issues. The least salary an Elon graduate can receive is $100 a month.

"The Elon graded and high school is the Elon practice school. This, it seems to us, is an ideal arrangement. We hope Alamance young people will train in our own college. Elon teachers have made good, and we expect to continue to hear of their success. In our own city a number of Elon graduates are employed as teachers. We have no better teachers than these, says our able superintendent. When you build up Elon, you build up Alamance County."

These editorials are quoted that our people may know how those nearest Elon feel toward her.

THE PSYCHOLOGY OF COLLEGE COMMENCEMENTS.

BY WM. THORNTON WHITSETT.

Some day we shall have written for us by an agile brain and a facile pen the story of the college commencement, considered from the psychological standpoint. It will be a fat and juicy octave volume, and its contents will be a revelation to the uninitiated. As it holds the mirror up to nature, it will give us many a satisfying picture.

"Know then thyself, presume not God to scan,
The proper study of mankind is man."

—Pope Essay.

In the second chapter of that wonderful book, known as "The Wisdom of Sase," we have this attempted classification of the various elements that enter into an average commencement. This reduction to percentage bases has evidently been arrived at from a long and careful study of these occasions, and while the percentages may rise and fall on various occasions, it is likely that the correct average has about been described as follows: Wisdom, 5 per cent; philosophy, 5 per cent; humor, 5 per cent; absurdity, 10 per cent; society, 25 per cent; humanity, 50 per cent.

If we were attempting an analysis of these figures, we would be inclined to begin with the highest score—humanity. Under the high statement of 50 per cent, we would place the coming and going of the crowd, their striving for choice seats, their forgetfulness of all but their own comfort, their disposition to be talkative with their neighbors, their disregard of the rights of others, etc. The score of 25 per cent, under the heading of society, would call to mind dress, cars, groups, fraternity clans, amorous couples, etc. Wisdom, with a score of 5 per cent, would remind us of the occasional flashes of real insight into life and great events as shown by those who move as the high lights of the occasion. Philosophy, with a score of 5 per cent, might call to mind the successful efforts of various parts of the program to make the most of the moment, and to give something of the lasting and permanent to the flying occasion. Absurdity may often have no difficulty in making a score of 10 per cent. Pomposity-seeking by sundry devices to attract attention to itself; unwonted and unwarranted dignity settling down as a halo in some favored spot; some overbold individual wading out beyond his depth in deep waters of advice or discussion; cap and gown in battle with the uncouth and the untrained; accidents in place and position revealing the fact strongly that they are only accidents, "simply that and nothing more."

"All the world's a stage,
And all the men and women merely players."

The play of the commencement as it is set is always an interesting one, but the study of the larger play that is also going on in connection with the interesting scholastic exercises is much more interesting. It adds to the occasion a zest that no brilliant commencement can ever give, and fills the hour with memories that may well form the basis for consideration in many days to come.

If one might move as an observant philosopher amid the throngs he could find material on every hand for his reflections. Childhood, youth, manhood, old age, are all around, and from each and all something of value and suggestion constantly come.

It is not alone the scholastic that may entertain us; politics, social advancement, love-making, displays of wealth, envy, friendship, good-will, courtesy, and a hundred other matters are on every side if we care to behold.

Great is the college commencement. No wonder that it is one of our most popular institutions, and that it keeps its perennial hold upon so many people. Its elements are sufficiently varied for it to make always an unusual appeal to a great number. It is to be taken seriously, but in so doing, there can be no harm in seeing its lighter sides also. It would be entirely too serious a matter to take it as seriously as it sometimes takes itself.

WHAT IS THE TRUTH ABOUT THE BIBLE AND SCIENCE?

BY REV. GEORGE W. MCDANIEL, D. D.

Pastor First Baptist Church, Richmond, Va.

Part II.

God's law, "after its kind," is so strongly in force that every one familiar with animal life recognizes its uniformity and universality. These easily observed things in nature are more in harmony with the traditional interpretation of Scripture than are they with the theories of the evolutionist. If transmutation has been the method, if one species originated from a different species, why does not transmutation go on before our eyes? Why did the hippus, the boldly proclaimed progenitor of the horse, remain a hippus from its origin to its extinction? Clearly, because the hippus was always a hippus. So with man—since God made the first one, he has been a man. Does some one ejaculate "fogyism?" Then let him take the lowest man and the highest monkey, and by interbreeding these near relatives produce an offspring, and thus demonstrate his theory. Until this is done, I must walk in the light of the Bible, experience and common sense.

Elsewhere I have shown that a special creative act of God occurred three times in the first chapter of Genesis, precisely where science has the missing links—the origin of matter, the origin of life, and the origin of soul. I do not intend to repeat that evidence here, but it is significant that a chapter written centuries before the discoveries of modern science contains the data which science confesses is wanting in its sphere. Genesis reverently understood, and geology properly taught fit each other as glove and hand. One's patience is tried by the superficial and frequently blatant talk about the allegorical and unscientific language of Genesis; by the extravagant pulpit estimates of men who rejected the Bible; by the laudation of alleged scientific methods to the disparagement of the faith of our fathers.

Instead of emphasizing names and expounding theories which discredit the Book, we should, when occasion admits, dwell on the phenomenal fact that in this record, written centuries before science unveiled the modern truths of nature, there is not one scientific blunder or error. We should rejoice that the coincidences and correspondences are so many and so marked that a modern scientist has confessed that "if one should sketch briefly the celestial mechanism of LaPlace, the Cosmos of Humboldt and the latest system of geology, no simpler and sublimer words could be found than these of Moses." We should cling to the Bible, on the very first page of which the cardinal truths of our faith are indelibly written—the existence, unity, personality, wisdom, power, government, and goodness of God; the gradual, consecutive, cumulative, and harmonious processes of nature; the origin, free agency, mission, sovereignty and immortality of man. We should hold with tenacious faith the Book of books, the first sentence of which lays the axe at the root of the tree of atheism by announcing God; of polytheism, by declaring His oneness; of pantheism, by declaring His personality and transcendence; of deism, by declaring His activity and government; of agnosticism, by positive statements of knowledge; of materialism, by affirming the creation of matter and the supremacy of spirit; and of rationalism, by presenting the ultimate religious truth as a revelation.

It is not fair to say that the Bible and science are at war. The outcry of hostility is occasioned by misunderstanding and speculation. Misunderstanding—there is an essential difference between the ground of evangelical knowledge and the ground of scientific knowledge. They represent two hemispheres of the world of truth. One is based upon experience, the other is based upon experiment. A personal experience in one, and an accurate experiment in the other will not be contradictory; for what God reveals in His Word and in His work necessarily harmonize when both are understood. Speculation—some man with an hypothesis to prove supposes he has found out some new fact and hastens to announce it. An amusing incident occurred in Louisiana a little while ago. Near Shreveport, road builders unearthed some enormous bones in a deep cut they were making through a hill. Wide attention was attracted by the bones. Geologists inspected them and pronounced their verdict with assurance—the remains of some enormous prehistoric animal. They spoke with such finality that their opinion was generally accepted. It was proposed to raise a fund to mount these bones for exhibition in a museum. Unexpectedly something transpired—an unsophisticated farmer read about the bones in the papers. One day he went to town, called upon an editor and inquired: "Why all this ado about those bones?" The editor asked if he knew anything about them. "Surely," he said, and then told that years ago Barnum and Bailey gave a circus in Shreveport; that one of their largest elephants died; that they secured a permit from him to bury it on his place, and that it was buried on the hill through which the road was cut. Exit the theorists, while laughter convulsed the public.

We do well to recall Luther's text: "Forever, O Lord, Thy word is settled in heaven." (Ps. 119:89.) He had it written in charcoal on the walls of his chamber, and wrought in embroidery on the dress of his servants. Earthly changes reach not the heavenly sphere; and there the Word of God is fixed beyond the touch of disturbing fingers. Modern science has upset the notions of centuries, but it is unable to prove the testimony of the Bible to be false. In honesty it should admit the concord between what God has revealed in the ages of the rocks and in the Rock of Ages.

We also do well to recall that the Lord of Life, the one who broke the bands of the grave and crushed the skull of death, put His imprimatur upon the Old Testament. His own words are: "For had ye believed Moses, ye would have believed Me; for Moses wrote of Me" (Jno. 5:46), "For as Jonah was three days and three nights in the whale's belly; so shall the Son of Man be three days and three nights in the heart of the earth" (Matt. 12:40); "For verily I say unto you, Till heaven and earth pass, one jot or one tittle shall in no wise pass from the law till all be fulfilled" (Matt. 5:18). Christ not only put His stamp upon the Old Testament, He preauthenticated the New Testament. (John 16:12-15.) One cannot destroy the validity of the Bible without impeaching the authority of Christ.

The Bible is the world's most marvelous Book. The more it is studied, the more marvelous it appears. It is marvelous that it used in the creation account a word for day (yom) which means an indefinite period of time. (Compare Gen. 2:4; Ps. 95:8; John 8:56.) It is marvelous that in the same account the day begins with evening, and chemical light precedes the appearance of the sun, just as geology teaches that the first light was cosmical. It is marvelous that, though Hipparchus fixed the number of stars at 1,022, and Ptolemy at 1,026, twenty-two hundred years before Galileo turned the telescope on the heavens and disclosed innumerable stars, Jeremiah said: "The host of heaven cannot be numbered." It is marvelous that, several thousand years before Copernicus, Kepler, and Galileo taught the true law of the solar system, Job taught the earth is not flat (26:7) and that the movements of the heavenly bodies do not vary (38:12). It is marvelous that, though philosophers like Aristotle and Bacon did not believe the air had weight and thirty centuries before the discovery that it did, the oldest book in the Bible should say: "To make the weight for the winds (atmosphere)." (Job 28:25.) It is marvelous that, long before Redfield announced his theory of storms, showing that they were not lawless, Solomon should say substantially the same thing. (Eccles. 1:6.) It is marvelous that centuries before uninspired man discovered the law of evaporation and explained how the waters which flow to the sea do not overflow, but return in vapor to water the land, the Bible should state the fact explicitly: "All the rivers run into the sea; yet the sea is not full; unto the place from whence the rivers came, thither they return again." (Eccles. 1:7.) It is marvelous that, twenty-six centuries before Harvey discovered the circulation of the blood the Bible should, in a poetic description of death, describe the spinal marrow (the silver cord), the skull which encloses the brain (the golden bowl), the lungs (the pitcher at the fountain), the heart (the wheel at the cistern)—a "wheel pumping up through one pipe to discharge through another." (Eccles. 12:6.) So marvelous are these and other facts that so competent an authority as Sir John Hirschel expressed the opinion: "All human discoveries seem to be made only for the purpose of confirming more strongly the truths that have come down from on high and are contained in the sacred writings:

"A glory gilds the sacred page
Majestic like the sun;
It gives a light to every age,
It gives, but borrows none."

The Bible is a fortress which has withstood every attack from Celsus to Percy Stickney Grant. Men have hurled against it the paper wads of their own fanciful theories ignited from their own powder. There it stands, like Jackson at Manassas, "a stone wall"; like Gibraltar, at whose base the waves break in fury. The Bible is an anvil upon which infidels have beaten and broken their hammers.

"Last eve I stood beside the blacksmith's door
And heard the anvil ring the vesper chime;
Then, looking in, I saw upon the floor
Old hammers worn with beating years of time.

" 'How many anvils have you had,' said I,
'To wear and batter these hammers so?'
'Only one,' said he; 'the anvil
Wears the hammers out, you know.'

"And so, I thought, the anvil of God's word
For ages skeptics' blows have beat upon,
And though the sound of falling blows was heard,
The anvil is unhurt—the hammers gone!"

The Bible is a bridge spanning the deep river of life, built of steel and concrete by inspired workmen. The foaming floods have never shaken its adamantine foundation. It has never needed repair and no one need doubt its security. On its stone floor, worn smooth by the feet of devout pilgrims, millions have crossed on to glory and by it we must cross over if we would walk with safety.

The Bible is a flower garden. Its lessons are fresher than the unmelted dew on the morning rose. Its truths are sweeter than the honey of Hymettus. Christian, go learn of the bee. It lights and lingers upon the flower where the sweet juices are stored "in a flask fairer than alabaster." It sucks the honey and needs no other proof that the flower-cup holds the nectar. It fills its sack and spreads its heavily laden wings for its return flight to the hive to make food for the young and sweets for man. Go thou and do likewise. Extract the nectar from the blossoms which bloom on every page of Holy Writ. Store the symmetri-cells of memory and heart with the treasures of God's truth and impart these riches to others. Find thy delight in patient, prayerful penetration of God's Word, and thy duty in conveying its truths to those who have them not. Say with the psalmist:

"How sweet are Thy words to my taste!
Yea, sweeter than honey to my mouth!"

This reasoning and appeal are, perhaps, not needed by the seasoned Christian. You have been in the crucible, and you came out with a faith refined. Not so with our young Church people, perchance our own children. The difficulties that arise from science and criticism are perplexing many of them, are shaking the faith of a few. In certain colleges and universities, Scriptural teachings are treated with supercilious disdain or smiling ridicule. What are we to do in such a situation? We know that the experiences of life will chasten and change most of them; that greater and permanent difficulties will enter into the very structure of their maturer lives and steady them; that when they shall have felt the broken heart and found the balm in Gilead, the only balm; that when they shall "have passed through the Valley of Humiliation and emerged victorious at the other end, they will not be greatly troubled by science and destructive criticism." But, what is to become of them in all the days intervening before the lightning falls on the roof tree, or the angel of death spreads his black wings over their homes? This much at least we can do: be patient and sympathetic, be intelligently interested in their perplexities, be equipped with the armor of faith for every friendly combat, concede nothing vital, more closely inspect the teaching in the schools, and trust that in God's own good time He will bring them His way.

Questions and Answers.

Question.—In Judges, 19th chapter, I read of a Levite and his concubine passing through Gibeah, and lodged there for the night, and the sons of Belial mistreated the concubine, and the man of the house begged them not to do so; but they gave no heed to his plea, but mistreated her until the morning, when she died, when her Lord cut her into twelve pieces and sent her to all the coast of Israel to show how wickedly these men had treated her. And, as you know, the Israelites warred against the Benjamites because they would not give up the men that did this wickedness. Now, the question which I wish you to answer is this: Why did the Lord allow so many Israelites to be killed after He told them to go up? Another question I would be glad to have you answer is this: What became of the Benjamite women and children, as nothing is said of the women and children being in battles? And this also: Why could not the Benjamites find wives among their own women? Please answer in THE SUN.—J. D. Wicker.

Let us take in the situation. This was not a war between Israel and some outside nation. It was a war between brothers; they were all Israelites, for Benjamin was an Israelite. It was, in some respects, much like the war of the United States in 1861-1865. A great wrong had been committed in the United States. Slavery was holding its big black hand over the people of our fair land. It must be wiped out. A division occurred. The country went to war; it was one division against another. So it was in Israel. A great wrong had been committed, and it must be wiped out. Israel went to war—one part against another part. The Lord told Israel to go up to battle. Bro. Wicker wants to know why the Lord told them to go up to battle, and then allowed so many Israelites to be killed. It was, as I see it, because lewdness and folly had been committed in Israel, and the sin must be avenged. The Lord permitted them to go up to battle, and thousands fell on both sides, and the sin of lewdness and folly was avenged. This is the only reason that we can find. The Lord permitted the Israelites and the Benjamites to fight till this folly and lewdness had been avenged. Sin is a costly thing, and often before it can be avenged thousands of precious lives must be laid down in death. If you ask me why this is so, I tell you frankly I do not know why, but that it is so, we think, none can doubt. Your second question is also interesting, viz: what became of the Benjamite women and children, as nothing is said of the women and children being in battle? We can only answer in the words of the Scriptures, as follows: "Then the elders of the congregation said: How shall we do for wives for them that remain, seeing the women are destroyed out of Benjamin? The women had been destroyed, perhaps in battle, but anyway destroyed, and so it came to pass that Benjamin could not get wives from his own tribe (Judges). As to your third question, let me say the Benjamites could not get women for wives from their own tribe because they had been destroyed. And they could not get wives from Israel because the Israelites had sworn, saying, "Cursed be he that giveth a wife to Benjamin" (see Judges 21:18). Benjamin could not get wives of his own people, for they had been destroyed, and he could not get them from Israel, for they had sworn that a Benjamite should not have an Israelitish woman for wife. It looked like Benjamin was doomed to have a lot of old bachelors in their camp. Sin always leaves its mark. God said: "Whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap," and if you are going to indulge sin, thinking no one will know it, then you may as well give up before you start, for God keeps His word, and when He says you shall reap what you sow, you may rest assured that you will get what is coming to you. Lewdness and folly tolerated in Israel were the basis of ruin to the people. If you tolerate sin, you may be sure that sin will not tolerate you in the day of judgment—it will not spare you when judgment comes. This is just as true of individuals as of nations. Sin must be paid for at a high rate of interest.

Question.—In Judges 18:20, we read: "And the priest's heart was glad, and he took the ephod, and the teraphim, and the graven image, and went in the midst of the people." What does he mean by that statement? And what did he mean by the "ephod" and the "teraphim?"—Jehu.

It seems that there was an effort, making to buy this priest off. They were making him an offer that looked as if it were better than what he already had, and he accepted the offer, and then it is said the priest's heart was glad, and for the reason that he was to get a better position than he had before. They had offered him an exchange, and the ephod, the terraphim and the graven image he was to get seemed to him a better thing than what he had before enjoyed. That is one of Satan's plans. If he can make a weak man think he is to get something better for an exchange, a good many do not stop to ask if the change is to be for the good of the truth. If it be a better place for the man, that is the main consideration. These men are nearly always wounding the Church of Christ by accepting some advantage for themselves, even though it be not so good for the cause. So it seems to have been with this priest. As to what the ephod was, it may be said: It was a vestment worn by a Jewish priest over the tunic. It consisted of two shoulder-straps, one part covering the breast and the other part the back. Two onyx stones, set in gold, fastened it on the shoulders, and each of the stones were engraved with the names of the six tribes according to their order. The ephod was made of very costly material, in gold, blue, purple, crimson and fine twined linen. This ephod was ordinarily worn by the priests, but not exclusively, for at least on one occasion we read that David appeared in the ephod. It was when the ark was brought back to Jerusalem. The teraphim seems to have been an article which was brought into use more by the people than by any command of God. This was necessarily so, and for the reason that God forbade the worship of images. These people had but lately come out of heathenism, and they were trying to keep as much of the heathen way as they could in the worship of God. They even sought to retain their graven images. It is a wonder how the impressions made on the mind, even by a heathen religion, sticks. It was so with the people coming out of heathenism and going in to worship God—they held to the rites of heathenism, as far as they could. A very noticeable fact in reading the work of Martin Luther is that he long held on to many of the ideas he had received in Catholicism, and that notwithstanding he had seen the wrong of it and had renounced Roman Catholicism forever, and yet he found it very hard to lay it all aside at once.

Question.—I see in the Bible the name of Evil-Merodach is mentioned. Please tell me who he was and where he lived?—Jabez.

Evil-Merodach was a son of Nebuchadnezzer, and reigned in the sixth century B. C. He was his father's successor. He did some good things to say the least. One of these was the releasing of Jehoiachan, who was King of Judah, from prison after he had been confined for thirty-seven years. And that was not all. After he released him he gave him a position of honor and became personally intimate with him. After a reign of two years, Evil-Merodach was murdered by his brother-in-law, Neriglissar, who succeeded him as king. In the olden days, as now, there were men of ambition always standing near, if they saw a chance, to get one man out of the way, even by murdering him, and if that would give them the chance to step into his shoes, many seemed to have no hesitancy in doing such an awful thing. That is the way many men come to the throne as a ruler. The heart of man apart from God is evil continually.

Question.—Who are the "Hussites" mentioned in the history of a few centuries ago?—Robert.

John Huss, of Bohemia, died at the stake, was burned to death on July 6, 1415, in Constance, Germany. He was a contemporary of Wycliffe, or nearly so. At first, Huss looked with much doubt on the doctrines of Wycliffe, but a daily and a reverent study of the Bible brought him to be much in sympathy with what Wycliffe had taught. When this became known, it caused him to be summoned to Rome. He declined to go. He felt it his duty, however, to appear before the council which was held at Constance. When he arrived there he was cast into a dungeon, and he was soon followed to the same place by his friend, Jerome. He was tried and condemned to death, but he was offered liberty if he would recant and return to the bosom of the Church of Rome. This he refused to do, and then he was condemned to death and was burned at the stake and was wonderfully sustained in that trying hour. Of course, such persecutions as he endured called to his aid many friends. After he was gone, these friends, though often at the peril of their lives, they banded themselves together under the common faith of the New Testament and were known as Hussites. And these people are the people you read of in history as Hussites.

Question.—I saw somewhere the other day the word "evangelistary." Can you tell me what it means?—J. G. E.

Yes, the evangelistary is the name given to a book which contains the portions of the Gospels which had been appointed to be read in the Communion service. In many Churches, much stress is laid on the quotation, or, in some cases, the reading of certain parts of the Gospels which are considered especially appropriate to the occasion of the Lord's Supper.

SELECTIONS FROM THE DIARY OF A CHRISTAIN FATHER.

January 29, 1894.—Our first baby was born today. I feel like another man. My wife wanted it named for me, but I insisted he should be called Arthur, beginning the family with the first letter of the alphabet.

February 1, 1894.—The preacher called today and urged that I should join the Church before my boy ever knew me as an outsider. He pressed home on me the argument that I had new responsibilities since I am a father; I have been thinking a long time about taking this step, and so I promised to come out next Sunday.

February 6, 1894.—With fear and trembling, I started having family prayers with my wife, even though the baby cried real loudly before I got through.

September 2, 1896.—Benjamin was born at 2 A. M. This evening I knelt by my wife's bed and we consecrated him to God from birth.

October 15, 1899.—Clara, a darling girl, arrived today. God help us to rear her right.

December 1, 1899.—Wife and I bundled up the babies and went to Church long enough to have them baptized. Arthur wriggled badly, but Benjamin was almost uncontrollable. Only Clara behaved, although she is the youngest.

June 2, 1900.—Began keeping Arthur to Church after Sunday School. He wanted to go home very much, as usual, but I believe that children should be broken in young on attending Church. My father did not do this for me, and I know how hard it is for me to keep going when I don't feel like it. If children get the habit early, they will surely be more likely to turn out well.

November 25, 1901.—Spent the evening reading Bible stories to Benjamin. He was particularly interested in Jacob and Benjamin.

December 14, 1907.—Clara wanted me to take her through the stores, so she could see the Christmas things. I talked to her about giving as well as receiving. Her allowance for dishwashing and helping to sweep does not meet her expanding demands, and she has a hard time to see why she should give out of it. When she heard of the needy children in China and India this evening at the Church, she was more reconciled to part with some of her own money in the collection.

September 5, 1912.—Took Arthur with me to the annual conference. I served as lay delegate to the Lay Association, and he was anxious to go along. Arthur was more interested in the preachers, though. He had never seen so many together at one time.

October 11, 1912.—Benjamin came in today with a roll of one-dollar bills, the first big money he has ever earned by his unaided efforts. That boy has a money-sense, and I am afraid it will ruin him. I hoped to have him turn out to be a preacher, but he is not headed that way.

December 4, 1912.—Benjamin made another big haul of money for a boy sixteen years old. I talked tithing to him all evening. He is a sensible fellow, and realized that he could not have made his money without God's help, and promised to pay God His due share. I don't think he would have done it if he had not known that I was a tither myself. I am glad he has respect for his father. Some day he is going to be rich.

February 9, 1915.—Clara has been terribly under conviction during the revival meeting, and is so stubborn and timid that she will not yield. I am afraid she will get sick if she does not pretty soon make her decision.

February 10, 1915.—Clara came to me tonight and said that if I would go forward with her to the altar she would walk along. Of course I went! She got up radiant, and more beautiful than I have ever seen her.

September 14, 1916.—Arthur, Benjamin, and Clara, all started off to ——— Wesleyan University today. The house is awfully lonely without them. Clara is pretty young, but she graduated so early from high school, and the boys will be at college with her.

February 3, 1917.—Received a letter today from Arthur. He says he has decided to enter the ministry. Dr. Brown is holding a college revival meeting, and interviewing students. Well, Arthur will make a good one. I interpose no objections.

May 21, 1918.—Benjamin writes that he is engaged to Helen Abernethy, daughter of the leading banker of Detroit. I will have to make a trip to college as soon as possible to meet her. Of course, he writes of her in glowing terms. I hope he hasn't made a mistake.

June 5, 1918.—Met Helen Abernethy today. Clara speaks highly of her, as well as the rest of the girls. Found that she is secretary of the social service committee of the Y. W. C. A.

March 28, 1919.—Clara wrote me today that she wanted to join the Student Volunteer Band for Foreign Missions. I was willing to have Arthur enter the ministry, but how can I give Clara up to go abroad? Our only daughter! Oh, God, help me not to stand against Thy will. If it is Thy will for her to go, I will keep out of the way, although my heart is bleeding.

March 29, 1919.—Wrote Clara to consider carefully and prayerfully such a move, remembering her youthful years. Told her that she was responsible to God and not to us.

September 5, 1920.—Clara entered the hospital training school in preparation for work in the mission field.

November 27, 1921.—Spent Thanksgiving with Arthur and his Church. His members flocked around us, and I cannot remember half their names. But everybody was cordial and had a kind word to say about their young preacher. Arthur is to be married in December, and the people already have the parsonage well stocked with a lot of necessities. They surely do love him down there.

December 25, 1922.—Benjamin and his wife had us come to their home for the holidays. He took us around today in his machine and showed us the places where he is financially interested. Among them were some Church enterprises, as well as business ventures. He is putting the Good Will Industries on a new basis of efficiency by providing a whole new line of machines. While he is liberal with his money, he also showed me where he is teaching English to a group of foreigners who meet at the Y. M. C. A. His wife is just as interested as he is, and their money is sure to be of great service.

January 17, 1923.—Clara and the doctor left Columbus today for New York. Arthur and his wife, Benjamin and his wife, and mother and I have made a "scene" at the station when we said "good-by." Mother, particularly, could not say a word, but could only cry. Clara has been such a comfort to her, and it is hard to see her husband start for Africa. This is our contribution—our daughter.—Western Christian Advocate.

QUIET TALKS ON SIMPLE ESSENTIALS.

By S. D. Gordon.

Auspices Atlantic City Council of Churches.

(No. 2) The Big Five.

Shelter of roof, warmth of fire, shoes for little feet and bigger, bread and bed—these, and the like, take our strength. The circle of loved ones, where one's very life centers, this must be cared for, and well cared for.

Yet, our thoughts go insistently toward the real things, the essentials. The spirit life is the real life, of course. I live in my body. I think through my mind. I, myself, am a spirit. We long to understand clearly, and so be at rest inside. We can't all be experts. The day's too short. And cross-currents run so strong. How shall the earnest man know?

Well, there are five simple essentials for a strong, pure, true life. There is a Book of God. The outstanding thing in the morals of life is this, there is an outstanding Book. The outstanding Book of all books is this Book. Morals are the very life of life. This Book gives the true moral standard of life.

It states simply and clearly the moral principles that fit into every circumstance, and difficulty, and problem. Then there's more. It tells of the power that helps a man pull steadily toward that standard. And it tells of the Friend that meets your sore need, answers your perplexing questions, and solves your knotty problems. This old Book of God is utterly dependable.

Then, there is a Man. The outstanding thing about the Book is this: There is a Man. That Man lived the moral standard of life as no other has actually lived it. He is our Brother-Man, our Fellow, the one solitary God-Man. In Him, God came to us men, and comes to us.

He was as really God as though only God, and nothing else. He was as truly a man, a really human man, as though he was only a man, and nothing more. All there is of the human was and is in him.

And all there is of God was in him, as he worked in that Nazareth carpenter-shop amid the odor of the pine shavings, and then taught, and healed, and loved, and fed, and mingled freely amongst men. The outstanding thing about this Book of God is this God-Man.

Then the Man—died. The biggest thing about his life is the way his life snuffed out. The knot on the end of that thread catched your eye at once and holds it. There is a thread. What a thread! What a life!

Then the thread knots, a toughly knotted knot. That knot has caught the eye—aye, the heart—of the race. It's been discussed and discussed. But the thing that stands out biggest is the fact of it. There is the knot. He did die, as no one else has, or could, or can.

And there's the fourth thing that stands out, ugly and gaunt, dirty and odorous. But it's there. That's the fact of a break, man's break away from the Father-God. The common word is sin. The root of the thing is simply that, a break, a bad break, away from the mother-hearted Father's desire and request.

And, "and"—the striking thing to mark just now is this, that Man tied up in an unravelable knot these two things, his dying and that break. He himself said the break made the death necessary. The more you think into it, the less fully the explanations seem to explain. You feel there is always a something more. But the explanations are secondary. The fact is the thing. The death is the outstanding fact.

And the fifth essential comes crowding quickly in. And it shows up at once what a princely brood and breed we men are of. Every man is a king in his right to choose. The man that knows about this Man must take sides. Choice of the Man who died covers all moral choices. And choice makes character. It is an essential that a man makes personal choice.

The outstanding things in the morals of life is this: there is a Book. The outstanding of that Book is this: there is a Man. The thing that stands out about the man is this: he died.

And the Man said the outstanding thing about his death is this: it had to be. The thing called sin caused it. And the thing standing sheer out about the Man, and the dying, and the break of sin is this: every man that knows must choose. And every such man does choose.

And it is a striking fact, that looseness of thinking about the Book leads to looseness about the distinctive personality of the Man. Looseness there leads to loose ideas as to the distinctive meaning of his death. That in turn breeds decidedly loose ideas about sin, the break with God.

Then follows loose ideas about the need of choosing Him in whom centers all moral source. And when moral choice loosens, the moral fibre of character begins unraveling, straight away, and not slowly. Look around you today.

A London astronomical expert superintending the erection of a huge telescope in Cairo, noted the noon gun fired daily at military headquarters, and found their timepiece was regulated by the watchmaker's chronometer in the city. Inquiring there, he was astonished to find the chronometer regulated by the noon gun! Does that sort of dog-chasing-his-tail standard get into the serious things, sometimes?

MISSIONS

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Field Secretary.

THE COURAGEOUS CHRISTIAN.

In most of the enterprises of human life, sensible folk do a deal of thinking before they finally act. If I am going into business, or on a summer vacation, or to enter society, I count the cost if I am wise before I tackle the proposition.

How many Christions have the courage to think through this matter of giving to the Lord, so that when they do give they can do it cheerfully, for that is the only kind of giving the Lord or anybody else really loves. Well, if the average person is cheerful about the sums that he gives to God, he is very reticent about showing his cheerfulness.

And it is for exactly the same reason that the man who starts to do a day's work without first planning it out is seldom cheerful about its execution.

We do not enjoy our giving because we do not lay out a certain proportion of our income to give to God. Of course, when I want to buy a new auto with my money, I resent having some person come along and ask me to give it to the Lord. Not because I love money, but because I want what I want with my money. But when I have set aside a certain proportion of my income as a thankoffering to God for my blessings, being an honest man, I would never think of taking it to buy an automobile with.

It makes all the difference in the world whose money it is, and it is always our money until we have given it to God, and then it becomes His; but it remains my pleasure as to how I spend it for Him. Then I become a partner with God in His benevolences.

It adds a pleasure to my giving and a dignity to my life that I am doing God's will with something that was once mine, but which I have devoted to His purpose.

Cheerful givers are seldom those who give when they feel like it, for it is seldom we feel like parting with our money.

"God can have anything else He can appropriate so long as He leaves me to spend my own money," is the attitude of many a man who sings lustily: "All things come of Thee, O Lord, and of Thine own have I given Thee." But so little of it is His own.

We need more deliberate courage in our giving, and when we have courage enough to plan it as a joy it will become a joy, for we separate the pain of parting from the object of giving.

Try it for three months, and say that during the next three months 10 per cent of my income belongs to God and I am going to plan how best I can spend it in His name.

Have you the courage to do this?

J. O. ATKINSON.

THE CHAUTAUQUA.

Our Chautauqua and School of Methods closed its final session for the present year, with an address by Mr. Hermon Eldredge, Sunday evening, August 5th, after a week filled with fine fellowship, great addresses, splendid class-work and most wholesome suggestions for kingdom service in the various lines of Church activity. Others will write in detail of classes taught and who taught them, of addresses delivered and who delivered them, of sermons preached and who preached them. The object of this line is to add testimony to all the good and great things that have been said and may be said about the Chautauqua.

One hundred and eighteen registered for lecture and class-room work. This says nothing of the capacity audiences that greeted the speakers and rejoiced in the fine evening programs. It is no reflection on the past sessions of the Chautauqua to say that this was, by all odds, the best yet. The program was based on the idea of attaining practical results and the presentation of practical methods. The speakers and teachers present certainly proceeded to execute the program with no other high purpose in view than that of helping those who came to hear. The class-room work on methods of conducting Sunday Schools, Christian Endeavor Societies, missionary organizations, and Church work generally was certainly of the very highest type and efficient in the achievement of results. I heard one teacher of a class say that not a person who registered the first day, or any day, missed a single recitation period after the day of registration, and that her class, instead of decreasing, increased both in attendance and interest from the beginning. The same could have been noted in other classes.

The writer's opinion is that everybody that attended this session of the Chautauqua had only one regret, and that was that every Church, Sunday School, Christian Endeavor Society and missionary society in bounds of the whole Convention did not have representatives present. There was the highest commendation of the labors, program and results of the Chautauqua on all sides by those who attended. Elon College is undoubtedly the place for the annual session, and the results this year show that the Chautauqua has come to stay and prove that it is a benefit and a blessing.

Miss Lucy M. Eldredge, secretary, and the Board of Religious Education are certainly to be congratulated on the great program presented and the wonderful results achieved. Here is hoping, and believing, that with such a program next year there will be at least three hundred in attendance, instead of one hundred and fifteen. The Chautauqua is an institution which offers too many good things and too great a spiritual feast to be neglected by pastors, Churches and Church auxiliaries.

ELON MISSIONARY CRADLE ROLL.

On Friday, June 29th, the Elon College missionary cradle roll held its annual party from 4 to 6 o'clock at the new parsonage.

This is the day set apart for the mothers and the babies, and this was truly a happy occasion for all concerned. There were present fifty-four little ones and their mothers and a few visitors.

First, we had an opening song, "Welcome," followed by Scripture lesson by the superintendent. The pastor, Dr. N. G. Newman, told the "Story of the Baby Moses," followed by prayer for the mothers.

A short but pleasing program was then rendered by the little ones, every one doing their part well.

At the close of the program, in the center of the large living-room was placed a pedestal, on which was a large doll cradle, in which, as the children marched in line, they dropped their mite-boxes, after which they formed a circle and sang one verse of consecration hymn, "Take My Silver and My Gold." This was followed by prayer by Dr. J. O. Atkinson that their gifts might be blessed.

Then came the party out on the lawn. Refreshments of ice cream and cake were served. Every one had a genuinely good time, and some of them have already asked "When are we going to have another C. R. party?"

Little Pauline Kennett had 250 pennies in her box, and little Billie Johnston, son of our Orphanage superintendent, had 240 pennies. They won first and second prizes.

The mite-box and rally day offering amounted to $20.13; cradle roll dues, $5.05—total amount turned into the treasury, $25.18.

SEVENTY-FIVE YEARS OF AGE.

On Thursday, July 26, 1923, a few friends, of whom this writer was one, gathered at the home of Rev. P. T. Klapp, near Elon College, to do him honor on the occasion of the completion of seventy-five years of his life. It was a very pleasant day, and though quite warm, the day was thoroughly enjoyed by all present, as we believe. It so happened that only two of his children were present. Mrs. Green (Minnie), the oldest daughter, was detained by her own illness in Raleigh, while Mrs. Maud Robins, of Richmond, Va., was at the bedside of her sister and could not leave her. Henry, the second son, was unable to reach home at that time. DeWitt and Ruth were present, together with Mrs. Klapp and two sisters of our brother, while a third sister was detained by her illness. THE CHRISTIAN SUN editor and his wife and Dr. J. U. Newman made up the company for the day.

Rev. P. T. Klapp has long been one of our busiest pastors and a preacher of far more than ordinary ability. His work has been chiefly in two States—North Carolina and Virginia—but more so in North Carolina, his native State. He began work as a minister in 1873, which also gives him just fifty years in the ministry. In that time he has done a great amount of work, having preached 5,000 times and made more than 15,000 pastoral visits. More than 2,000 persons have professed faith in Christ under his ministry. He has received into the Churches 1,500 members and has baptized more than 1,000 persons. He has conducted many funeral services and performed the marriage ceremony for many couples.

In 1883, he introduced at Poplar Branch Christian Church, in Lee County, N. C., the work of foreign missions, and did it with so much zeal that his Conference entered into the work heartily. Later, he visited the Georgia and Alabama Christian Conference and introduced the same work there, starting the fund with $12.00. He has had the pleasure of seeing this work grow and the interest spread till now we have mission work in Japan and Porto Rico, and the interest abides in almost every section of Christian Church territory. He felt that God had laid it upon his heart to bring this matter to the attention of our Churches, and he has found real pleasure—yea, joy!—in pressing the matter of foreign missions upon the attention of our people. He is still an ardent friend of this good work.

In the fifty years of his ministry he has organized thirteen Churches and has led in the construction of twelve houses of worship. One of two things has happened in his ministry in practically every charge he has served, viz: either the people have resisted his teaching in some considerable degree, or they have accepted it heartily; and, as a result, the membership has grown in the spiritual life. Bro. Klapp is out and out what he is—so you do not have to guess where he stands on questions of the Christian life. He believes and teaches to his people holiness as he believes it is taught in the Bible. For his faith he has made many sacrifices, and is yet making them as necessity may demand. He is not ashamed of the Gospel of Christ, and believing it, he is not afraid to preach it in the power of the Holy Spirit. He is also a close and careful student of the Bible. In the day of judgment, we believe there will be many to rise up and call him "a faithful servant," because he was not afraid to declare these great truths of the Christian Faith. Some of his sermons have been built on the lines of richest thought, as presented in the Bible, and they are strong sermons.

In looking back over his ministry of fifty years, he says: "I thank God that during these fifty years my health has been fairly good, and my voice has been clear and strong; and I am glad to say it is as good now as when I began preaching, and I feel that I am, indeed and truth, seventy-five years young."

When we are kept by the power of God, we can maintain our natural force and continue in His service, doing His will.

" 'Tis religion that can give Sweetest pleasures while we live;
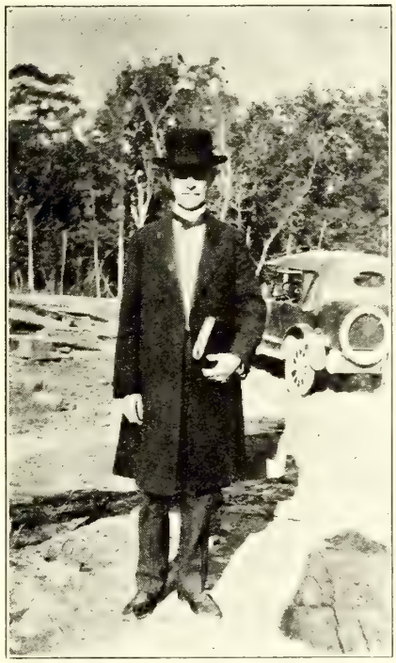
'Tis religion must supply
Solid comfort when we die."



REV. P. T. KLAPP.

If you could hear Bro. Klapp sing that, you would no doubt think he meant it, as no doubt he would.

And if you could hear him pray—
"Come, Holy Spirit, Heavenly Dove,
With all thy quickening powers!
Kindle a flame of sacred love
In these cold hearts of ours"—

you would have no doubt that he means that, too.

Some of us may not be willing to follow him in his teaching, but if you will follow him wholeheartedly, he will get you somewhere in the Christian life and experience—and that is far better than standing still, even though you agree with your preacher in all he says.

The accompanying picture is one recently taken and fairly represents him in his vigor at the age of seventy-five years. May God give him many more real battles for the truth and as many glorious victories for the cross!

RELIGIOUS ACTIVITIES BUILDING ASSURED.

An additional gift of $50,000 on the Elon rebuilding program to assure the erection of the religious activities building has just been announced here through the president's office. The gift of this building is anonymous.

The religious activities building is the fifth building in the Greater Elon program, and completes the present plans. This structure will provide space for all the religious activities of the campus, as well as the community, and will be especially designed to meet the needs of present-day religious education. A center of religious activities has been the growing need of a college in the past few years, especially in a denominational school, and the erection of such a building on the Elon campus promises great things for the future. The students are especially appreciative of this provision.

"College Day" was held in the Elon Christian Church here yesterday, and announcement of this generous gift was made at that time.

The Alamance hall, the first and largest of the five-group of buildings, which takes the place of the burned administration building, is nearing completion and will be opened for the reception of students in September. Construction on the remaining four buildings will cover a period of a year.

3,000 THE CHRISTIAN SUN. 9,000

There are between 8,000 and 10,000 families represented in the Southern Christian Convention, which means if a copy of THE CHRISTIAN SUN is placed in each family, a possible subscription list of 9,000 copies. There are now circulated approximately 3,000 copies, or about one-third of our Church families are reached. Hence, there should be added to the list 6,000 new subscribers in order to have the Church paper placed in every family.

Now, the great personal effort required to do this must be rewarded. To compensate this labor, if premiums are given, it will take 20 automobiles, or 40 radio machines, or 50 to 60 talking machines, or 90 to 100 typewriters, or 200 to 300 watches, etc. Don't you think you will have a good opportunity to secure one of these prizes?

But you need not confine your solicitations to your Church alone. You have friends in other denominations who will gladly assist you by giving a subscription. Make your appeal in a straightforward manner. True men and women are interested in the success of their friends and will lend a helping hand.

PREMIUMS GIVEN FOR NEW SUBSCRIPTIONS.

The subscription price of THE SUN, recently reduced, is now $2.00 per year—two six-month subscriptions at $1.00 each count as one year. One person may take as many as he may wish for himself or for others. Those in arrears should pay up and assist the solicitor by taking an advanced subscription.

SCHEDULE.

1. To one securing 350 Subscriptions, a Ford Touring Car will be given ($298.00 f. o. b. factory).
2. To one securing 150 Subscriptions, one Radio Equipment—Westinghouse R-6 Set, complete with batteries, tubes, phone and aerial equipment, the price of which is $150.00.
3. To one securing 100 Subscriptions will be given one Victrola ($75.00), or cash prize of $50.00.
4. To one securing 75 Subscriptions, one Remington Portable Typewriter, with standard keyboard and case ($60.00 f. o. b. Richmond).
5. To one securing 30 Subscriptions, one Gentleman's or one Lady's Wrist Watch will be given, guaranteed by Jahnke Bros., Jewelers, of Richmond, Va. ($30.00).
6. For 25 Subscriptions, one Gentleman's or Lady's Watch ($25.00), likewise guaranteed by Jahnke Bros.
7. To one securing 20 Subscriptions, one Standard or International Dictionary will be given.

To all authorized solicitors will be paid 10 per cent commission on all renewals, and 20 per cent on all new subscriptions. Those receiving prizes will not be entitled to commission.

Two renewal subscriptions will be counted as one in determining the winners of prizes.

Send in your name and address and receive the necessary report blanks and receipt books.

The contest will close on October 31, 1923.

Remittances made on this campaign are to be net. Post-office money orders constitute a safe plan of remittance.

Golden Text: "He was a good man, and full of the Holy Spirit and of faith."—Acts 11:24.

Devotional Reading: Ps. 96:1-10.

Barnabas, the Pioneer Missionary.

"God is a kind Father," declared John Ruskin; "He sets us all in the places where He wishes us to be employed, and that employment is truly 'our Father's business.'" God entrusted much to Barnabas, the Great-Hearted, whose life-story is before thousands of Bible students today. And Barnabas played well his part in the great drama of life, as a pioneer in the great work of the Church, as one who did not fear to go afar to tell the story of the Christ. His life is a great one, and whether viewed in the light of the most prominent characteristics of his manhood or from the deeds of service and things really accomplished for the kingdom, Barnabas stands out as a heroic figure in the history of the Church, a man of a type still greatly needed in increasing numbers.

The facts known about his life are quickly told. His name was Joseph, but, like many others, when his life became linked up with Jesus Christ, his name was changed, and he became known as Barnabas, the "son of prophecy," or "the son of exhortation and consolation." He was a Levite of Cyprus. His was a generous nature, and he is first known for his gift to the apostles of his material wealth. (Acts 4:35, 37.) Barnabas was a man of broad sympathy. Stephen spoke the word "to none save only the Jews." When others began to speak to "the Greeks also," Barnabas was sent to investigate, and he was glad when he saw the work of the grace of God in their lives. The Scriptures praise Barnabas as a "good man, full of the Holy Spirit and of faith." With such a spirit, he went to find Saul of Tarsus, for he believed him to be the man to serve here at Antioch, and there "the disciples were first called Christians." Others could not understand Saul's change of heart. Barnabas believed in him, and brought to him a task for the kingdom. Men need to be trusted by their associates, when they are forgiven by God. Can we afford to shun those whom He has saved? For a whole year, Paul and Barnabas taught the people at Antioch. A week's meeting did not suffice. Day after day the principles of the Christian religion were explained and expounded until the disciples were ready to be called "Christians."

But the work could not stop at Antioch—that was just the starting point. And as they prayed and worshiped, the Lord called for Barnabas and Paul to go farther for Him. And they were consecrated as the first foreign missionaries. Many are the difficulties to be faced, and the dangers to be fronted by pioneers, but upon their faithful work is built future progress and human happiness. The call of sacrifice is one note in the call to every missionary, but with it comes the call of opportunity, the call of privilege, the call to be one of the world's truly great, serving not a family alone, but races; not a neighborhood, but a world. Hosts have followed in the footsteps of Barnabas and Paul, making their lives count for God and for gold in the highest way. To Cyprus and Pamphylia, Pisidia, Lycanonia and back to Antioch their journey went, and on to Jerusalem, everywhere preaching and teaching and winning many to the true faith. The "door of faith" was opened to many. They talked together of the goodness of God. Through the men who had "hazarded their lives for the name of our Lord Jesus Christ," the story was spread. And ever will it be thus. Lazy, indifferent lives do not tell the Gospel story. It takes men on fire for God—willing to serve and to be used. And the faithful members of the early Church made the work of Barnabas possible. Each, as he was able, helped to carry on the task. In the missionary program there is a place for every Christian. Some can go, most can give, all can pray, and thus is formed a triple combination which cannot be defeated.

Barnabas, the Great-Hearted, may be overshadowed in the minds of many by the great life of Paul. But to Barnabas was given the opportunity to give Paul a task, to be his co-worker. Barnabas was big enough to find another to do the task, and to help him to do it, without thought of self-praise or honor. His was too generous a nature to be jealous. Perhaps your greatest service to God may be to lead a boy or girl to His service, to direct another who can do the task better than you. But none the less is the service. Think of the good accomplished because Moody was won to Jesus Christ. The boy or girl to whom you make the Master appeal as a loving Friend may win hosts to Him. And "Andrew found his brother Peter." Suppose Peter had never been found! Barnabas, the Great-Hearted, was loyal to nation and kindred, a loyalty which led him to cling to John Mark, even though it meant to separate from Paul. Barnabas, the Great-Hearted, was free from narrowness and suspicion. His heart was large enough to reach to the distant corners of his world, and loving enough to claim every man for the service of his God. Barnabas encouraged other men to do their best. The spirit of encouragement is a great asset in a man's life. Many a discouraged soul may be turned to a new life by a cheering word.

Barnabas, the pioneer missionary, is the type of Christian needed today. He may not always believe as all others, but he will carry on the task. He may not receive highest honor, but he will rejoice in the success of the program of the kingdom. He will not shun the difficult task, whether it be at home or afar. He will be constantly striving to discover new workers, competent leaders, the very best to be found with alert minds, strong bodies, loving personalities, Christian spirits, to be leaders in Christian work. He will thus see the need of the world, which is the greatest need of the human soul—a close companionship wth God and love for His other children, wherever they may live.

"What care I for robe or stole?
It is the soul, it is the soul;
What for crown, or what for crest?
It is the heart within the breast;
It is the faith, it is the hope,
It is the struggle up the slope;
It is the brain and eye to see
One God and one humanity."

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC.

August 26, 1923.

Topic: "Lessons in the School of Prayer.—Matt. 18:19, 20, 21:18-22.

Thoughts for the Meeting.

Public worship brings Christians close together, bestows a blessing upon the individual, and is an effectual power in winning the world closer to God. Verse 19.

Prayer together is the condition of the promise that the request shall be granted. Two or three praying together, and then working together with God, can accomplish much for the kingdom. Verse 19.

A worship service must first and foremost be planned so that the Christ presence may be there. In the Sunday School and Christian Endeavor service, He should be there in the midst. Is He in your worship service. Verse 20.

Christ expects His followers to accomplish good, as He looked to the fig tree to bear fruit. Verse 19.

The Christian life which does not bear fruit withers away, even as the condemned tree. Spiritual exercise develops the Christian character, as physical exercise the body. Verse 19.

Faith and prayer are inseparably connected. Faith can accomplish much, be it faith in God, faith in mankind, or faith in self. Linked together, they form a strong chain. Verse 21.

"Believing"—there is the condition of the Christian victorious through prayer. God trusts us with great responsibilities in His work. He expects us to trust His word, to depend upon His promises, to believe in His power. Verse 22.

"I have much work to do today, so I will arise an hour earlier in order to have time for quiet prayer."—Martin Luther.

"More things are wrought by prayer than the world dreams of."—Alfred Tennyson.

Of far greater service than any array of learning or gifts of eloquence, more to be desired than gold and fine raiment, more to be sought than a great name, or apparent opportunities for large usefulness, or deeper significance than high intellectual attainment or power of popular influence is this gift—may God give it to each of us! the secret and sweetness of unceasing, prevailing, triumphant prayer for the kingdom of the Lord Jesus Christ."—Robert E. Speer.

Plans for the Meeting.

This is an opportunity for a prayer meeting. Sing hymns that will be prayers, as "Nearer, My God, to Thee" (sung softly to close a season of prayer), "My Faith Looks Up to Thee," "Sweet Hour of Prayer."

Ask each member to come with a Bible prayer; that is, a Bible verse that is a real prayer to respond to their name at the roll call. Keep a list of these prayers (the Psalms abound in them), and have your society learn the best to use in future worship services.

Have the following poem by Archbishop R. C. Trench recited:

"Lord, what a change within us one short hour
Spent in Thy presence will avail to make!
What heavy burdens from our bosoms take;
What parched grounds refresh, as with a shower!

We kneel, and all around us seems to lower;
We rise, and all the distant and the near Stands forth in sunny outline, brave and clear.
We kneel, how weak; We rise, how full of power!

Why, therefore, should we do ourselves this wrong,
Or others, that we are not always strong;
That we are ever overborne with care;
And we should ever weak or heartless be,
Anxious or troubled, when we in prayer,
And joy, and sertngth and courage are with Thee?"

Topics for Two-Minute Talks.—The place of prayer in our daily lives; the place of prayer in public service; prayer a privilege; God's response to prayer; Christian Endeavor, a training-school in prayer; prayer, a weapon against temptation.

Suggestive Questions for Discussion.—What differences have you seen between those who pray and others who do not? May work and prayer be separated successfully? What preparation should be made for public prayer? Is it possible to pray without ceasing? What are some hindrances to prayer?

RELIGIOUS EDUCATION DOINGS.

Elon Chautauqua and School of Methods. A week of worship, study and good-fellowship.

The Chautauqua registration for 1922 was 43; for 1923, 120—a splendid increase. Plans are already on foot for next year's session, when the registration should be at least 200.

The "happy hour" on the campus each evening from 7 to 8 o'clock was a popular part of the program. Songs, stories and special features were combined by the leader, Rev. J. F. Morgan, in such a way as to make the hour very enjoyable and profitable as well.

Especially fine was the spirit of good-fellowship which prevailed throughout the week. The Chautauqua folks had a good time together, and came to know each other very well through living together for seven days. Recreation, under the leadership of Miss Pattie Coghill, was enjoyed thoroughly.

The large evening audiences each night gave witness to the fact that the musical and literary programs were enjoyed by the people of the community. Both Greensboro and Raleigh were represented by good delegations during the week, and a large number of Burlington people attended the sessions regularly.

One hundred and thirty-seven certificates were presented to members of the Chautauqua who completed the regular courses of the School of Methods. The presentation was made at the Sunday morning Church service by Rev. W. T. Walters, D. D., of Richmond, Va., chairman of the Board of Religious Education.

Eighteen Christian Endeavorers took the expert endeavor course at the Chautauqua, and graduated as Christian Endeavor experts. Two members of the class—Miss Mae Bell, of Norfolk, and Rev. Sion M. Lynam, of Elon College—made a grade of 100 per cent on the examination, and the whole class did very fine work. The graduates are Rev. T. E. White, Windsor, Va.; Rev. S. L. Beougher, Graham; W. S. Johnson, New Hill; S. M. Lynam, Elon College; Mildred Walters, Burlington; Ruth Lee Boland, Burlington; Alberta Atkinson, Elon College; Mary and Annie Lou Brannock, Elon College; Marie Oldham, Elon College; Margaret Alston, Henderson; Mary Bagwell, Raleigh; W. E. White, Suffolk; Mrs. A. D. Brinkley, Suffolk; Esther Hall, Norfolk; Mae Bell, Norfolk; Geneva West, Norfolk; Sarah Norfleet Daughtry, Holland. Twelve passed the examination with a grade of 95 or more. Rev. J. F. Morgan was the instructor of this course.

Among the Elon College people who rendered exceptionally helpful service and made the week successful were Mrs. Janet Kirkland, who had charge of the dining-room; Miss Mary Graham Lawrence, who played the piano for all sessions, including those of the children's sessions; Rev. S. M. Lynam, who assisted in advertising and in office work; Rev. W. T. Scott, Rev. A. H. Hook, and O. C. Johnson in the dining-room, and in making folks comfortable, and all who took part on the program "Elon Night." Dr. T. C. Amick, in public, expressed the delight of the Elon College people in having the Chautauqua visit them annually, and extended a cordial welcome to all who will visit there in 1924.

All classes had a good attendance, and the interest was fine throughout. Every instructor deserves credit for course of instructive value and interesting content. The class in social service was taught by Dr. H. Shelton Smith, the new field worker of leadership training under the Board of Christian Education of the Christian Church.

One of the most pleasant features of the week was the Junior Chautauqua, which met daily in the graded school building, under the direction of Mrs. J. W. Patton and Mrs. Robert Harden. Bible stories, songs, and games made up the program. The juniors, under the direction of Miss Mary D. Atkinson and Miss Josephine Farmer, made a number of fine scrapbooks to be sent to the children in the mountains. A program showing something of the work done was given Saturday night of the Chautauqua.

One of the most encouraging features of the whole event was the number of times that the words "next year" were heard. As the hour of departure came, nearly every member of the Chautauqua family expressed the desire and intention of attending the 1924 session. A number asked to have certain rooms reserved for them. The Chautauqua and School of Methods is planned and carried out in the hope of giving all of our people an opportunity to secure a week's training in Bible and Christian service each summer at a very moderate cost. It is the hope of those in charge that its influence may grow until every Church may be represented, until every pastor may realize its possibilities, until many of our young people may take this opportunity of visiting "our" college, and many former students return here to renew friendships. "Next Year" is our slogan, and may it be a session larger, perhaps, but with the spirit of the "Chautauqua of 1923."

FUTURE OF EDUCATION IN THE UNITED STATES.

It is the consensus of opinion that the National Education Association, which has recently closed its convention in San Francisco, has a very definite and concrete policy, which it is putting before the American people with every force in its power. Summarized, it is working for adequate public school finance, rigid Americanization of the foreign-born, a new rural school policy, a drive against governmental parsimony in education, and the passage of the education bill.

The central features of a forward-looking program, covering at least the next decade of service, are:

(1) A comprehensive education program to aid in the assimilation of the foreign-born.

(2) Such a reorganization of school curricula as will adapt the schools better to new conditions and needs in national life.

(3) The reorganization and redirection of rural education, that the best of American farmers may be retained on the farms.

(4) A much more general equalization of both advantages and the burdens of education through a more extensive pooling of the costs for maintaining what is for the common good of all.

(5) Provision for the placing of an adequately educated and adequately trained teacher in every class-room in the United States; and

(6) The nationalizing of education in the minds of our people, with some intelligent form of national aid in school support to insure a better equalization of both the advantages and the burdens of education as between the States.

A GOOD SHORT SERMON.

"And now abideth faith, hope, love, these three; but the greatest of these is love."

Few, if any, except the great Teacher Himself, for "never man spake like this man," could say more with fewer words than the apostle to the Gentiles. The psalmist said, "The heavens declare the glory of God; and the firmament sheweth His handiwork; day unto day uttereth speech, and night unto night sheweth knowledge."

If we look into the northern heavens on a bright, clear night, we see one star greater than all the others—the North Star—"for one star differeth from another in glory"—apparently fixed, immovable, which we designate as love. We also see the Pleiades—the seven stars—moving in their vast orbit around it, but always pointing with unerring accuracy to it; these we name the seven virtues spoken of by St. Peter, and placing the scaling ladder upon the sure and safe foundation of "faith, without which it is impossible to please God," and "giving all diligence" we add to this faith virtue; a clean life, and to virtue knowledge, a wider and deeper comprehension of the wonderful gifts of our Heavenly Father; and to knowledge temperance, a proper and well-defined use of all the blessings granted unto us; and to temperance, patience, "by which we possess our souls"; and to patience godliness—God-likeness; for "beloved, now are we the sons of God, and it doth not yet appear what we shall be; we know that when He shall appear we shall be like Him; for we shall see Him as He is"; and "to godliness kindness," for "he that loveth not his brother whom he hath seen, how can he love God whom he hath not seen?" and to brotherly kindness love, the crown jewel, for "God is Love."

Having made these "additions," we are constrained again to exclaim with the psalmist, "The heavens declare the glory of God and the firmament sheweth His handiwork, day unto day uttereth speech, and night unto night sheweth knowledge; there is no speech nor language wherein their voice is not heard, their line is gone out through all the earth and their words to the end of the world."—T. L. Rawley.

Christian Orphanage

VISITORS AT THE ORPHANAGE.

DEAR FRIENDS:

It was a very great pleasure to the management of the Christian Orphanage to have so many visitors during the Chautauqua. We are always glad to have visitors. We find that the more we can get people to visit the orphanage, the more they become interested. We hope all members of the Chautauqua visited the orphanage while there. We had one visitor who went through the buildings, and after we had shown him through, he handed us a ten-dollar bill, saying he wanted to invest that much. I had one of the little girls to sing for him, and he then said he wanted to invest five dollars more. We can write about the orphanage, we can visit the Churches and talk about it, but there is nothing more interesting than people coming to see for themselves. We are glad to have people to come and inspect the orphanage and see what an opportunity the Church has to do a great work, and in most cases they go away more interested than when they came.

We know, in some sections, the wheat crop is good this year. It is also low in price. It takes quite a lot of flour to feed one hundred children. They have three meals each day. Did it ever occur to you that when they ask for bread that it is possible for you to help supply that bread? One barrel of flour would not cost you very much, but if fifty people would ship us a barrel, what a burden it would lift from our shoulders. The orphanage farm does not produce wheat very well, and we have most of our flour to buy. Help us to give the children bread.

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON,
Superintendent.

THE DEATH OF PRESIDENT HARDING.

The country was greatly shocked on the morning of August 3rd to read in the papers that President Harding was dead. He died suddenly in the Palace Hotel, in San Francisco, Calif., on Thursday night, August 2nd. He had been sick for several days, but Thursday had been his best day since the sickness came on. Mrs. Harding was sitting by his bedside, reading to him. She hesitated for a moment, and he said: "That is good; read on," and just then she saw his body tremble, and he was—gone in a moment. They called it apoplexy that took his life, and we suppose it was; but more than likely the apoplexy was induced by double bronchial pneumonia, which stopped the circulation quickly. Dr. Geo. W. Watson, of Elon College, and a man of long and successful practice, said on Thursday morning, when he read the bulletins giving Mr. Harding's condition, that he could not live. He gave as his reason for so saying the fact that he had double bronchial pneumonia, and he said, in his long practice, that he had rarely, if ever, known a man of Mr. Harding's age to get well when so afflicted, and his prediction was verified in less than twenty-four hours. The nation mourns. Indeed, we have not heard of an individual who was not full of sympathy for the dead President and his heroic and faithful wife, whose devotion to her husband has commanded the attention and highest respect all over the civilized world; and also for his aged father, Dr. Geo. T. Harding.

It is an honor to the dead President that he has attracted wide attention by his kindness and gentleness, especially during the last few months of his life. He was filling a place in the nation where his duties were not only exacting, but most trying, and yet, with his life thus burdened, he showed great kindness and rare gentleness. He was a member of the Baptist Church, and showed many Christian traits in his life as the chief executive of the great nation whose President he was. Another thing that has impressed us is the fact that his political opponents, now that he is dead, speak of him in the kindest manner. Some years ago a political leader saw one of his opponents fall by the hand of death, and when some one asked him what he had to say, he said: "Nothing, for when God lays His hand on a man, I take mine off." Well said, and better done, for when the Lord calls one into His presence, it is time for mortals to take hands off, so far as criticism is concerned. It has been gratifying to see the men who opposed the President, politically, now that he is dead and cannot speak for himself, take their hands off and stop criticism. It is a fine thing to be great in a good way, but it is better to be good in true goodness, for true goodness is true greatness.

Another pathetic incident comes to us from Marion, Ohio, where the President lived in the days before he became President. When the body arrived, his father was heard to say: "My boy, my boy; it is all like a dream to me; it seems it can't be true"! No doubt that it was hard for the dear old father of this distinguished son to see his boy go from the presidency to the grave. It is a singular coincident that Mr. Harding should have died in the city where he was nominated for the presidency. And, according to press reports, when Mr. Harding was nominated, the old father, in the love and simplicity of a father, said: "I am sorry they nominated Warren." Was this in any way prophetic of coming sorrow? Mr. Harding had made political enemies, but he certainly had made a multitude of friends. Just a few days before he died he wrote these words on one of the foremost questions of the day: "Armed warfare is abhorrent to the ideal civilization. Nations ought no more need to resort to force in the settlement of their disputes or differences than do men in this enlightened day. Out of this conviction, out of my belief in a penitent world, craving for agencies of peace, out of the inevitable presidential contact with the World War's havoc and devastation and the measureless sorrow which attended and has followed, I would be insensible to duty and violate all the sentiments of my heart and all my convictions if I failed to urge American support of the permanent court of international justice."

Noble spirit and the sentiment of a true Christian patriot. May God bless the memory and the life-work of this devoted man. Politically, we were not affiliated with Mr. Harding, but we honor the man for what he was in life and character.

DAVIS.

Ethel Louise Davis died on the 28th day of July, 1923. She was a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. W. Davis, of Wilbourn, N. C. Ethel was only sixteen years of age, a most beautiful and accomplished young girl. She was a member of Wake Chapel Christian Church, a devoted member of the Sunday School, charming in manner and altogether lovely in character.

But few girls are as universally loved as was she. This was at once seen in the very large congregation that attended the funeral services. For fifteen or twenty minutes two solid lines, one on either side of the coffin, passed by to take a last look, many with sobs and tears. The family was grief-stricken in an unusual way, while many of her special friends wept as if she had been of their own family.

She will be missed by her many friends as well as in her own home. She will be severely missed in Church and Sunday School, especially at the piano. She was laid to rest in the Wake Chapel Cemetery to wait the resurrection at the coming of our Lord. Dr. J. O. Atkinson assisted in the burial service.

May our Father's richest blessing rest on the bereaved family, and every one find a place in the mansion above, when there will be no more separation.

Whereas, we recognize in her death a great loss to our Church, Sunday School, and missionary society, and desiring to express our esteem and high regard for her memory; therefore, be it resolved:

First, That we bow in humble submission to the great Creator's will, remembering that our loss on earth has been our sister's gain in Heaven.

Second, That the members of her Sunday School class and W. W. band extend their heartfelt sympathy and sincere condolence to the bereaved family and friends.

NEESE.

Mrs. Mabel Cates Neese was born December 8, 1899, and died June 16, 1923, being 23 years 6 months and 8 days old. She was the oldest child of Mr. and Mrs. W. Luther Cates. On July 19, 1921, she was married to Mr. Dallas C. Neese, and her home was one of the happiest the writer has known. She was a faithful member of the Burlington Christian Church, and was very active in Christian service. Her death was a distinct loss not only to her home and the Church, but to the entire community. And while her years on earth were cut short, she lived during those years to great and noble ends and has gone out in splendid triumph and victory.

The funeral was held from the Church of which she was a member on Sunday afternoon at 5 o'clock, June 17th, and was conducted by the writer, her pastor, assisted by Rev. M. W. Buck, pastor of the First Baptist Church. The body was laid to rest in Pine Hill Cemetery beneath a bower of floral designs of unusual number and beauty, there to await the morning when the shadows shall flee away as the sun shall rise to shine forever.

Echoes from the Christian Endeavor Convention

By A. B. Kendall, D. D., Springfield Ohio.

It was a most enjoyable trip for me to the Christian Endeavor Convention at Des Moines, Iowa. So many pleasant memories thronged my mind as I sped over the road I had traveled so many times in the past, while I was pastor at Le Grand. And then the privilege that I enjoyed of stopping overnight and having a brief, though delightful, visit with the people of that village and Church where I served two years as pastor. There were some sad moments, as I learned of this one and that one I had known in the days gone by, who had passed into the great beyond and I should see them no more upon this earth. Then I could not help a feeling of sadness and loss as I stared at the vacant spot where once stood the brick structure which I knew as Palmer College. This feeling was soon displaced with the thought that Palmer had gone to a field of greater opportunity for service than it probably could ever have known in Le Grand. Then there came to me the thought, is it not just as true that those who have left this earthly sphere have gone to a land of more glorious opportunity for service, and should I not rejoice over their departure to that better land?

Leaving Le Grand, I soon found myself in a car filled with happy delegates en route for Des Moines. We sang Christian Endeavor songs and good old Gospel hymns and did various interesting things such as a group of happy Christian young people are capable of conjuring up to while away the time. Arrived at the Convention city, I was soon cognizant of the fact that in the twenty-two years since I had been there, Des Moines had been growing. Happy-faced guides were at the station to answer any question you might have to propound and direct you anywhere you wished to go in the city. Nothing had been spared on the part of the local committee to make the stay of the delegates delightful and the convention a grand success.

The officers and trustees of the United Society had their bodily wants most splendidly looked after at the Fort Des Moines Hotel.

I wish I possessed the skill to bring to you by the medium of the printed page the heart, the soul, the spirit of that great convention, but I know I am doomed to fail in any attempt to do this.

The music under the leadership of Prof. Augustine H. Smith, of Boston, Mass., and the great Christian Endeavor choir of 500 voices was most wonderfully inspiring. It surely was a foretaste of heaven to hear the singing of that great crowd of Christian young people that packed the great Coliseum from the bottom floor to the last gallery, as they sang the precious hymns of the Church.

I never heard finer addresses at any convention I ever attended.

Of course, you would expect something fine from such princes of platform and pulpit oratory as Wayne B. Wheeler, L.L. D., of Washington, D. C.; Bishop A. J. Carey, of Chicago; Rev. Lionel Fletcher, of London, England; Rev. James Kelly, Glasgow, Scotland; Hon. Simeon D. Fess, of Ohio; Hugh S. Magill, Chicago, Ill., general secretary International Sunday School Council of Religious Education; Dan Poling, of Boston, Mass.; William Jennings Bryan, of Miami, Fla.

The messages were inspirational, educational, practical, timely.

One of the most helpful features of this convention was the breaking up of the convention into different institutes during the forenoon sessions for the privilege of study, under expert leaders, in whatever phase of Christian Endeavor work you were most interested.

The conference the writer attended was the one on the theme "Christian Endeavor in the Church's Program of Religious Education," conducted by Mr. Walter D. Howell, field representative, Presbyterian Church, department of religious education.

I wish I might give you the gist of this remarkable conference, but space will not permit. Some time perhaps I may reincarnate some of the thoughts in an article.

I did not get the exact number of registered delegates in attendance, but early in the convention it was reported that there were over 12,000 registered at that time. I have no doubt there was 15,000 registered delegates before the convention closed.

As an answer to those who believe Christian Endeavor to be moribund and decadent, Secretary Gates reported the last biennium as the most remarkable biennium in the history of the organization in the growth of new societies.

The great parade found thousands of earnest Endeavorers in line Saturday afternoon, in spite of the intense heat. There were many very striking and beautiful costumes. The different State delegations marched together and sang their beautiful State songs or joined in singing some of the beautiful hymns of the Church. It was a very inspiring sight to see this splendid army of young lives, representing such unmeasured and immeasurable possibilities for spiritual service to the world, marching forth like crusaders of old under the banner of Christ and the Church.

Sunday afternoon and evening were big days at the convention. At the afternoon service, when William Jennings Bryan spoke, it was estimated that 35,000 people heard that remarkable address at the Fair Grounds. The Des Moines committee, at considerable expense, had installed the magnavox used by our late lamented President Harding at his inaugural, so that people three squares away could hear the addresses distinctly.

Of course, Dr. F. E. Clark and Mrs. Clark were present and lent inspiration to the services by their presence as well as by their addresses.

The theme of Dr. Clark's annual address was, "Friends of Christ." The motto for the next biennium based on his theme was, "Ye are my friends if ye do whatsoever I command you."

He treated this theme under three heads: "Friends of Christ in the Church," "Friends of Christ in the Society," "Friends of Christ in the World."

He then divided and subdivided his address as follows:

In the Church.—1. Loyalty to the Church: (a) Increase attendance at Church services; (b) help the pastor as he may suggest. 2. Graded Christian Endeavor.—(a) Organize junior, intermediate and other grades of Christian Endeavor; (b) organize an alumni council. 3. Co-operation with other Church organizations.—(a) Serve the Sunday School and other organizations; (b) co-operate in a unified Church program. 4. Wider Church fellowship.—(a) Support denominational enterprises; (b) co-operate in interdenominational Christian Endeavor activities.

In the Society: 1. Recruiting for Christ.—(a) Maintain helpful and attractive Christian Endeavor prayer meetings; (b) seek to bring every member to Christ. 2. Faithfulness to Christian Endeavor ideals.—(a) Maintain high standards of active membership; (b) promote daily prayer and Bible reading. 3. Leadership training.—(a) Conduct one or more study classes; (b) present opportunities for life service. 4. Training through service.—(a) Give definite work to every member; (b) provide a worth-while social program.

In the world: 1. World evangelism.—(a) Win young people to the community for Christ; (b) pray, give and work for home and foreign missions. 2. Community service.—(a) Join in a worth-while recreation program; (b) minister to neglected groups. 3. Christian citizenship.—(a) Educate and agitate for law and order; (b) promote Christian principles in home, business and industry. 4. International, interdenominational, inter-racial friendship.—(a) Work for a friendly association of nations; (b) practice good will among races and denominations.

This is the program laid down for the next two years for the societies.

The denominational rallies were held Saturday forenoon. Our rally was held in the auditorium of the Central Church of Christ. There were between 150 and 160 present, representing many States. The members of the Palmer College Society had reason to be proud of their society, for it had, if memory serves me right, twenty-four members present.

At this rally the following program was given: Rev. J. E. Kauffman, Madrid, Iowa, spoke on the subject, "Vital Evangelism for Our Young People." It was a fine address. Dr. F. E. Coffin gave an address on the subject, "Our Part in the New Christian Education Program of Our Church." It is needless to say that all were highly pleased with this address. Dr. L. E. Follansbee, Des Moines, Iowa, spoke in his inimitable way on the theme, "Building the Young Life Into the Church." The writer spoke on "A Look Ahead." Rev. Mrs. Millholland delighted us with a reading. A Christian Endeavor hymn, composed by the writer of this article for the occasion, was sung. Upon vote of those present, this hymn was adopted as the denominational Christian Endeavor hymn.

Many pronounced this the best rally held by our denomination at an international convention.

The twenty-ninth Christian Endeavor Convention has become history, but I feel sure that it will continue to make history for years to come.

NOTES-PERSONALS

Rev. P. H. Fleming, D. D., is now in a meeting at Haw River. Rev. P. T. Klapp is assisting him.

Rev. L. E. Smith, D. D., hopes to get into the new Church in Norfolk, Va., in October. That is rapid work.

Rev. J. O. Atkinson, D. D., is attending the Virginia Valley Central Conference. We wish them a fine session of that fine old body of believers.

Rev. A. W. Andes, Harrisonburg, Va., is secretary of the Virginia Valley Central Conference. We wish he may send us a report of the doings of that body as soon as at all convenient.

Dr. W. P. Lawrence, of Elon College, spent last second Sunday with the Henderson, N. C., Church, giving them assistance in holding Elon College Day. He reported a good attendance and good services.

We are glad to announce that Rev. G. D. Eastes, of Portsmouth, Va., is recovering from a long and serious sickness. It is hoped that he will soon be able to take a pastorate, and be active in the work again.

We are sorry to hear that Rev. W. L. Wells has been sick for several weeks, but he is now gaining and hopes soon to be well. His post-office address is Portsmouth, Va., where he is doing a good work, as we trust.

Rev. W. T. Walters is hoping soon to occupy the new Christian Church in Richmond, Va. That will be a glad day of our Richmond friends. We congratulate Dr. Walters on his good success in getting to occupy the new Church so soon.

These warm days of the summer of 1923 are fast passing away. Do you realize that it is even now true that we are almost within the dawn of another winter. Before we realize it, the winter will be here, and most likely not find us ready for it.

We understand that the Christian Church at Henderson, N. C., has called to its pastorate the Rev. C. E. Gerringer, of Brown's Summit, N. C. We do not yet know if he has accepted the call. If he shall accept we wish for him great success in building up the good work at that place.

Rev. H. E. Rountree, who is a chaplain in the United States Navy, is now located at Portsmouth, Va. He has consented to conduct a weekly department in THE SUN, to be known as The Family Altar. By so doing, we hope to help in establishing a family altar in many homes. It is one of the needs of present-day homes.

Rev. W. C. Wicker, D. D., spent the second Sunday in August with Rev. J. Lee Johnson, of Wake County, N. C., giving him assistance in celebrating Elon College Day. He had good congregations at both Piney Plains and Wentworth, the two Churches in which college day was celebrated that day. Dr. Wicker thought the work in Bro. Johnson's charge was doing well.

One of our excellent exchanges makes a very wise remark when it says: "The kind of religion one lives in the home determines the effectiveness of one's religion in public. The only real Christian is the one who is a Christian in the home." Let us have more Christians in the home, for when we have them in the home, we shall also have them in the community and in public service.

Some time ago a most significant remark was made by one preacher to another. A young man had just delivered a fine sermon, and the people crowded about him at the close of the service, telling him of what a fine effort he had made, and of course the young man was feeling fine as he thought of what a splendid impression he had made, but when he reached the sidewalk he came face to face with an old minister of the Gospel. The old man had a pleading look in the face, and as his eyes met the eyes of the young man, the old man said, with much concern and tenderness: "Tell them, man; tell them about their sins." Ah, too often the secret of one's popularity is the fact that the preacher soft-pedals the subject of sin. That may get for him popularity on earth, but it will not get it for him in heaven.

Here is some good suggestions and splendid advice. It is from the Christian Advocate (Nashville): "The devil never perpetrated a greater falsehood than the claim that the Christian religion makes people 'narrow' and limits them in their success in life. There are even those who assert that religion takes the joy out of life. A characteristic of the Christian man is that he is a happier man than the non-believer, and that he resists being limited in his undertakings. The Christian man knows that it is possible for him to do bigger and better things through Christ than he could do without faith in Christ. Christians launch out into the deep and let down their nets for a draft. When the eyes of the servant of the prophet of old were opened, he saw the angels of the Lord encamped round about them to deliver them and to confound their enemies. Lord, open our eyes, and may we realize every day that we can do all things that are required of us through Christ, who strengthens all who trust in Him!"

Now and then we get most pleasant surprises. It was so one day recently, when we saw a stranger approaching the door to our office. We met him at the door, not knowing who it might be, but just as he spoke we recognized an old friend, one we had not seen in many years. He had grown so portly that it was with difficulty we could decide just who he might be, but just then there was something about the expression on his face that told us he was Bro. D. J. Mood, Smithfield, Va. It was about the year 1890-1 that we first met him at Marion, Ind. We speedily engaged him as foreman of THE CHRISTIAN SUN and he came South and gave to the paper several years' good work. Later he joined Rev. W. G. Clements as a partner, and together they published THE SUN for several years. Later he sold his interest in the paper and went into the grocery business at Smithfield, where he did well, but he had "eaten a herring" in the printing business and so he had to return to his first love. He now owns and operates a job printing establishment. We were glad to meet him again and to see him looking so well. Only a little while ago he was bereft of Mrs. Mood, the little Southern lady who became his life companion. He now has an only child, a daughter, who has grown to young womanhood and is much like her departed mother. Come again, Bro. Mood, and come to stay longer.

Do these lines strike you as getting close to your own life? They are from a gifted man, and it will well repay you to think of the meaning of the words, as you follow the lines. Surely the warning is timely, and it will not only do good for the vainest of us to stop and think, but it will do good for the humblest of us all to read them over thoughtfully, that we may see if they do get hold of us in any shortcoming which may have fallen to us. The writer of these timely words says: "Pride and conceit! What a temptation it is for people who succeed, even for those who succeed in religious work and gain recognition and honor at the hands of their fellows, to yield to these deadly sins! The higher a man climbs, the more anxious is the tempter to bring about his downfall. If a man gets to where he does not watch and pray constantly, he is in great danger. Genuine humility, how beautiful!"

An old institution under a new name is the same institution. Changing the name only seems to dress it up a bit, for it is the same in all of its essentials. That is the way we feel about the social gospel. In so far as it is the gospel at all, it is the same old gospel, and well enlisted in the cause of God. We must admit that we do see one difference. The old-time gospel was chiefly engaged in warning people of their sins and trying to lead people to Jesus Christ for salvation. The social gospel seems always to have something else to deal with rather than the salvation of the lost. The social gospel nearly always has some new-fangled notion which it seeks to bring to the front. We believe, however, it is still true that if we get a man saved truly from his sins, we can then get him to do almost anything else that the Lord wants him to do, and for which he is fitted physically, mentally and spiritually. The most important thing in every man's life is to get him truly saved. You can easily get a man's name put on the Church roll, but to get his name registered in heaven—ah! that is the task, the most important task, in the moral vineyard. Get him truly saved, and then you can get him to do and dare for the Lord.

THE SUN readers well remember, at least many of them do, the late visit of Rev. Francis E. Clark to North Carolina, when he delivered last May the baccalaureate sermon before the graduating class of Elon College, and also spoke before the Christian Endeavor Convention at Graham. Dr. Clark's position as president of the World's Christian Endeavor Societies commands attention. We have published in THE CHRISTIAN SUN from time to time various contributions from the pen of Mr. William Thornton Whitsett. Dr. Whitsett is also the author of a book of poems which has received high praise from various leading men in the world of letters. It is called "Saber and Song." Referring to this book, Dr. Clark says: "I have found great pleasure in reading the poems and admire them thoroughly. Dr. Whitsett has struck a note which needs emphasis in these days. I appreciate especially "The Ode to Expression," and have realized the truth of the dream that burns his brain, and only wish that in trying to express my own dreams I had been more articulate. There are so many poems in the book that I enjoyed, it seems invidious to pick out any. They are all good. Dr. Whitsett, the author of these poems, is a grandson of the late Austin Whitsett, who was years ago well known as one of the faithful fathers of New Providence Christian Church, Graham, N. C., and he is a nephew by marriage of the late Rev. Jeremiah W. Holt, the life-long worker for the cause of temperance.

"I am the rose of Sharon, and the lily of the valleys."—Songs of Solomon 2:1

No. 3.

"The more Thy glories strike my eyes,
The humbler I shall lie."

Self-laudation is generally regarded, to say the least, as in very poor taste. When a person talks much of self, especially by way of commending one's own character and conduct, sensible people become disgusted. Even the Scriptures recognize this fault when it says: "Let another praise thee and not thine own mouth; a stranger, and not thine own lips."—Prov. 27:2.

In the text, contrary to custom, the maiden who is so prominent in the Song of Solomon, commends her own character and beauty in a high degree. She speaks of herself as the Rose of Sharon and the lily of the valleys. The manner in which she thus compares herself leaves the impression that the rose and the lily were of rare excellence and very highly regarded by the people. She leaves us to infer that her own character was as sweet and bautiful as the rose and the lily, and to that extent she was highly commending herself, the sweetness and beauty of her own life. According to modern ideas, we would not expect a modest woman to talk of her own loveliness and beauty.

It may be interesting, as well as instructive, to find out, if we may, just why this maiden was so free to express herself as to her own personal attractions. Why did she compare herself to the Rose of Sharon and to the lily of the valleys? How could true modesty and genuine humility make such comparisons between herself and some of nature's beauties? The answer to this question will bring us to a most interesting study of human character under the touch of God.

Let us not forget that this maiden is a type of the Church of Christ, while the Bridegroom himself is a type of Christ. As such, their lives, their character, their service and their fruitage, seem to outrival Solomon himself. So when she speaks of herself as the Rose of Sharon and the lily of the valleys, and therefore as sweet and beautiful, she is really complimenting the bridegroom, and not herself. When she speaks of herself, as in chapter 1:5, she shows her own appreciation of the fact that she was lacking in beauty. Hear her, as she says:

"I am black, look not upon me." Some have thought from this language that she was a negro. That is a mistake, as she herself explains in verse 6, where she makes it clear that her blackness was merely sunburn. She said she was black because the sun had looked upon her. It, therefore, seem clear that her reference to herself was not meant as self-praise, but rather as a tribute of praise to the bridegroom. In this particular, she becomes a beautiful type of the Church of Christ, for the beauty and loveliness of which she speaks were not the outgrowth of her own life, but of the Christ life in her. She was rejoicing not in her own, or in vain, beauty, but in the beauty which her bridegroom had bestowed upon her. As indicating the correctness of this thought, we may turn to Gal. 2:20, where Paul said: "Nevertheless, I live; yet not I, but Christ liveth in me, and the life which I now live in the flesh, I live by the faith of the Son of God, who loved me and gave Himself for me."

So it is with the real Christian. When he says rare and rich things of his own life, he is only paying tribute to his Lord and Master, the Bridegroom of his soul, who has done so much for him in the redemption which he has wrought in bringing him back to life from sin and ruin. He has made us what we are, and when we talk of our Christian experience, we pay tribute to Him who has redeemed us. It is not, therefore, immodest in this maiden to compare herself to the Rose of Sharon and the lily of the valleys, and it is not, because she is not boasting of her own natural beauty, but she refers to the beauty and loveliness of character which have become hers through His gifts to her. The psalmist prayed: "Let the beauty of the Lord our God be upon us." Even so, the beauty of the Lord our God in Christ rests upon His people. It is the gift of God to His people, and having received this beauty, this divine likeness to Himself, it is not immodest to refer to it, and thereby to honor Him with the thought of a transformed life. Thus, instead of praising herself, her own character and life, she is praising Him who has implanted His likeness in her personality. This is no fancy picture. It is true to the life of the people of God. Without Him, she was black, but with Him, shining out in her life, she was the Rose of Sharon and the lily of the valleys. What is usually construed to be her lack of modesty, is in fact her song of praise to Him for her likeness to Himself.

Now, may we study the points of excellence in the life of this maiden as indicating to us the particulars in which the Church is to reach her highest obtainments and attainments in Christ:

I. In the Humility of Mind and Heart.

Genuine humility is beauty. A puffed-up beauty is unknown. The sweetness of the Rose of Sharon and the beauty of the lily of the valleys are proverbial throughout all Christendom, and yet they both grew in lowly places and without the helping hand of the high and lofty. How like the Church of Christ! Lively in life, beautiful in character, and sweet in holy influences. She gives all the praise for her transformed life to the Christ who has redeemed her and made her what she is.

II. Purity of Character and Thought.

Did you ever observe how pure and beautiful is everything as it comes from the hand of God? take the rose. How lovely, how pure and beautiful! Take the lily as it comes up from the mud and dirt, and yet how pure and beautiful it is. The mud and dirt in which it was given existence did not soil its beauty or destroy its sweetness. It had its birth in a mudhole, but as it came forth it left its unhallowed surroundings behind, and at once assumed its sweetness and beauty. How like the Church of Christ. So fragrant, so lovely, and so beautiful, but living in a world of sin. That is the divine ideal for the Church. When I remember that every man who has this hope of life in Christ purifieth himself even as Christ is pure, then I see so many who are members of the visible Church, who live in sin and who seem to glory in the things of the flesh, do they realize that this conduct is saying to the world: "This is the kind of a Christ I am showing to the world? It is my ideal of the divine character." That tells an awful story and shows you unworthy of a place in the great heart of God.

III. The Fragrance of the Rose and the beauty of the Lily are the Essentials of their Characters.

The same is true of the Church of Christ. These are but types of the holy influences which continually flow out from the true Church. A lady on an outing pinned a sprig of sweet brier on her bosom. She lost sight of the circumstances, but in the evening in her room she detected a delightful odor, but could not account for it. After a while she found, tucked away in her clothing, the sprig of sweet brier which she had placed there in the morning. It had but one thing to do, and that was to give out its sweetness for the pleasure of any who might come near. That is the business of the Church of Christ, to give out the fragrance of holy living through Christ. When God makes a thing beautiful and fragrant it is but an expression of His own character, and that character He seeks to impart to His people.

IV. Love, Spiritual Beauty and Faithfulness in Service are the Mountain Peaks of Christian Experience.

The gem of Christian character is real piety—true devotion to God. There are many beautiful traits in human character, but the one which rises high, above all others, is true devotion to God. Shall the Rose of Sharon and the lily of the valleys more honor God in serving their purposes than the noblest work of God—man? The flowers are true to the mission God gave them, filling the atmosphere with their sweetness, and may we not as men and women, do likewise, and crown Him Lord of all?

V. Christian Character is the Gift of God, but its Sweetness and Beauty are often Developed under Suffering.

Happiness is not the end of life, but character is, and out of real character comes the highest happiness. Would it not be wonderful if we all should appreciate this fact and then maintain character, Christian character, in our daily living? That would make us more like Him and prepare us to see Him as He is, and so find our likeness to Him. Let us not forget that the Christian is a man in Christ and Christ in him. This brings the peace of God which passeth all understanding. Here we rest in His love.

PORTSMOUTH, VA.

In the early spring we had in mind and had planned to put on a special program to forward the work of our Portsmouth Church, but on account of illness of myself and entire family, we have been unable to carry out our plans, and consequently for the past few months our work here has not made very much progress. The writer has been unable to preach since May, having been in the hospital two different times. I am thankful to say that I am better now, and I think if I have no setback I will soon be able to take up my pastoral duties again.

During my illness the Church has been fortunate in having some one to supply for them every Sunday. Next Sunday, August 12th, Bro. J. H. Blanchard will conduct the morning service, and Rev. H. E. Rountree the evening service. During the illness of myself and family, the Church members and friends were most beautiful to us, and we are so grateful to them for every kindness shown us.

A few nights ago there came to our home a crowd of our beloved members, and they surprised us most pleasantly when they began to unload their burdens in our pantry. They brought sugar, flour, canned goods, butter, cereals, vegetables, chickens and many other food articles, too numerous to mention. At a time like this, it is hard to find words that will just express one's feeling of gratitude; however, we tried to express our deep appreciation of being so generously remembered, and what we failed to express in words we shall try to express in loving service.

DOES THE POSITION OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH JUSTIFY THE CHARGE?

It was and is to be expected that every inch of the territory occupied by the Christian Church, theologically speaking, will be contested by men and women who hold other theological views. That we should be charged with views that are not orthodox is not a surprise, and usually these charges need not disturb us as a people, not even to the point of answering them, except as the truth may make it necessary. However, we have some questions which it seems to us ought to be answered, and because they ought to be answered we are here and now undertaking the task for the information of such as may inquire, but especially for the protection of the Christian Church against the inroads of error.

Question 1.—Is it true that the Christian Church accords to every member the right of individual interpretation?

Answer.—Yes, it is true, if properly understood. Like most other statements, it may be itself misinterpreted and misapplied, and then it would not be true in the light so given.

Question 2.—Then, what do you mean by such a statement? Do you mean that the Bible must be changed to suit the various interpretations which may be given to its many teachings?

Answer.—No, we do not mean that at all. We simply mean that so far as human opinions are concerned, every one may entertain his own opinion of what the Scriptures teach, as against the opinion of some other man; but not as against the plain teachings of the Bible. What the Bible teaches is the sure foundation of the Christian Church. This privilege also pertains to the commandments of men as set forth in human creeds. We hold that so far as human opinions are concerned, one man has as much right to his view as another. So it is plain that this principle does not refer to any right to change the Word of God to suit the opinions of men. In the field of human opinions, each man has equal rights, but in the field of Bible statements no one has a right to drop out any portion of the Bible because his opinion runs to the contrary.

Question 3.—But are you quite sure that you are right as to the limits of the question? Does the right of private judgment and individual interpretation only have the right of way in the field of human opinion?

Answer.—Yes, I am surely right as to that matter, and if you will bear with me a few minutes I will prove it to you. The proof is historical rather than theological. By that I mean that the history of our Christian Church is sufficient proof on that point.

In the days when James O'Kelly and Rice Haggard led in a struggle which resulted in the organization of the Christian Church there was no question as to the authority of the Bible in matters of religion, but there was a great struggle on among the many denominations as to the authority of human opinions in religion. This struggle had developed into a general fight among the denominations, one man contending for one view and another for another view. The Christian Church in its beginning took the ground that this fight was all wrong, and that each individual should be allowed to hold his own individual opinions without any contest whatever, so far as the opinions of men were concerned. Now, to make sure that we are right in this matter, the third cardinal principle of the Christian Church reads as follows:

The Holy Bible, or the Scriptures of the Old and New Testaments, is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.

This statement rests upon 2 Tim. 3:16, 17, and Rev. 22:18, 19, and these facts together put the question of the reliability of the Bible beyond all question and shows, as plain as language can show it, that any idea of any change in the Bible was not even thought of by our people, and so any purpose to reject this or that portion of the Bible was not in any sense contemplated in the beginning of the movement. They sought to deal with the disturbed condition of the Church at large on account of the matter, not of Bible statements, but of individual interpretation as to the right or wrong of human opinions, as set forth in human creeds. We, therefore, feel assured of the correct attitude we hold as to the Christian Church in this matter.

Question 4.—You may be correct as to the meaning of the right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience in individual interpretation, but only a little while ago I saw a statement from a leading man among your people to the effect that the Christian Church is broad enough in its views to welcome to its ranks the modernist. Now, as you know, the greater number of the modernists claim the right of private interpretation of the Scriptures, and by that is meant the right of an individual to accept or reject any part of the Scriptures he may please. Now, which shall I believe, your statement as to the meaning of individual interpretation or the statement of this other party, who claims that the Christian Church is broad enough to receive these modernists, who accept or reject any part of the Bible as their own mind may dictate? I am puzzled as to whose declaration as to the meaning of this matter I shall accept as truth. Please help me out of this situation.

Answer.—If you doubt the truth of our position, which is here involved, I suggest that you investigate the history of our people and see if what I have told you as to the meaning of the right of private judgment and individual interpretation is not borne out by the facts in our early history. Of course, I can readily guess that the man after whom you were reading when you saw that statement as to the Christian Church being broad enough to accept the modernists as members and ministers of our Church, that the man so writing was himself a modernist, and so of course he would naturally try to shape the thought to suit his pet ideas, but as a matter of fact, we know he is in the wrong in making such a claim, for when the fathers gave shape to that thought, only infidels were opposed to the Bible, and there was no question at all among the people of God as to the reliability and authority of the Book—the Work of God. It, therefore, would seem clear that his interpretation of the attitude of the Christian Church, as to this matter, is forced, and not an expression of the real thought, purpose and intention of our people in giving expression to these great principles. I wish to say, as I understand these principles, the man who rejects any part of the Holy Bible as he may please will find the Christian Church not broad enough to accept him and his followers as members and ministers of the Church. I do not doubt but that you will find some such men among us, as you will in practically all the denominations, but they are not on the true platform of the Christian Church, and cannot be, since the very Book they propose to accept or reject as they may please is the rule of faith and practice of the Christian Church. If we repudiate our own Book of rules, then but one thing can follow, and that is the anarchy of the Church, and we believe that the great body of our people, if the test should come, would stand by the Book—the Word of God.

Before my position can be overthrown, the early history of the Christian Church must be revolutionized and be headed in another direction, and according to my best judgment, it will take more than a modernist to do such a work among our people.

As we see it, and as we believe, history will establish the facts, the Christian Church is broad enough to take to its fellowship any true child of God, but we do not believe it is broad enough to accept as members or ministers the men who repudiate any part of the Holy Bible. No, we cannot do that, and if that seems too narrow for our modernist friends, we can only say we are that narrow—narrow enough to stand true to the Bible as the inspired Word of God.

CHRISTIAN NATIONS URGED TO "TRY CHISTIANITY".

Kings, dictators, presidents and premiers—rulers of fifty-seven nations—are besought by a conference of 2,000 "plain people" to try Christianity as a means against war. Every other agency known to man has been put to the test, and failure has marked them all. War splotches nearly every page of history, and, as if the ruin of the "war to end war" were not sufficient for generations to come, every footfall in Europe today sounds to qualified observers like the rumble of another approaching battle. While the lull, as many regard it, is on, the International Conference on Christian Citizenship, a gathering of delegates from all parts of the United States and scores of foreign countries lately held at Winona Lake, Ind., appeals to the heads of their governments to try Christianity, which George Bernard Shaw says has never yet been tried. The appeal was sent by cable to the European crowned heads and chief executives, and by mail to the others. The suggestion, remarks the Troy Record, "is a singularly wise one, especially in view of the fact that every other known method has failed." In spite of the League of Nations and the World Court and the Washington Armament Limitation Conference, we are told, there is no assurance that war is a horror of the past. "On the contrary, Europe is filled with rankling vindication and irritating and dangerous prejudices, jealousies and ambitions. Observers of the European situation declare that more causes for war exist in Europe today than existed in 1914, when Germany launched its premeditated drive into Belgium." But there is no need for despair. The world has made some gratifying progress. It is in an anti-war frame of mind. "It hopes against hope that a World Court may be influential in preserving peace; it trusts that armament limitation will not be a futile spasm born of the sorrows of a world war. Perhaps out of these efforts will come a more extensive and real application of the Chrisitian spirit in international dealings."

Yet there is still ample room for fear. "Humanity is staggered by the possibilities of another war," recites the Winona conference. None of the recent high hopes has been realized. "Men hate each other as intensely as ever. Chaos reigns in every human relationship. Economic and political conditions have sunk to low levels." Now "the time has come to try Christianity. It has never failed in any field when given a fair chance." It is incumbent on every nation, we are told, to contribute toward a peaceful solution of all difficulties. To this desired end—

"The nations of the world must depart from selfish individualism and human isolation. They should unite in creating new standards which are based upon the teachings of Jesus.

"It should be recognized that nations are accountable to the same Christian principles as those which pertain to all Christian men and women as individuals. There is no double standard of morality and ethics—one for men and another for nations. * * *

"We believe that the divine right of sovereignty and civil authority is vested in the nation, and that the nation is an intelligent moral entity which God holds responsible for the use of sovereignty and authority which He has vested in it.

"We believe that God's judgment can be averted only by national repentance for sin and national obedience to the laws of love and brotherhood and fair play, as taught by Jesus, and that such obedience will bring peace to the world and restoration of prosperity and happiness to all peoples."

What a significant confession it is, observes the Christian Science Monitor, that "the time has come to try Christianity" in the effort to solve "what heretofore has been regarded as an unsolvable problem. For nineteen centuries the answer to humanity's pitiful appeal has been available. Yet the struggle has continued, intermittently, perhaps, in the vain hope that by some self-chosen process the millennium of peace might be discovered." Now that all people are convinced of the futility of armed conflict and with the assurance that every conflict must be more destructive than its predecessor, "it is indeed time to 'try Christianity.'" But how is that to be done? inquires the St. Louis Globe-Democrat. "How is Christianity to be 'tried' as a means to the maintenance of peace?" As the Globe-Democrat believes:

"The only way that Christianity can be tried in this matter is by the application to international relations of those principles of conduct which are found in the teachings of Jesus Christ, and of which he is the supreme exponent; and there is no way to apply them except by the establishment of international standards of comity and right, and of international rules of procedure in case of dispute, through international agreements to that end. Put the principles of Christ into international law and intercourse, and then, and not till then, will Christianity be effective for peace.

"Abandon the holier-than-thou aloofness, put actual Christianity into international practice, give it a fair chance, and it will not fail to bring peace on earth, good-will toward men."

"Who doubts," asks the Pittsburgh Post, "that a whole-souled application of the Golden Rule would speedily put the world on a permanent basis of peace? Yet there always are politicians who make the killing reservation that the Golden Rule is not practical." So, "not until it is recognized as the only rule for peace and flatly accepted as such will the hoped-for new age arrive." What is most desired at this hour, in the opinion of the Denver Rocky Mountain News, is that all civilized nations "live up to the religions which they profess, and hatreds and prejudices and enviousness would recede and love would come to its own, for all religion worthy of the name is founded on love, not hate."

"The right to punish crime involves the duty of teaching morals," said Daniel Webster, and the Winona conference adopted the view that this "obviously fair principle makes it obligatory on the State to give a large place in the public schools' curriculum to instruction in morals, to require that every child shall be carefully instructed in the righteousness of the Ten Commandments and the Sermon on the Mount." Among other things, the conference advocates the adherence of the United States to the World Court and the outlawing of prize-fighting, and criticizes New York and Maryland for their lack of State prohibition enforcement laws. This leads the Baltimore Sun to assert that the "Winona brethren" were curiously inconsistent at the very time they were calling on the peoples of the earth to stop fighting and love each other. The Sun goes on:

"With one breath they denounced hate as the cause of human wo, and with the next they demanded that political war should be declared on New York and Maryland because these States have refused to accept the un-Christian doctrine of prohibition tyranny. The Winona Conference solemnly 'urged that Maryland and New York be denied the right to send representatives to either branch of Congress until State prohibition enforcement laws are on their statute books.' That is to say, nobody who disagrees with us has any rights we Winona Christians are bound to respect. If they refuse to accept our opinions, put Maryland and New York out of the Union and treat them as political convicts.

"Christianity is the hope of the world. But not the Christianity that carries the Golden Rule in one hand and the sword of hate and tyranny in the other."—Literary Digest.

We Must Stand Against Moral Evil.

We are surprised that any decent periodical would take such a stand in this matter. He ought to know, and we think he must know, that Christians are compelled to fight sin and moral evil. And if the Baltimore Sun knows anything, we think he must know that when the Winona brethren took a stand against the course of New York and Maryland in declining to stand for prohibition, it was just what a true Christian life demands of them. Instead of their act being one of un-Christian conduct, we think any other course, as to this matter, would have been un-Christian. A Christian people must stand against such evils as the liquor business. It is an easy task to guess that the man who wrote those lines, declaring that it is un-Christian to contend for prohibition in New York and Maryland (and elsewhere, too, we suppose) is himself not a Christian. We know nothing personally, but that expression seems to us to indicate that it was written by one who is himself far from Christianity. If you, or he, should wish proof on this point, we have it ready—any man who loves the whisky business and stands for it, is so lacking in the spirit of Christ that we do not see how it would be possible for such an one to be a Christian.

Will Christianity Defeat War?

Trying Christianity as a means of preventing war is indeed a most hopeful suggestion from some standpoints, for we all wish we could do without war—it is a curse to the world; but that does not say that war against moral evil is not a necessity, and at times an absolute necessity, and perhaps the only way known to the people of this day of keeping moral evil from covering the earth and subduing the world for Satan. We must learn to do without war just as long as we can, but when the call is to wipe out moral evil, what can we do but go to the front and declare to the black tide, which seeks to overwhelm us, that no further can it come. We do wish to have the nations try Christianity. Yes, surely, but not till moral evil has been driven from the earth shall we be entirely free from war.

Jesus' Principles Made Plain.

The Master Himself, the Prince of Peace, said: "Think not that I am come to send peace on earth: I come not to send peace, but a sword."

"For I am come to set a man at variance against his father, and the daughter against her mother, and the daughter-in-law against her mother-in-law."

"And a man's foes shall be they of his own household."—Matt. 10:33-35.

Now, surely, Jesus was not in favor of such a thing as the ordinary war spirit between nations, but he knew that offenses against the morals of the people would come, and He knew that these must be met and destroyed—nothing else can bring peace to earth while the world is cursed with moral evil—and He knew, too, that it would be better for the world to have this awful struggle than it would be to submit to the rolling waves of moral evil. Christianity and the world cannot lie down together in peace, and for the reason that Christianity cannot live in sin, it cannot live in submission to sin, and therefore when we come into conflict, there is nothing else to be done but to pull the sword and destroy evil. This is so, not that Jesus wishes war, but because the happiness of the world for time and eternity depends in a certain sense upon the destruction of moral evil. Moral evil may come between nations, as well as between individuals, and in either case, some one must rise against it and drive it into oblivion that peace may reign and shower her blessings upon the world, and that cannot be done when moral evil is playing its hand for the destruction of the pure and the good. We deprecate war. We abhor it. But when it becomes a necessity to guarantee the peace of the world, there is nothing to do but to lay to and destroy it, and then peace that is peace may prevail to the joy of the people and to the praise and glory of God. We cannot have permanent and universal peace till Jesus reigns among men.

Thorough Regeneration of the Human Family is the Remedy.

The hearts of men and women must be regenerated before peace can be permanent. It is wise to do all we can to prevent war. Yes, surely we must do that; but war cannot be permanently prevented till Jesus comes, or certainly not till His spirit gets into the lives of men and subdues them till they will gladly accept His teachings and live as far as they can the Christ life. Will the editor of the Baltimore Sun dispute this attitude?

Try Christianity as the one antidote for war! Yes, surely, but after we have tried it and given it a fair chance, and it has done its great work, be not surprised if moral evil does not arise and assert itself till we shall again have to go to war for the extermination of the evil, that it may not destroy the peace of the world permanently. We are in favor of every wise means of keeping war from coming, and while a great deal will be done in that way, the spirit of war will remain in the unregenerate, many of them if not all, and just so long as the spirit of war remains in the hearts and minds of the people, just so long may we expect war to come again and again till Jesus comes to reign among men. Then we may have war no more—but, till then, we may expect its recurrence.

And so far as the war prohibition is making against the moral evil, known as the whiskey business, that must go on till the whiskey business is completely destroyed, and the battle against whiskey is strictly in the interest of peace among the people. There is no other way to get peace here except through war on th whiskey business till it is destroyed, and destroyed forever. We are ashamed of any newspaper editor who dares to stand up among his fellows and declare that prohibition is un-Christian! Yes, we are ashamed of any such newspaper man. His work ought to have shown him long since the folly and sin of such a position, and we believe it would if he had not been like one of old who, because of his love for his idols, it was commanded to let him alone and leave him in his sins; but that much was done because there was no hope for his recovery from his idols.

ELON LETTER.

We have a situation in North Carolina that needs most careful consideration and that demands remedial measures forthwith. I refer to provision for religious instruction at our tax-supported institutions of higher learning.

We are all gratified at the growth and progress of our three State institutions of standard grade —the University, State College, and the Normal College. The prospect is that the attendance on these institutions will continue to grow. The day is not far distant when these schools will enroll more pupils than the denominational colleges of the State. The most impressive fact about higher education the nation over is the phenomenal growth of State institutions of higher education. It will continue so in North Carolina, as in other States.

But there is one thing we must keep steadily in mind—that education without religion is a dangerous experiment. And our State institutions cannot teach religion. The doctrine of the separation of Church and State makes that impossible in North Carolina. The solution of this problem calls for the wisest statesmanship we can bring to bear upon any educational problem. A democracy, which I define as the Christian religion applied to the political problem, cannot continue with a people one-half Christian and the other half pagan. This is particularly true of the leadership of a democracy, which leadership experience shows must come from those with college and university training. For the Church, therefore, to lose contact with thousands of the future leaders of the State during the four years of their training in our State institutions is to invite disaster. The rocks lie ahead, immediately ahead, unless we can keep the contact clear and bring religion as a constructive force to bear on the life of these young men and young women who elect to go to the State schools rather than to our denominational and Christian schools.

What are we going to do about it?

It is useless to criticise our State schools. They cannot remedy the situation. It is the duty of the Churches to take the initial step in solving this serious problem. Are the Churches ready to enter this most promising home mission field in America —the campuses of our State institutions of higher learning?

Some years ago I addressed an open letter to the press of the State on this very point. Many papers returned my letter and regretted the time was not ripe for the public discussion of this question. Some printed it. I got letters of various kinds—some approving, some condemning. One editor wrote sarcastically about the author of the letter, but did not understand the issues involved well enough to discuss the measure proposed nor to appreciate the need for any measure whatsoever. The author was ridiculed as a meddler and scorned as an ecclesiastical lobbyist.

Since that time there has been a growing sentiment throughout the nation for religious education in State universities. There are forty such schools in the United States and twenty-one of them now have religious instruction accredited toward degrees. The method by which this is accomplished varies in the several States, all the way from a department supported by the university's funds as in South Carolina, Pennsylvania, Virginia and South Dakota, to a federated department supported jointly by the various denominations of the State as in Missouri, Kansas, Texas, Oklahoma, and Ohio. In some States the denominations work independently of each other.

We can have our choice of methods, but we cannot refuse to employ some method without serious jeopardy of the State's future. There is a prime need for religious instruction in our State institutions of higher learning. Are the Churches of North Carolina big enough and Christian enough to supply this need? Or shall we continue to be a mountain of bigotry, between two valleys of Christian toleration—Virginia and South Carolina? These two sister States put us to open shame. They are providing for the Christian character of the students in their universities. We are closing our eyes to the finest opportunity of effective evenagelism ever offered a people. We must provide for this religious instruction of our youth or sad will be the future estate religiously and spiritually of the Old North State.

The burning educational issue in North Carolina today is the religious education of our youth studying in our tax-supported institutions of higher learning, powerless to help themselves, needing our help, anxious for it. What shall we do about it? Christian hosts of North Carolina, what will you do about it? Meanwhile, what will our Church people in North Carolina do in regard to patronizing our own college, where Christian character is put first and always?

W. A. HARPER.

A HOSPITAL PASTORATE.

Many of my friends and the people of my Church have been interested in the nature and extent of my parish in a foreign country; and now that those duties have been relinquished and new ones have been assumed, and close at home, I am honored by continued solicitation in regards to my present duties.

It gives me pleasure to take this method to inform the Church the best I can that I am now pastor to the Navy-Yard and the Naval Hospital, Portsmouth, Va. I still have something to do, and eminently something worth while.

Upon being transferred from Haiti, I expected the hospital duty exclusively. This is a work which, in addition to being pastor to about five hundred sick ones, and to equally as great a number at the pharmacist mate school and carrying on the morale and welfare activities of both, is enough to keep one man busy all of his time and leave him weary at the close of each day. For several years this has been the exclusive duty of one man; but at this time it seems to have been necessary, in addition to the hospital duty, to impose upon one also the duties of the Navy-Yard. Chaplain Patrick, who has been hitherto chaplain to the yard, is needed on the west coast with the Pacific fleet, and owing to the scarcity of chaplains, for the present it is imperative for one to become the chaplain to both stations, and thus I am called upon to divide my time between the two.

My headquarters is at the yard, and primarily I am attached there, but, owing to numbers and the importance of the service, the greater part of my duties is at the hospital. I maintain an office in the yard, at building 33, which is well equipped for all the duties thereof. It is located near the center of the station and handy to all those I have to see and work with, and also for those who wish to see me. At this station there are about eighty officers and five hundred enlisted men, of whom one hundred are sailors and the others are marines, who guard the reservation and all the government property thereof. The chaplain's duties to these is the same as it has been and is to any organization and as previously described in these pages. It is a duty which, if discharged, between personal touch and religious work is enough to occupy one the most of his time; but which, under the present circumstances, in part must go neglected.

Although there are some men who can do as much as two others sometimes, man has not yet reached that development when he can do as much as two should do; therefore, having the work of two to do, many duties of both must go undone, and my program has resolved itself into keeping office hours and attending to official matters and directing the recreational activities of the station, which, at present, consists in the supply and the exhibition of motion pictures.

The religious work of this station should consist of a service every Sunday morning and personal work, but all who wish to attend Church visit outside Churches and the lack of time will admit of only casual personal touch. There are very many who attend Sunday School classes and Church services on the outside, we are pleased to note, and when this has been accomplished my mission has been accomplished, for this is more nearly real and far more preferable.

My duties at the hospital require me to visit the sick every day, supervise recreational activities and entertainment and direct religious services. The latter consists of Sunday morning services at 10 o'clock and Thursday evening devotions at 7:30. I spend the morning of each day, from 9 to 12:30 o'clock, at these duties, and the afternoon is spent at the yard in the duties there.

My evenings are hardly any more mine than the routine hours of the day. One Monday evenings I hold a songfest at the hospital, where we engage everybody in singing. Singing is wonderful for the spirit of man, and everybody should sing. I am naturally a song leader, and these occasions are among the finest of our experiences. My Thursday evenings are spent at the prayer service, and Fridays with the motion pictures at the yard; and now there is a demand for me to give one evening to the marine barracks for singing.

This will give you some idea of the extent of my duties at this station, and no doubt will enable you to feel that the work I am engaged in is an extension of God's Church life and a necessary service for the kingdom. Everybody, and certainly every pastor, is familiar with the character of the sick-room service. There, some must be joked and kidded along; others must be cheered up; others must be comforted; others must be taught; others, who are facing the other side, must be spiritually admonished and prayed with; and the angle of approach and the drift of conversation may be, and is, as diversified as the multitudinous impulses and feelings that are known to humanity. One man cries and his soul is yearning for the chaplain to lift him up. Another is ready to tell the chaplain to "go to hell"; and so through the wards we go to an extended extent carrying out the injunction of Paul, "All things to all men, that we may win some."

In addition to the above, there are the parents and relatives of the sick ones who have come, many from far distances, to see their boys, and we owe them attention and consolation. To the parents of the few who die, letters are to be written. With them, matters of personal interest claim our attention, and must be looked after. A young man died recently, leaving a locker of civilian clothes and personal effects in a city business place, which we did not know about until we received inquiry from his mother. It took us three weeks to locate these effects and return them to his mother. This is one instance of many that are coming up every day demanding our care and attention.

Many of these boys are ambitious and are studying, and we have to help them in their school work. Others are endeavoring to enter Annapolis Naval Academy to prepare themselves for officers of the navy. In this they must be tutored for this their life work.

Monday evenings, at the show hall, I assume the roll of entertainer, and with an attempt at monologue and the jokes of life, the most of which are picked from every-day life, I endeavor to make the gang laugh. There is nothing better for the health and morale of the men than to have them laugh a lot and keep them on the optimistic outlook.

The Thursday evening prayer meetings are held under the auspices of the Young People's Societies of the various Churches, each taking his turn by rote. These services, while under my general supervision, are all supervised by a Mr. Dean, of the city, who, for almost all his life, has taken a deep and vital interest in enlisted men of this locality. Splendid results have accompanied these efforts, such as frequent conversions, baptisms and joining the Churches in the city. One Church has a choir of sailors, another has a Bible class, etc., all of which can be traced directly to the Thursday evening devotionals.

In addition to the number attending my services each Sabbath morning, which runs from 150 to 250, there are about 100 others attending service on the outside, making a total of about 350 out of a possible approximate 600 who attend Church regularly. This approximation includes only those of the pharmacist mate school and those of the hospital who are sufficiently convalescent to attend. There are still remaining there those who are confined to their beds and those who are on week-end liberty.

I do not wish to give unwarranted color to the spiritual condition and activities of the men at this station, but, because of what I have known about service men and their religious habits, I am amazed and delighted to find such a soul-life here. I attribute such results to the splendid interest the Churches of the community have taken in the men. It is bearing fruit an hundredfold for the kingdom of God.

I hope I may count on your interest in what I am trying to do for the Master here, and when you are in Portsmouth or Norfolk, please call on me. I can be found at the hospital mornings and at the yard afternoons, or at my home address, 414 London Street, and my phone number is Portsmouth 29-W. You are welcome.

Very truly yours,
H. E. Rountree.

ON THE SIMPLE ESSENTIALS OF GOSPEL TRUTH.

By S. D. Gordon.

Delivered under the Auspices of Atlantic City, N. J., Council of Churches.

(No. 3) The Book of God.

There is something tangible about a book. You know it by the feel. It's in plain print, black on white, words you know the meaning of without stopping to think into them. If it's a thoughtful worthy book you read and muse. And you are changed, maybe imperceptibly, but really quite radically.

Now, there is one outstanding book. It stands quite by itself. In its claim for itself, its power among men, its history, the place commonly given it, its distinctive quality of inspiration, even in the enemies it has made, it stands quite alone.

It is the old Book of God. It is the one book to which, by common consent, that little word "the" belongs—the Book. It was inspired. It is inspired. That simply means the breath of God was in it, and is. His Spirit was in the men who wrote, guiding, controlling, inspiriting, a supernatural touch through the human natural medium.

It is a book like any other—paper, print, stitching, plain words. Its contents must be got through reading and thinking, like any other book. It is unlike every other book in this: there's a living Presence in it.

It reaches into your thoughts. It searches the innermost recesses of your spirit. It touches deftly, unmistakably, your motives and purposes. It lays bare to your eye the inner hidden things.

And there's a distinct touch of life to it. It quickens brain and thought and the part of you that chooses. There's a rugged strength now in your decision that breaks habit, and shapes new ones.

It's a mother of books. It contains the oldest authentic history. All the roots of modern jurisprudence run down into the Mosaic code. Political economy and moral philosophy find their basic principles here. Its laws of sanitation, of hygiene, of diet, and of business ethics, originating here, are accepted standards.

It is not a scientific book. Yet its statements never conflict with the latest findings of science. Its ideals of life, personal, national and racial, can be found nowhere else except as inspired by its pages. Its literature, its love stories, its biographies, are unapproached. It contains the key to the intricate tangle in which the world finds itself today, the one key, the master key.

There's fine modesty in its pages, and yet the most stupendous claims for itself. It claims to be a revelation from God Himself. It tells what reason cannot reason out. True reasoning and this revelation are fellows, working together to reach full knowledge. It reveals the past, otherwise unknown, and God's purposes, and plans for the future, that otherwise could not be known.

It's a singularly honest book. It tells with frank bluntness the glaring moral failings of the men God used. He had to use some one. He got the best there was. He sternly rebuked them, and plainly points out their moral breaks.

This book is the moral standard of life. And morals are the throbbing heartbeat of life. There must be a standard, or all life goes askew. A yardstick for cloth, a foot rule for timber, a sixteen-ounce bit of metal for sugar, truthfulness in speech, honesty in trade, a recognized propriety in cultured circles, a Gray's anatomy for physicians, a Blackstone for lawyers, and God's Book for strong, winsome life and rest of heart.

The scholarship of the nations, and of the ages, has been devoted to the task of giving us this Book in our mother tongue, as to no other task. Its utter dependability from the scholarly standpoint is beyond question. The variations of translations in various versions have to do with incidentals, important incidentals, but never with vital things.

The modern English and American revisions have the advantage of the most recently found manuscripts, the latest scholarship, and the paragraphed printing. But one can rest content that the old common version is the most remarkable bit of translation ever done. In it we have the very Word of God, in plain English, a sufficient guide for daily life.

And it is not a big book. Familiarity with its pages by daily touch makes that clear. A daily habit, a settled method of thinking of it as one book, and reading it from opening page on, as a story, ignoring for the time being, chapter and verse, gives a fascination to its pages. And the poetical books and prophetical will fit into the story part as drawers into a well-made bureau, as will Paul's letters and the others into Dr. Luke's story of the Acts.

The practical key to this Book is simply this, reading it habitually, quietly, with mind alert, simply reading it, giving one's self up to it for a bit of time daily, and yielding the consent of one's life to its teachings and spirit. The famous artist kept the bright-colored stones always in sight to tone up his sense of colors. The sailor keeps his eye constantly on compass and chart.

That's the thing here. Reading it habitually tones up the moral sense, clears the vision, steadies the feet, poises the judgment, stiffens the will, gentles the spirit, comforts the heart, quiets the nerves, and sets the day's work to music.

But, in sharpest contrast with all other books, it makes you face a personal decision. There's no personal appeal in Napoleon or Cromwell. No decision presses in. But here the Man of the Book looks into your face. He calls you to choose. And you do, this way or that. You are never again the man you were.

MARTIN LUTHER.

The kingly halls of Charles were all ablaze,
And Church and State in arrogance and pride,
In jeweled purple, formed a living tide
Adown the marbles of the vaulted ways
On to the spot, where with intensest gaze
Luther stood silent, pondering o'er the days
Of travail and of trial, of Wittenberg—the maze
Of struggle, the rack, the flames where martyrs died.

"Dost thou recant?" As falls the chastening rod
On bleeding wretch, the dire voice ringing fell
As speeded from Hate's deepest, nether hell:
One moment, then a heart with lightning shod
Exultant rose, and age on age will tell,
"Recant! I will not; help me, gracious God!"

—Wm. Thornton Whitsett, in Saber and Song.

THE NEW PRESIDENT.

John Calvin Coolidge is made by fate the thirtieth President of the United States. His term has less than two years to run. Upon assuming office he declared his intention of following the Harding policies. It is no easy succession to which Mr. Coolidge has come, the Presidency being at best a most difficult post, but the character of Mr. Harding's service was such as a man of Mr. Coolidge's temperament can follow. The country will expect no great deeds from him, and his history would seem to make it certain that he will commit no serious mistakes. And that, in these times, is a certainty worth having.

It seems strange that the bad is so much more ready than the good. Editorially, the Washington Evening Star says: "The Chinese can organize a gang of bandits that maintains discipline in its membership better than any political administration they have yet devised. It is unfortunate that in the Orient, as elsewhere, the wicked stand together, while righteous patriotism engages in altercation." That is surpassingly strange. How can the forces of wickedness stand ever ready to do its work, while the people who represent the good and the great have to struggle so hard to do a little? We need to learn some things which as yet seem to be hid from us.

The truth is mighty, but sometimes they who handle it are very weak and unprepared. Preparedness is the lesson the people need to learn.

MOSES vs. DARWIN.

By William Jennings Bryan.

In Three Parts. Part I.

"I sent my boy to college a Christian, and he came back an atheist."

I have three objections to Darwin's doctrine. The first is that it is not true; the second is that it is the most ridiculous thing that was ever proposed seriously by sane men, and my third objection is that it is destructive. First, I want to prove that it is not true. In the first place, people sometimes use words which they do not understand, and when they understand them they quit using them.

There is not one man in ten who says he is an evolutionist that knows what the word "evolution" means. I say this because I have had them try to explain it and proved they didn't understand it. Dr. Riley, of Minneapolis, had a debate in North Carolina not long ago with a professor in a college. The professor in that debate said what wonderful evolution there had been in the automobile from two cylinders to four, etc. Why, there is no evolution in an automobile. If you think there is, take the two cylinders out where there is plenty of air and water, surround them with all the favorable conditions you can; then take a chair and sit down and watch two cylinders evolve into four cylinders.

There is a man named Dr. Keene, an eminent surgeon, and when he confines himself to things he knows about, he is not a bad man, but when he explains to a thological class about evolution and science, then he is reasoning back on the subject. He knows just about as much about evolution as most people do who write about it. In a book he published, he speaks of the wonderful evolution of the telephone. There is no evolution in the telephone. The box cannot evolute, the receiver cannot evolute, the speaking tube cannot, the wires cannot. Now, man can take two cylinders and develop an automobile with four, six, ten or twelve; a man can take a telephone and convert a nation into a whispering gallery, but there is no evolution in a telephone. Dr. Keene said that there has been wonderful evolution in his own garden. Not a bit of it, not in his lifetime or anybody's else. If you are intelligent, you can take a poor potato and develop it into a good one. Intelligence applied to an inferior thing may develop and improve along certain lines, but if Dr. Keene wants a sure enough instance of evolution, let him take an onion and a lily of the valley and put them close together and wait until one evolves into the other. I affirm that no evolutionist has ever given an illustration of evolution. They have given many cases they thought were evolution, but nothing has ever evolved so far as we know, and until they find something that evolves they cannot talk of evolution. They do not even know what hypothesis means, though they all talk about it.

Hypothesis—A Scientific Guess.

What do you suppose hypothesis means? It is the scientific synonym for "guess." You will find that in your dictionary. If Darwin had called it "a guess" it would not have lived a year. It has lived sixty years because people did not know what it meant. One of these professors sits up behind a desk looking intelligent and hurls "hypothesis" at a student, and it knocks him senseless. You call it "guess," and there is nothing obscure about this subject. You would suppose a man had to have a long course of learning to understand this subject; in five minutes' time I can give you all you need to understand Darwin's hypothesis. Darwin's guess was that about 200,000,000 of years ago, one or a few germs of life appeared on this planet. His son put the number at fifty-seven million. Why do you suppose his son could not guess as much as his father? He hadn't guessed as long. How can a young man guess as much as an old man? Some still younger men have guessed it at twenty-four million, and some very old men have put it as high as three hundred million, and you can see how little accuracy has to do with this guessing. Now, there is a variety of guessing. Darwin says, one of a few; some say just one. I read a book on evolution in which the author said that every living animal came originally from one germ, and everything in the vegetable world came originally from one germ; that would be two. But this man said that back of those two germs there was one germ from which these two came. Oh, what a day in which to live when one germ would have two children, one a vegetable and the other an animal!

Darwin, when a young man, said God put them there. After awhile he apologized for it, said he had yielded to public sentiment and used the word "appeared" because it didn't indicate where they came from. He "guessed" they appeared and began to reproduce. Some scientists say they could not have done it. I'd rather guess with them. Some guess if two had appeared they would have died before they reproduced, but Darwin guesses they didn't die, but kept on until finally we had between two and three million species. But the most conservative estimate I know is that we have one million distinct species in the animal and vegetable kingdoms, and Darwin's guess is that every one of the million species came by slow and gradual change, from one or a few invisible germs of life that appeared on the planet two hundred million years ago; one or a few germs appeared and began to reproduce and change gradually until we had a million species. Our contention is that if this were true, every square foot of the earth's surface would teem with conclusive proof of the change, but it is not true, because they have investigated for sixty years and examined millions of specimens under a microscope, and today they have not a single one that is not perfect; not a single one in transition. Isn't it absurd to say that everything changes when they cannot find anything changing? I tell you there is no scientist on earth who will stand up before a body of scientists and show where any species ever developed into any other, and yet they want you to believe that all species have come by slow and gradual change, by the operation of interior forces.

Guessing, a Poor Business.

They had a meeting the other day of the American Society for the Advancement of Science, at Cambridge, Mass., and they passed a resolution declaring that they believed in organic evolution of plant and animal and man, and protested against any legislation that would prevent its being taught in the schools. That society had a meeting in Toronto a year ago, and on December 28th a man named Bateson came all the way from England on the invitation of this society and spoke to them. The paper said they had eleven thousand members. He discussed evolution, and his speech was published in Science, a magazine published in New York. In that speech, Bateson said to these scientists that in every effort that had been made to find the origin of the species, never in one single case has the experiment succeeded. "We have faith in evolution, he said, "but we have our doubts about the origin of species. There is no evolution unless it accounts for the evidence of species, but," he says, "do not be discouraged. We may find it tomorrow."

They sent an expedition to Africa. They heard somewhere that there was a man or a race of men with rudimentary tails, and said, "Now, we have got him at last!" Out in Nebraska not long ago somebody found a tooth, just one tooth. No jawbone, no skull, no skeleton, just a tooth, but the man who found it thought he had found a treasure. He sent it to Prof. Osborne, the head of the museum, and Osborne was very much impressed with it, and called in some other spirits like unto himself and held a post-mortem examination over the extinct animal. Having one tooth upon which to build, they solemnly decided that that tooth came from the animal nearer to man than any other animal ever found, and they had about settled down in the belief. Although they doubted that Samson could slay a thousand Philistines with a jaw-bone, they thought that one tooth, without any jaw-bone, would be sufficient to slay the doctrine that God made man.

INTERPRETATION OF THE BIBLE (No. 1).

By Rev. Julius C. McCaslin,

Pastor Methodist Protestant Church, Anderson, Indiana.

(In Alliance Weekly.)

We herewith give to our readers three most interesting articles on "Interpretation of the Bible," which are very interesting and instructive. It is a most timely presentation of this subject, since so much is being said and written on the interpretation of the Bible. If you corner a modernist on a plain meaning of some passage, he slips out of your corner by declaring that the passage is capable of two constructions, that it does not mean to him what it does to you. That is, as we see it, purely an effort to keep from being compelled to admit the truth of your claim—that to him it does not mean what you understand it to mean. That seems to us to be but a way this modernist has of twisting himself out of admitting the truth. He is somewhat like the ostrich, who when he gets his head hid in the sand, thinks that his whole body is hid. That is what the ostrich thinks about it, so we are told; but every one else knows full well that the bird is more than ever exposed to his enemies. Just so it is with the modernist. He may persuade himself to think that he can get out of the corner into which the fundamentalist has placed him simply by saying that, to him, the thought under discussion has another meaning. He ought to have sense enough to know that no such plea can shield him before the court of high heaven. He ought to know (and doesn't he?) that the ordinary meaning of language is the language of interpretation, and that he will have to submit to that meaning at the bar of God. We commend Mr. McCaslin's three articles to a careful reading on the part of our people.—Editor.

"The grass withereth, the flower fadeth; but the Word of our God shall stand forever" (Isa. 40:8). "All Scripture is given by inspiration of God" (2 Tim. 3:16). "No prophecy of the Scripture is of any private interpretation, for the prophecy came not in old time by the will of man; but holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost" (2 Peter 1:20-21). "Now we have received, not the spirit of the world, but the Spirit which is of God; that we might know the things that are freely given to us of God. Which things also we speak, not in the words which man's wisdom teacheth, but which the Holy Ghost teacheth; comparing spiritual things with spiritual. But the natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God: for they are foolishness to him: neither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned" (1 Cor. 2:12-14).

Interpretation is the act of making plain the hidden truth of any statement or the process of explaining clearly that which is otherwise obscure. The Bible is the Word of God. The infallible interpreter of the Bible is the Holy Spirit. The interpretations of the Holy Ghost never contradict the statements of the Holy Bible. The purpose of biblical interpretations is "to rightly divide the word of truth" and clearly explain the obscure truths of the Bible, ever keeping in mind the edification of saints, the mission of the Church, the salvation of souls and the glory of God.

Understanding the Bible.

correct interpretation is essential to a proper understanding of the Bible. Indeed, interpretation is an indispensable servant of inspiration and revelation. However, when human interpretation presumes to be the master of biblical inspiration and divine revelation; whenever the finite mind is more highly esteemed in this realm of thought than the infinite, then it is time to call a halt. As recently stated by Dr. A. W. Pitzer: "The wisdom of man has passed out of its proper sphere when it invades the domain of the invisible and infinite; when it assumes to deny that the infinite God has revealed or can reveal Himself in His Word, His Son, His Spirit." Let us magnify the supernatural element of biblical interpretation.

In the professed Church today we find two interpreters of the Bible—the natural man and the spiritual man. Consider the natural man. He is a strong man physically and mentally, as men count strength; graduate of a popular university with a splendid mastery of history, science, philosophy, literature and the languages in which the original copies of the Holy Scriptures were written. His library is crowded with the latest books. He is known among men as a moral man, pays his honest debts, and is good to his family. But his relationship with God is not good. He is an unbeliever, a Christ-rejecter; dead in trespasses and sins. Satan has blinded his eyes to Christ and the Gospel—a poor, lost soul, stumbling in the dark, on the way to hell. He is full of pride, self-righteousness and the spirit of this age. Yet he is as open-minded as a natural man can be. He desires to know the truth. His purpose is to satisfy his mind. His ambition is to be a perfect scholar. His glory is the praise of men for his intellectual achievements. His attitude toward the Bible is skeptical, and his approach to the same is not reverent. He considers himself competent to criticize the Bible and studies the Book in the same manner as he studies any other literary production. His purpose in interpreting the Bible is to find the truth contained therein, report his findings to his literary club and explain them according to the dictates of modern scholarship. In this interpretive demonstration he receives the hearty approval of many of the most influential university presidents, professors and preachers in this country. The natural man may be an official member of the Church, a prominent business man, a member of a college faculty or a minister of the popular social gospel, but he worships at the shrine of twentieth century scholarship.

What about the spiritual man? He, too, may be a strong man in body and mind; post-graduate of two universities with degrees galore in history, science, philosophy, literature and such a thorough knowledge of the languages in which the original copies of the Bible were written that he is perfectly at home. His study shelves are crowded with the best books. His deportment among men is above reproach, and his home life is ideal. He is a "twice-born man," fully yielded to God and filled with the Holy Spirit. He is alive in Christ Jesus, stepping heavenward in the highway of holiness. Yet he is deeply conscious of his unworthiness, very humble and willing to be taught; never boasting of his intellectual attainments. He desires to know the truth as it is in Christ. His attitude toward the Bible is that of a believer who realizes that he is not competent to criticize the statements of Jehovah. His approach is reverent, open-minded and sincere. Indeed, he studies the Bible in a different manner from that of any other book because it is the very Word of God. His purpose in interpreting the Bible is to "study to show" himself "approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth," as led by the Holy Spirit. His ambition is to glorify God, exalt Jesus Christ, establish believers in the faith by the power of the Holy Ghost, help fulfill the mission of the Church and win lost souls to Christ. The spiritual man is a member of the true Church.

Fundamental Principles.

Consider the fundamental principles and Scriptural methods of interpretation which the spiritual man applies to the Bible: Pray with real faith and depend on the Holy Spirit to interpret the Bible. Use the Holy Scriptures to interpret the Holy Scriptures. Concentrate the mind upon the subject and study the words. Apply the law of biblical exegesis. Read the references under consideration, context and all related references in the original languags, compare and analyze thoroughly. Never build a doctrine on one verse of the Bible, part of a verse or a change in a preposition or punctuation. Believe what God says on the subject. "No prophecy of the Scriptures is of any private interpretation" (2 Pet. 1:20). No man has any divine authority to interpret the Bible according to his own personal ideas. Let human culture, history, science, philosophy, and literature be servants, but not masters, of interpretation. Square science with faith. Put man and modern scholarship to the acid test. Interpret this age in the terms of Jesus Christ. Whenever modern scholarship makes any assertion exactly contrary to God's plain statement on the same subject, accept as ultimate authority the statement of the Almighty, even though in so doing the greatest scholars in modern universities are proven to be liars.

The plain statements in the Bible are to be taken literally, and do not need any interpretation. Figures stand for facts. Types stand for real persons. Never reverse spiritual and material truth. Any subject or doctrine mentioned repeatedly throughout the Bible must not be ignored. Indeed, special attention must be given to the fundamentals of Christianity. Trust God to reveal in due time the meaning of the references you cannot understand, but do not reason out nor analyze, realizing it is beyond the power of the finite mind to fully comprehend the infinite. God said what He meant in the Bible, and meant exactly what He said. Interpret the Word of God as moved, taught and led by the Holy Spirit. Interpretation given by the Holy Ghost always agrees with, and never contradicts, the plain statements of the Bible.

There are some prominent words and phrases found in the biblical interpretation of the spiritual man: God, Jesus Christ, Holy Spirit, Scriptures, Word of God, love, grace, faith, truth, know, gift, purpose, parable, miracle, saved, yield, filled, power, wisdom from above, Jew, Gentile, Church of God, covenant, law, dispensation, Satan, sin, death, hell, eternal, punishment, everlasting fire, blood, life, redemption, salvation, atonement, regeneration, holiness, walk, pilgrim,stranger, ambassador, reconciliation, works, glory, cross, Calvary, prayer, sound doctrine, judgment, judge, rapture, tribulation, kingdom of heaven, kingdom of God, kingdom of Christ, fullness of times, prophecy, heaven, holy city, New Jerusalem, "what saith the Scriptures," and "thus saith the Lord." "To the law and to the testimony: if they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them" (Isa. 8:20).

IS NOT BRO. McCLENNY MISTAKEN?

DEAR EDITOR:

Some months ago I read Bro. McClenny's article in THE SUN on "The History of the Christian Church in the Eastern Virginia Christian Conference."

As I think, I saw two mistakes, which I thought some of the brethren would correct; but as no one has done so, I deem it my duty to make the correction, as I personally have first-hand information bearing on the mistakes, and therefore feel, since no one else has done so, that I ought to speak.

1. Bro. McClenny said that Rev. Robt. H. Holland organized and built Johnson's Grove Church. That is an error, for I was there on the spot when the work was done, and I know that Rev. Thomas W. Joyner conducted a revival meeting and organized the Church. I remember well that I helped do the work in the erection of the new building. Bro. Joyner served the Church after he organized it about two years. Then Bro. Holland became the pastor of the Johnson's Grove Church.

2. A little later, if I mistake not, I saw that Bro. Otis V. Joyner, in writing of Mount Carmel, makes about the same mistake in regard to the building of that Church. I recall the fact that Bro. I. W. Duke asked Bro. Thos. W. Joyner to come over and build up a Church. Bro. Joyner accepted Bro. Duck's invitation and went over and organized what is now Mount Carmel Church. I think he served it only about one year, after which the Church called Rev. M. B. Barrett to become its pastor. Bro. McClenny has it that Bro. Holland built Johnson's Grove and that Bro. Barrett built Mount Carmel. Bro. Joyner organized both Churches, and the brethren he names succeeded Bro. Thos. W. Joyner. I am sure I am right. Bro. Holland succeeded Bro. Joyner at Johnson's Grove, and Bro. Barrett succeeded him at Mount Carmel.

DR. HARPER'S VISIT TO THE PACIFIC COAST.

On August 2nd, Dr. and Mrs. Harper left Elon College for the Pacific coast. He has not yet returned (August 15th), but we are expecting him in almost any day now. We do not know the particulars of his visit, but we have intimations of some of the fruits of his visit. One good thing is assured by his visit, and that is another building is to go up. We have no authority to say how much has been given, or who gave it, but we are guessing that he found some devoted man and woman whose interest in Elon College is sufficient to assure another building. It is hardly less than $50,000, and it is not likely to go over $100,000, but anyway, other things being with smiling faces. This is a great day for Elon. Its past work must have been extraordinary to have made friends, far and near, who are able and willing to give so liberally to build up the institution. Great interest is now centering in Elon's future, and it will command more friends as it has need of them in a financial way. Elon is getting ready, as we trust, to do its greatest work so far, but we are hoping its future may be crowned with greater victories than ever before, although its past record is a fine one for a small college.

MISSIONS

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Field Secretary.

CAN'T ALWAYS TELL WHO THEY ARE.

The leaders in Church, as well as in State, are sometimes hidden from view. The following from a national weekly may assist us to a vision with reference to the Church:

Hidden away in various departmental buildings at Washington are hundreds of obscure men whose expert knowledge and experience make them invaluable to the people of the United States. Some are clerks who know just the way to carry on government business. Some are brilliant scientists, whose services private corporations would pay high to get. They are men who know their jobs.

And most of them, nearly all in fact, are ill-paid. Occasionally, when a Cabinet officer or an assistant secretary resigns, the country shakes its head sorrowfully and regrets momentarily the fact that the government does not pay salaries high enough to command the services of able men for whom rich corporations are constantly bidding. Generally, when this regret is expressed, the fact is that the country has lost only a figurehead, so far as departmental business is concerned.

Cabinet officers are good things to have when counsel is desired by a President who will take advice. But so far as the running of their departments is concerned, the country does not miss them when they feel called upon to visit Europe, Alaska or go fishing. Departmental business goes on just the same.

Obscure men do the work. The secretary signs the papers others have prepared.

And when those obscure men are forced out of government service because they can no longer live on meager salaries, the country seldom hears of their departure, although departmental business may be disrupted for days and weeks by some $2,000 clerk's resignation.

The continued service of loyal and capable men who are the really important cogs in the machine of government is vital to the country's welfare. Politicians are too busy rewarding their faithful followers with sinecures to remember that it is important that the men who run the government be kept well fed. Some time a business administration will realize that obscure employees of the United States should and must be well paid.

A mirror, hung where he could see himself in it frequently would be an excellent investment for almost every business man, suggests Raymond M. Havens. He's a prominent official in the Rotary Club organization internationally. There's an old saying about living so you can look any man in the eye. It's harder to look ourselves in the eye, using a mirror, when inclined to do anything that conscience protests against. Ernest Haeckel, German biologist, had even a better system in youth. He wrote letters to himself, urging certain corrections of conduct, and debating controversies.

Verily, when a preacher digs into an homilitic cyclopedia for a sermon, he will bring forth things new and old. When he stands before his people with his sermon, his mind will say to the sermon, "I never knew you"; and his heart will mourn, "Whence cometh this strange doctrine." And the people will say, "He speaketh with his lips, but he seemeth to be wandering in far lands where no water is."

THINKING—SPEAKING—WRITING.

BY WM. THORNTON WHITSETT.

Man has an inborn desire and longing for influence. He would make his impress upon the minds of others, and move them to adopt his views. In all ages this feeling has manifested itself in various ways. In peace and in war, in every realm of man's attainment, he has sought to move others to his way of thinking. In science and philosophy, in religion and politics, he strives to win the world to his way of thinking. He has ever sought to so shape the affairs of his time that they may take form after his own conceptions. No labor is too severe, no toil too strenuous, no sacrifice of money and ease and pleasure too great to pay, he feels, for winning others to his ideas and ideals. This inborn trait of man makes a very interesting study for one who would engage in the study of the doings and activities of his fellowmen. No joy seems keener than the pride and joy felt in turning others to one's own way of seeing things, and finding others adopting one's own way of thought.

With the present rapid means of communicating thought, it may be of interest to consider for a moment three certain stages in the matter of an idea and a thought.

First.—What we think, reflects itself in what we do. We judge as to a man's thought by what we see of his actions. Thought, then, first shows itself in a play of influences upon one's own self. "As a man thinketh, so he is." We become certain men and women because of the thoughts we cherish. We are, in other words, what we are because our thought is what it is. Good, pure thoughts make good, pure people; and impure, injurious thoughts, bad and impure people. The nature of the thought gives color to the entire life. Thought, then, is the very fountain-head and source of life, and we are personally what we have thought. The thought of today makes and molds the man of tomorrow.

Second.—If we speak as we think, then our speech, as spoken speech, influences those around us. Our thought has not only made us what we are personally, but it moves out into a wider circle, and exerts its power upon those within the radius of our speech as it takes shape in spoken words. The spoken word then magnifies a hundred-fold the ideas that have been developed in the mind, and a circle of hearers is moved to our way of thinking, or incited to other lines in opposition to our views.

Third—When we have thoughts, we have done well; when we have spoken, we have done better—but it is when we have placed this thought in the permanent form of the printed page that we have taken the ultimate step towards its greatest power. The original concept then becomes magnified a million-fold, and it may move on not alone in the present, but in a limitless future. It survives time and partakes of immortality. It may gather friends and forces in days yet unborn. It has become man's securest vehicle for enduring, increasing influence upon all generations.

The poet, Shelly, tells us of Ozymandias, who longed to live in the memories of mankind, and on his mighty image of stone carved the words:

"My name is Ozymandias, king of kings:
Look on my works, ye mighty, and despair"!

But this stone image did not secure his name, for he tells us—

"Nothing beside remains. 'Round the decay
Of that colossal wreck, boundless and bare,
The lone and level sands stretch far away."

Those of our race who have given to us their best and noblest thought securely fixed upon the printed page, have won an enduring place among the treasures of the temples of humanity. In this way, many of the voiceless dead yet speak to us with a power unknown to many of the living. They have by their literary monuments obtained the dream of Ozymandias and become living forces long after they have laid down their pens for the last time.

3,000 THE CHRISTIAN SUN. 9,000

There are between 8,000 and 10,000 families represented in the Southern Christian Convention, which means if a copy of THE CHRISTIAN SUN is placed in each family, a possible subscription list of 9,000 copies. There are now circulated approximately 3,000 copies, or about one-third of our Church families are reached. Hence, there should be added to the list 6,000 new subscribers in order to have the Church paper placed in every family.

Now, the great personal effort required to do this must be rewarded. To compensate this labor, if premiums are given, it will take 20 automobiles, or 40 radio machines, or 50 to 60 talking machines, or 90 to 100 typewriters, or 200 to 300 watches, etc. Don't you think you will have a good opportunity to secure one of these prizes?

But you need not confine your solicitations to your Church alone. You have friends in other denominations who will gladly assist you by giving a subscription. Make your appeal in a straightforward manner. True men and women are interested in the success of their friends and will lend a helping hand.

PREMIUMS GIVEN FOR NEW SUBSCRIPTIONS.

The subscription price of THE SUN, recently reduced, is now $2.00 per year—two six-month subscriptions at $1.00 each count as one year. One person may take as many as he may wish for himself or for others. Those in arrears should pay up and assist the solicitor by taking an advanced subscription.

SCHEDULE.

1. To one securing 350 Subscriptions, a Ford Touring Car will be given ($298.00 f. o. b. factory).
2. To one securing 150 Subscriptions, one Radio Equipment—Westinghouse R-6 Set, complete with batteries, tubes, phone and aerial equipment, the price of which is $150.00.
3. To one securing 100 Subscriptions will be given one Victrola ($75.00), or cash prize of $50.00.

7. To one securing 20 Subscriptions, one Standard or International Dictionary will be given.

To all authorized solicitors will be paid 10 per cent commission on all renewals, and 20 per cent on all new subscriptions. Those receiving prizes will not be entitled to commission.

Two renewal subscriptions will be counted as one in determining the winners of prizes.

Send in your name and address and receive the necessary report blanks and receipt books.

FAMILY ALTAR

THE FAMILY ALTAR.

MONDAY.

*"The hour cometh * * * that ye shall be scattered, every man to his own, and shall leave me alone."*—John 16:32.

"Christ's loneliness deepened as the end drew near. The disciples understood Him even less when He spoke about His death than in the rest of His teaching. He had, in a very special sense, to go down into the valley alone. Death is ever a solitude, and, perhaps, is most terrible because it is. The fondest love can only go with us to the gate. We must part outside the barrier, and the flight of His friends and the denial of His death, compassed by treachery, and preceded by all alone pass in and take our journey. But His chief apostle, was, in a very special sense, a solitary death. The little faith which had feebly been building up in some heart was shattered. The love seemed to have gone. No man in all the world believed in Him now. "We trusted" was the most they would say. And so, wrapped in darkness, He dies, as He had lived, alone! How profoundly must our Lord have felt the pain of His solitude! The thought of His loneliness is made more bitter to Him by its contrast with the companionship which His faithless followers so easily secured. 'Ye shall be scattered, each one to his own.' They had all congenial surroundings and friends to return to, and, fleeing to that shelter, they leave Him solitary, like a traveler, on a waste unsheltered heath, to meet the whole fury of the storm. 'His own,' to whom He had come with hands outstretched craving a welcome, had turned from Him, and the isolation aggravated even the solemn pains of His passion. —Dr. Alexander Maclaren.

"There was no other good enough
To pay the price of sin:
He only could unlock the gate of heaven
And let us in."

TUESDAY.

"Once for all, at the end of the world, he has appeared with his self-sacrifice to abolish sin."—Heb. 9:26 Moffat.

The rending of the veil at the moment of the death of Christ tells of sin abolished. The word which, in chapter 7:18, is used for the abrogation of the command relating to the line of earthly priests, is here applied to the destruction of the power and abolition of the results of sin. The central thought in the type of the brazen serpent is that of the evil by which the people suffered being shown openly as overcome. The drooping head and motionless fangs spoke of deliverance from all the venomous creatures it represented. That which the people dreaded most; that which was causing death and suffering on every hand, was dead and could harm them no more. That of which the serpent was the symbol, that awful and destructive power we call sin, is seen upon the Cross of Calvary to be harmless as a dead snake. Jesus Christ was not only made man. He was made sin, and all the virulence and venom of sin, all that is dangerous and deadly in it, our Lord bids us believe is absorbed in His person and rendered harmless on the cross.—J. G. M.

"The reign of sin and death is o'er,
And all may live from sin set free;
Satan has lost his mortal power—
'Tis swallowed up in victory."

WEDNESDAY.

"He began to be sorrowful and very heavy."—Matt. 26:37.

"I think that marks the beginning of the dying. 'Sorrowful and very heavy.' Just gaze into the hearts of these words. 'Sorrowful' has a profounder content than the word appears to denote. It is significant of the grief of desolation. As for the word translated 'heavy,' it suggests an awful sense of homelessness. Shall we insert these words in place of those that have become almost too familiar to us? 'He began to be very desolate and very homeless.' 'Very homeless.' He Who only a few hours before had spoken so comfortably about His Father's house with the many mansions, and Who on the self-same day had joyfully proclaimed the unfailing presence and companionship of His Father—'I am not alone, My Father is with Me'—was now becoming burdened with the oppressive sense of homelessness. The Father's house was becoming dim, and communion with the Father was waxing faint and the sinless Son of God was beginning to feel the chills of a homeless desolation. He was beginning to taste death!"—Dr. J. H. Jowett.

"'Tis midnight: and from all removed,
The Saviour wrestles 'lone with fears;
E'en that disciple whom He loved
Heeds not his Master's grief and tears."

THURSDAY.

"My God, My God, why hast Thou forsaken Me?"—Matt. 27: 46.

"The blessed communion between Christ and God, the Man Christ and His divine Father, was broken once. 'My God, My God, why hast Thou forsaken Me?' Broken once—wherefore? How? Because He, in the depth of His love, in the might of His sympathy, in the realty of His union with mankind, so identified Himself with us, in our sons and in their punishment, that the last issue of sin fell upon Him, and He tasted the extremest bitterness of the cup, in the separation from God, which is eternal death. That was for us and for all men. 'I could wish myself accursed,' said the servant. The Master did more than wish; He made Himself a curse for us. He bore that last, most awful, consequence of sin, and was left alone, bereft of God, in the darkness, that we might never lose the light of God's face, nor the strength and joy of our Father's presence. Let us bow with hushed and grateful spirits before that miracle and mystery of love, and yield ourselves to Him. Trusting to Him, we shall never be solitary any more, for He hath said, 'Lo! I am with you alway.' "—Dr. Alexander Maclaren.

"Death and the curse were in our cup:
O Christ, 'twas full for Thee!
But thou hast drained the last dark drop;
'Tis empty now for me:
That bitter cup love drank it up;
Now blessing's draught for me."

FRIDAY.

"I have trodden the winepress alone."—Isa. 63:3.

"Attention has been too exclusively directed to the physical sufferings of our Lord's passion, and to the mysterious element in His mental passion which made it unique and atoning." We have too much forgotten the sorrows which pressed upon Him as upon us, the same in kind, only infinitely deeper in degree, and hence we have lost some of the sense of reality of our Lord's sufferings of these sorrows. I do not know that any is more sharp than the solitude in which He lived and yet more awful solitude in which He died. Jesus Christ was the loneliest man that ever lived. A little ignorant love and a little outward companionship He had; and soothing and strengthening it was to be surrounded by the affection even of such ignorant friends as the disciples. But there was not a single human being who fully understood or believed Him. There were none who sympathized with His aims, none who could receive His confidences. His thoughts were unshared, His words unintelligible, His life's purpose shrouded in mystery. 'He came to His own, and His own received Him not.' 'His soul was as a star, and dwelt apart.' And so He traveled on, bearing a great burden of love which none would accept; the loneliest soul that ever wore human flesh."—Dr. Alexander Maclaren.

"Oh, teach me what it meaneth—
Thy love beyond compare,
The love that reacheth deeper
Than depths of self-despair!
Yea, teach me, till there gloweth
In this cold heart of mine
Some feeble, pale reflection
Of that pure love of Thine."

SATURDAY.

"If ye then be risen with Christ, seek those which are above."—Col. 3:1.

"There is in a little Church-yard in Switzerland, a simple inscription on the tomb of one who perished in an Alpine accident, which has always appealed to me with singular force—'He died climbing.' He had heard the call of the mountains and lost his life in endeavoring to respond. We have heard the call of the risen Christ, but, unlike the climber, we gain our lives in our sustained attempt to respond worthily. 'Seek those things that are above' is a call to enjoy the largest possible life, and each step upward is into fuller liberty and more perfect manhood. But all this on our part is entirely dependent upon the recognition that the Christ Who is above is the Christ also 'Who is our life.' Nothing less than 'the power of His resurrection' can ever serve to create and maintain in us this determining attitude. Even in nature the most difficult of all motions is the upward. Self-resolve, however well intentioned, is altogether inadequate to such a life as that to which we are summoned by Christ's resurrection. Apart from a partaking of the divine nature, we can never rise to the height of this calling.—Dr. J. Stuart Holden.

SUNDAY.

"Who shall roll us away the stone?"—Mark 16:3.

"How anxiously these women had grappled with the disturbing problem of their own weakness! They yearned to do the last love-service to the dear body of their Lord. 'But who will roll us away the stone? We shall not be able to move it! And no one will be about at that early hour! It will be still dark and the gardener will not have come to his work!' We may take our spices to the grave, but the stone barrier will mock our weakness, and we shall have to turn home again!' And so they fretted and worried, and they saw no way out. 'And they found the stone rolled away from the sepulchre. For the angel of the Lord descended from heaven and came and rolled back the stone from the door.' All their worry had been quite unnecessary. That is only one example of countless others in which we bother about things for which our Father has made ample provision. The angel has already received his commission, and at the appointed time he will remove the stone. If we leave the angel out of our thinking the stone will appear an overwhelming hindrance. But if we think of the angel we can quietly believe that the stone will be rolled away."—Dr. J. H. Jowett.

Paul the Torch-Bearer.

Harry Lauder tells of sitting in his windows and watching the old lamp-lighter in a little Scottish town as he goes about his task of lighting up the village for the night. Just at twilight, from the torch in his hand, the lamps of the one street of the village are lighted one by one. As darkness comes on, the figure of the bent old man becomes invisible, but a steady and ever-longer stream of lights is a growing evidence of the faithfulness with which he is carrying on his work. Thus with the lives of many of our good and great, their work creates a great light which shines farther and farther. The torches of their lives are brightening the path for many other folks. This is the goal toward which the great man strives. His supreme aim is not that his name may be known far and wide, but that his work may make brighter the world for others, many of whom he may never know personally. In such effort, he becomes really great.

This was the spirit of Paul the Apostle, the greatest of torch-bearers, when the influence of his life is judged by the great stream of light which he set shining in many lives. His spirit is best expressed in his own words (Gal. 2:20; Phil. 1:20; Phil. 3:14). And he lived this purpose daily after that vision on the road to Damascus.

Many were the channels through which Paul, the great torch-bearer, shed his light.

First, Through His Own Life and Character.

Paul was a Jew (Acts 22:3), the son of a Pharisee, and brought up under the influence and teaching of the Hebrew religion. His birthplace was Tarsus, a city in Cilicia, celebrated as a school of Grecian literature, so that Grecian culture had its influence on his life in its formative period. He possessed Roman citizenship from birth (Acts 22:28). And so into his life came the three great influences of Grecian culture, Roman citizenship and Hebrew religion. At the feet of Camaliel, the great teacher of the law, was his education completed. Thus exceptional were his advantages of learning and training, but only when his heart was touched, and the power of Jesus Christ changed the direction of his life, could that well-taught youth be of use. Education is a great power, but one that may be misused. Through education, Germany produced a race which threatened the whole world. Through the same force, rightly directed, America is challenged to develop characters which will lead the whole world nearer to God and right. Through the educated man and woman, with the Christian ideal, as through the life of Paul, will the work of the kingdom be carried forward. With enthusiasm, ardent and fearless; with consecration, devout and loyal; with intelligent, tact and a single purpose, Paul lived a heroic life, leaving an influence upon all ages.

Second, Through His Friendship.

To have friends, a man must prove himself friendly. The records of Acts show Paul as a friendly man. With Barnabas and Silas, with Timothy and others, Paul did his work. His letters to Timothy and Philemon are loving communications to friends, for which he was thankful. He had confidence in youth, and sympathy for their interests upon which true, lasting friendship is based. He was eager for their welfare, eager that they make the most of life. Not only into his friends' lives did the light of Paul shine, but on and on, through them to other friends, until the line of lights extended afar.

Third, Through His Travels.

Paul was a "World Christian." His religion knew no limits of neighborhood or family or nation. From Damascus to Jerusalem, and on to Antioch and Phillipi and Athens, to Ephesus and Corinth, even to Rome, he went preaching the Gospel. Sometimes he may have felt a longing to stop and rest, making tents for a season, but every call found him ready, and as the pioneer of the great missionary program of the Church, carrying out the Master's last command, Paul went forth on missionary journeys in spite of difficulties that would have phased most men, in the face of threats and persecution, of shipwreck and imprisonment. No hard situation phased him. The need was ever there, and to Paul that need was the call to him to respond, as Isaiah of old, "Here am I, send me."

Fourth, Through His Writings.

Centuries after his active life ended, the light of that life has been thrown far and wide, through his written word, read by individuals, the part of many a public service of worship, studied by Bible students. His messages to the early Christians have become very real and personal letters to Christians of the twentieth century, for whom their message is just as vital and just as much needed as by those to whom they were written. We cannot conceive of the New Testament without Romans and Phillippians, and the other Pauline epistles. Following the four gospels or records of the life of Jesus Christ, and the Acts, relating Paul's own experiences, they come to emphasize the teachings of Jesus as one who loved Him, taught them. They come to encourage other followers of the Man of Galilee, who might become discouraged facing the greatness of the task. They come to shed forth the light of a great man's life and teaching.

The life of Paul has left its own indelible stamps upon the world. This survey of his life presents him as a youth, skilled in the knowledge of his day; as an enthusiast, throwing his whole life into the effort which engaged his mind and hand; as a true convert to the Lord Jesus on the Damascus Road; as a great missionary ready to travel afar that others might hear the story of Jesus and His love; as an intelligent and appealing writer; as a convincing and tactful speaker; as a Christian friend. The "many-sided Paul" will never be forgotten. With his torch, the word of God, guided by his loving heart, he set aflame many a light throughout this world to shed radiant beams down the way, even to eternity itself.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC.

September 2, 1923.

Topic: Lessons from the Psalms—9 A Singing Psalm.—Ps. 96:1-13.

(Consecration Meeting.)

Thoughts for the Meeting.

Praise God. "All the earth" needs to know Him, that the exhortation of the psalmist may be heeded. Verse 1.

Singing is a part of worship. In public worship, it is used to voice thanks and supplication. In private devotion "from day to day," it may bring the soul nearer to God. Verse 2.

Praise God for His greatness, shown in His creative power (Verse 5), in the beauty and majesty of His world. Verse 6.

Singing is a part of worship, and is helpful. The psalmist remembers other worship as he says "bring an offering, and come into his courts." Verse 8.

Beauty in the Church helps to inspire a spirit of worship. Verse 9.

"Rejoicing" is a part of the Christian spirit. Can a true, loving follower of the Lord Jesus live in world of sadness and woe, or does not, rather, His presence bring gladness and joy? Verse 11.

"Let me write the songs of a nation, and then let who will write its laws."

Of Martin Luther, an angry cardinal exclaimed: "By his songs he has conquered us"! Martin Luther knew the power of music.

"I sing because I'm happy!
I sing because I'm free!
His eye is on the sparrow,
And I know He watches me"!

The Bible is full of music. It formed a part of the Hebrew nation's feasts and holy days, and was heard in the temple worship. The Psalms are the most wonderful hymns of all times. Jesus sang with His disciples after the Last Supper. Throughout the record of Holy Writ are found references to music, even to the great pictures of the heavenly home.

What do the songs we sing mean to us? Are they words only, or the expression of the desire of our hearts? Do we truly live the hymns we sing?

Is the singing in our society worship, or "noise?"

Plans for the Meeting.

Write on the blackboard, or on a chart before the society, the following to describe the songs we need:

"S—ingable and simple.
I—nspirational and instructive.
N—ourishing and novel.
G—ood and godly."

Have a good song leader speak for five minutes on "The Songs We Sing," using the above for a guiding outline.

The music committee of the Christian Endeavor Society should be in charge of this meeting, and through a well-planned song service, with both congregational singing and special numbers, show the very great power of well-chosen and prepared music in the meeting. If possible, tell the stories of one or more good old hymns before singing them. Ask the members to come with the name of their favorite hymn on a slip of paper. Take up these slips at the door, and one or two of the most popular hymns may be sung during the evening.

Questions for Discussion.—What type of hymns mean the most to us? What is your favorite hymn, and why? What can the Sunday School teacher do to help train the child to worship through music and song? What effect has music in the prayer meeting? in a social gathering? What part did music play in the maintenance of morals during the World War?

For the consecration meeting, ask each member to give a Bible verse on song or praise, or the verse of a hymn which has helped them. Follow the roll call with a season on sentence prayers, closed with a consecration hymn, as "I am Thine, O Lord," sung softly as a solo.

A reading for the meeting:

The Old Hymns.

There's lots of music in 'em, the hymns of long ago,
And when some gray-haired mother sings the ones I used to know
I sorter want to take a hand—I think of days gone by;
"On Jordan's stormy banks I stand and cast a wistful eye.

There's lots of music in 'em—those dear sweet hymns of old,
With visions bright of lands of light and shining streets of gold;
And I hear 'em ringing—singing where memory dreaming stands,
"From Greenland's icy mountains to India's coral strands."

They seem to sing forever of holier, sweeter days,
When the lilies of the love of God bloomed white in all the ways,
And I want to hear their music from the old-time meetin's rise
Till "I can read my title clear to mansions in the skies."

We never needed singin' books in them old days; we knew
The words, the tunes of every one—the dear old hymn book through!
We didn't have no trumpets then, no organs built for show.
We only sang to praise the Lor "from whom all blessings flow."

An' so I love the good old hymns, and when my time shall come—
Before the light has left me and my singing lips are dumb—
If I can hear 'em sing them then, I'll pass without a sigh
To "Canaan's fair and happy land, where my possessions lie."

—Frank L. Stanton in the Atlanta Constitution.

Suggested Hymns.—"Rock of Ages," "One Sweetly Solemn Thought," "Abide With Me," "I Think When I Read that Sweet Story of Old," "Take my Life and Let it Be," "Faith of Our Fathers."

RELIGIOUS EDUCATION DOINGS.

The third Sunday in September has been voted by the Eastern Virginia Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention as "Questionnaire Sunday," when each school will be furnished with questionnaire sheets by the executive secretary, Rev. J. H. Lightbourne, of Holland, to be filled out by the young people of the Sunday School. Each sheet contains twelve questions, ten of which are to be answered by the young men and women and boys and girls of the teen age.

Suffolk has a good report for the primary department, of which Mrs. John M. Butler is the superintendent; Mrs. Burwell, the assistant superintendent; Miss Jamie Felton, secretary; Miss Mary V. Barnes, assistant secretary; Mrs. O. S. Smith, treasurer, and Miss Ethel Murphy, pianist. The enrollment is 180, with an average attendance of 105. Children are enrolled at the age of four. There are eight classes, each with a separate teacher, and international graded lessons are used. Promotion day comes the first Sunday in October, after having completed a special course, including the Shepherd Psalm, Beatitudes, Commandments, and the Lord's Prayer. The cradle roll of the Suffolk Christian Sunday School was organized in 1905 with two names, and since then over 600 have been on roll. Nineteen twenty-one was their banner year, reports Mrs. John M. Butler, the superintendent, for that year they had one set of twins, one set of triplets, with an enrollment of 37. The total membership for the year 1923 is 116.

A very interested group of young people studied the book, "Meeting the Master," with Rev. J. H. Lightbourne as instructor, at the Elon Chautauqua. The following is one of the excellent papers turned in by students during the course. This paper was written by Miss Mildred Walters, of Burlington, who took the entire course.

Character of John the Baptist.

John the Baptist was the forerunner of Christ. He lived in the wilderness and came in close contact with nature. Although he lived away from civilization, he knew the moral conditions of the time. This knowledge enabled him to preach better to those who came to hear him.

John was courageous and delivered his addresses fearlessly. He told the people the plain truth and caused them to repent of their sins. The men respected him, although he was frank with them. John told his hearers of their sins in order that they might free themselves from sin. This was part of his work in preparing the way for Christ.

John the Baptist defined all his work in reference to Jesus. When the people thought he was the Messiah, he said he was only a voice of one crying out in the wilderness. They were told to clear the way for Christ.

John was not envious of Christ. He centered all his thoughts, interests and activities around Christ. He remained loyal to Christ and died because of his fearlessness.

VIRGINIA VALLEY CENTRAL CONFERENCE.

This Conference met with the Timber Ridge Christian Church, in Hampshire County, West Virginia, Tuesday, August 14, 1923, at 10 o'clock A. M., and was called to order by the president, Rev. W. T. Walters, D. D., who conducted the morning worship. After the enrollment of delegates followed the welcome address by Rev. A. W. Andes, pastor of the Church, and the response by Rev. R. P. Crumpler for the Conference.

Rev. W. H. Denison, D. D., secretary of stewardship of the General Christian Convention; P. J. Kernodle, managing editor The Christian Sun, and C. D. Johnston, superintendent of the Christian Orphanage, were invited to seats. Then followed the adoption of a program and the report of the executive committee. "Our Achievements for the Past Year," reported and discussed by the delegates of the Conference. Adjourned for dinner.

The devotional services of the afternoon session were led by Rev. W. C. Hook. New delegates were enrolled and the president announced the committees. The annual address was delivered by Rev. J. F. Morgan. It was inspirational, and was asked for for publication. The committee on religious literature reported. The Christian Sun was represented by the managing editor. Dr. W. H. Denison, whose subject was, "The Larger Call to Publicity," delivered a fine address.

The night session was made interesting by Prof. A. L. Hook, who presented views of Elon College. Dr. J. O. Atkinson preached an excellent sermon to a crowded house.

The Wednesday morning worship was conducted by Rev. J. F. Morgan. Roll called, minutes approved, and new delegates enrolled. Rev. J. O. Atkinson, D. D., mission secretary, and Miss Pattie Coghill, field secretary of the Woman's Board, were introduced to the Conference. The committee on moral reform reported; after a general discussion, the report was adopted. The report on education showed a forward step, and a committee was appointed to investigate with reference to the establishing of a Christian college.

The Christian Orphanage was represented by Mr. C. D. Johnston, superintendent, and liberal contribution was made.

The afternoon devotional service was conducted by Rev. W. M. Clem. Following the report on foreign missions, Dr. W. H. Denison delivered a strong address on "The Church's Response to Life Dedication."

The Conference Missionary Association assumed charge of the Conference, reports were read, several new memberships were taken, and officers elected for the next year. The Conference adjourned.

The night session was given over to the Woman's Home and Foreign Mission Board. Mrs. Boyd Richards, of Winchester, presided. "Where Our Money Goes and What it Does" was discussed by Dr. J. O. Atkinson.

Thursday morning, worship was led by Rev. J. F. Morgan. Roll called and minutes approved. After interesting reports from the committees on Christian Endeavor and Sunday Schools, an address on "Religious Education" was made by Rev. W. T. Walters, D. D. "Acknowledgment of Our Stewardship," by Dr. Dennison, was an able address. The treasurer of Conference, Mr. Samuel Earman, submitted his report.

Rev. W. M. Clem was ordained by the presbytery—Revs. J. O. Atkinson, A. W. Andes, and J. F. Morgan. The examination was conducted by the president of the Conference.

The afternoon devotional service was conducted by Rev. L. R. Townsend. Then followed the report of the committee on home missions, and an address by Dr. J. O. Atkinson on "Men and Millions." The report on apportionments was read. Also the report of the committee on resolutions. The Conference adjourned to meet next year with Antioch Christian Church.

The people of Timber Ridge Church sustained their reputation for hospitality. The weather was fine and the Conference a pleasant and busy session.

FRANKLIN CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

The Franklin Christian Church was highly favored two weeks ago by a visit and a sermon by Rev. J. W. Wellons, D. D. Members of other denominations who heard him in other days came and listened with rapt attention to this well-beloved and venerable man of God.

Pope's Chapel.—The protracted meeting started there on the fifth Sunday in July. Miss Isabella Pergerson, age ninety-five years, united with the Church the day the meeting closed.

Mt. Auburn.—Preached there yesterday; 12 united with the Church; 12 baptized; Deacon J. A. Kimball made a good speech for Elon; gave $500 for building. He will report to President Harper. D. A. Long.

CAN YOU ANSWER THESE QUESTIONS?

DEAR FRIENDS:

In trying to feed one hundred children and keep them satisfied, we find it quite a task. But when we read Deutronomy 14th chapter and a part of verses 28-29, we hardly see how any fatherless children could cry for a home, food and shelter and not be satisfied; provided our people would carry out the command God gives us in the following quotation:

"Thou shalt bring forth all the tithes of thine increase the same year and shalt lay it up within thy gates, and the stranger and the fatherless and the widow which are within thy gates (territory) shall come and shall eat and be satisfied; that the Lord thy God may bless thee in all the works of thine hand which thou doest."

Dear friends, do you bring forth the tithe of your income and give, that the fatherless may be fed? We need bread, you have wheat; have you given any, that the children at the Christian Orphanage may be fed? Why not ship us a barrel of flour and help us to place bread at the plates of the little fellows each meal. You have fruit, we have none. Have you ever thought how much joy and happiness it would bring to the children here if you would ship them a barrel of apples? We had a friend to give us a truck load of apples last year. The children ate and were satisfied. We canned more than a hundred gallons, and the children were made happy all through the winter months on account of the big heart of this man. God had blessed him with a good crop; he gave a tithe.

There are so many ways in which you can help us, and it makes the work lighter. Canned fruit and tomatoes always make the children happy. Have you canned any for us this year? We hope you have.

We had five applications in one day last week, all of them beautiful little children. Oh! how I wanted to take them all in my arms and give them a home and let them eat and be satisfied. I wish I had ample funds to give all who apply a home.

I had a good and noble friend to tell me the other day that he prayed for me every night. He said he thought when a man was trying to care for one hundred children, he needed the prayers of God's people. It did me lots of good to know just one of God's faithful servants was praying for me each night. It made me take on new courage, and I walked a little faster on my way to the office. Prayer is power. Great things have been wrought by prayer. Do you remember us in your prayers? CHAS. D. JOHNSTON,
Superintendent.

TWO JOKES AND THE THEOLOGICAL SITUATION.

We are not much on jokes. To some of our brethren we seem especially dry because we are so poor at jokes. The truth is, there are many jokes that we cannot remember, and we are not sorry that we cannot, for we really believe they are not only not worth remembering, but when they are remembered they are harmful rather than helpful generally. At least that is the way they seem to us as we hear them. Do you ask why they seem harmful rather than helpful? Well, in almost every congregation to which a minister may speak there may be—there is likely to be—some heart that is hungry for saving truth, or some burdened one who needs comfort and encouragement. When such an one comes to the house of God, looking for spiritual comfort, and the minister gives out chiefly jokes, why these dear ones go away saying in heart, if not in words: "I ask for the bread of life, and I was given a stone, that which had no help, no sustenance," and there is a disappointment that no joke can ever atone for, and so I do not care to give jokes out in a promiscuous congregation. The truth is, we rarely ever give them out anywhere, for while a joke may be good, we feel like a morsel from the treasure-house of God is infinitely better.

The joke we are now about to give, we believe will help to steady the faith of the weak and do the strong no harm, as we trust.

Joke One.—The scientists would be having a lively time if there were no missing links, and if all the skulls they find could be proven to have come from some animal that died three million years ago; but since things cannot be brought to work that way, it is not so easy for them, as the following will show: Some time ago some one in Patagonia found a strange skull. (?) The man who found it was a scientist of a certain celebrity. The skull was submitted to a committee of scientists of the Buenos Aires and La Plata Museums. It was Prof. J. G. Wolf, of La Plata University, who discovered this skull. He decided it was at least 3,000,000 years old—older in fact than any other fossilized remains of early mankind.

By a strange coincidence it was found that in the section where this skull was found, many other pieces of supposed bones were found, and strange to say, these pieces of supposed bones looked like bones from human bodies. This from the scientist's viewpoint was a rare find, showing, as it was claimed, that it was at least 3,000,000 years old. That, of course, in their estimation, proved the great antiquity of man and so established one more point against the Bible. However, upon further and more careful examination, it was shown that the skull found, which it had been decided was 3,000,000 years old, was in fact a piece of queer-shaped stone, and nothing but stone, and then nothing more was said of the thing being three million years old. Of course, if it was only a piece of stone, it did not matter whether it was three years old or three million years old, since it was established by scientific authority that it was not a skull at all, but simply a piece of stone. It is hardly any harm to laugh at such a joke, especially when it discomfits the supposed scientist on his own ground.

Joke Two.—Now the joke is on the liberals. They are charging the fundamentalists with heresy-hunting. Well, did you ever! They charge the fundamentalists with heresy-hunting when they themselves are sending out the most radical views to almost all the ministers of the land, and yet the fundamentalists are heresy-hunting! Well, then, what are the liberals doing? Shall the pot call the kettle black? The liberals are giving out these radical ideas and sending them by the tens of thousands to all parts of the country, seeking to win converts from the fundamentalists. Oh, consistency, thou art a jewel of great value! Would that these men were as much concerned to win souls to Christ as they are to win converts to their new doctrines, or rather to their new, but doctrinless views. Alas! when will men get in earnest to see the lost saved? One soul is of far greater price than all false doctrines in the universe.

REBUILDING 2,000 CARS IN SOUTHERN RAILWAY SHOPS.

Two thousand rebuilt box cars, with steel underframes, will be turned out of Southern Railway System shops during the next few months. The underframes will be fabricated in Birmingham by the Virginia Bridge and Iron Company, and the work of applying them and of rebuilding the cars will be done in the Southern's own shops throughout the South.

The cars to be rebuilt art of all-wood construction and had been set aside for retirement. Their return to service as modern steel underframe cars, equal in every respect to new cars and suitable for handling any lading, will mean a substantial addition to the Southern's freight-carrying equipment.

The rebuilt cars will be in addition to 9,000 new box cars, purchased by the Southern during 1922 and 1923, of which over 6,000 are already in service and the remainder are contracted for delivery in time for the movement of fall business. The Southern will also soon receive 66 locomotives, 4,865 coal cars, and 200 stock cars which were purchased in the spring.

NEW BOOK.

A Quest for Souls. Published at $1.50 net. Geo. H. Doran Company, New York.

Rev. George W. Truett, D. D., the author, stands among the truly great preachers of America. He was born in North Carolina and was educated at Baylor University. When he was twenty years of age he was principal of a Georgia high school, which position he occupied for two years. Later he served as financial secretary of the Baylor University, and was elected to the presidency of that institution, but declined. He was ordained to the Baptist ministry in 1890, and has been pastor of the First Baptist Church in Dallas, Texas, since 1897. Dr. Truett is possessed of a strong and winsome personality, unusual oratorical powers, and deep religious convictions; his sermons have the vitality and intensity of appeal that mark the master preacher.

THE OLD PREACHER.

All his life
In kindly, gentle ways,
He toiled
To mend mankind:
Preached mercy,
Fed the poor,
Gave oft the welcome hand
To passing strangers,
And in his daily course
Comforted
Sad lives.
But when his hair grew gray
And his thin voice
Reached only to the middle Of the Church,
His congregation
Generously Gave him
The key to the street.

RESOLUTIONS.

The Cypress Chapel Christian Church has been bereaved and sustained a great loss in the death of its oldest deacon, E. R. Harrell, who departed this life on May 12, 1923.

"Precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of His saints."

Therefore, be it resolved:

First, That while we cherish the memory of our coworker, and ever keep his good advice in mind, we bow in humble submission to our Heavenly Father's will, knowing He maketh no mistakes.

Second, That, to his children and grandchildren, we offer our heartfelt sympathy, and point them to Him who doeth all things well.

Third, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to his children, a copy sent to The Christian Sun for publication, and a copy spread upon the minutes of our Church records.

THE SUN'S OBSERVATORY

Coming to Study Prohibition.—

A Scotch commission of seven members, appointed by an unofficial committee of Churches in Scotland, is planning a six weeks' tour of this country for the purpose of investigating prohibition. It is expected that their report will have an effect in the Scottish local option elections in November and December.

The Largest Order for Bibles.—

The largest single Bible order ever placed by any organization in the United States has been given by the American Bible Society to a firm in New York City. A million and a half volumes of Scripture portions, consisting of the gospels of Matthew, Mark, Luke and John, the Book of Acts, and the Book of Proverbs, in English and Spanish, constitute this order. The books are to be uniform in size, sixty-four pages each, with a separate heavy cover, and will be sold throughout the United States and South America for 1 cent each. Before the first deliveries are made, advance orders to the number of 800,000 have been received.

Only One New York in America.—

New York has the honor of being the only city of its name among all the 52,000 post-offices in the United States, sharing this distinction among the large communities with San Francisco and New Orleans. When you address a letter to New York it goes to New York, N. Y. But you must not make this mistake with Washington, for the post-office department reveals that there are twenty-seven others than the one in the District of Columbia. There are also twenty-five Clevelands, twenty-two Buffalos, fourteen Denvers, seven Detroits, six Philadelphias and two Chicagos. Other duplications abound. Franklin is a favorite name, in honor of the founder of the postal service. Thirty-one communities are named for him.

A Man-Killer.—

Not a man-killer only, a killer of children and of women—that is, the automobile with a record of over fourteen thousand deaths in the United States last year. According to the National Bureau of Casualty and Surety Underwriters, only three States—Massachusetts, Maryland and Connecticut—exercise a sufficient degree of supervision. The bureau reports shows further that only fifteen States require the licensing of all motor vehicle operators, that only nine have provided for examinations for chauffeurs' licenses, and that only seven consider it worth while to examine all applicants for the privilege of operating cars. Carelessness and recklessness in the driving of automobiles is the cause of the majority of these deaths. It all indicates that life in this country is exceedingly cheap. To reduce the number of accidents and deaths a way must be found to raise the estimation of the value of human life.

A Profit-Sharing Institution.—

The policy of profit sharing seems to be working well in many industrial establishments. A good example of this is a report just out. The Eastman Kodak Company will this year give approximately $1,700,000 to its employees under the wage-dividend plan. Fifteen thousand persons in all parts of the world will benefit thereby. Stock dividends amounting to $4,500,000 also will be distributed at the same time. In addition to these two items, $200,000 will be paid in stock dividends to employees on 10,000 shares which George Eastman, treasurer, set aside for those who had been with the concern two years or more. Dividends distributed at this time are the regular quarterly payments of $1.25 on each share of common stock, plus 75 cents extra dividend. The preferred holdings will pay 1½ per cent. The wage awards are 13 per cent of the five years' pay of each employee, providing he has been with the company for that period.

The Work of the Gideons.—

The National Association of Gideons held its twenty-fourth annual convention at Oklahoma City, Okla., recently. The three organizers of this order, Messrs. Hills, Nicholson and Knight, are still living. The society has the purpose: (1) The banding together of the Christian travelers for concerted action and mutual help; (2) the evangelization of the unsaved traveling men; (3) a Bible for every hotel room in the United States and Canada, and Bibles in the prisons, hospitals, Young Men's Christian Associations, Young Women's Christian Association, and on some railways in the Pullmans; (4) listing of conditions in hotels that ought to be remedied; assisting in all legislation beneficial to the commercial man and to Christian welfare; and the promotion of fellowship, sociability and good will among the members. All Christian traveling men, members of a recognized evangelical Church in good standing, are eligible and are urged to join.

What Can the Church Do?—

Statesmen of this country and of the world are looking to the Christian Church to bring relief to the troubled nations, which are in such a state of unrest and turmoil. It is interesting to notice that the demands upon the Church are changing very materially. A short time ago the Church was first being called upon most insistently to do something to prevent war, and then it was greatly berated because it had not prevented or stopped the war, as though it had some magic power by which it could impress its will upon the nations and compel them to yield to its behests. Now, however, the statesmen of the world seem to be learning the true mission of the Church, and they are now calling upon it to preach righteousness, peace and good will among men. It is urged to proclaim the doctrine of service, instead of greed. This is asked of the Church in order that men may be given a true conception of what is right and just, and that love and peace may take the place of hatred and war. One reason why the Church has not been able to accomplish more in the past is that it was asked to do what it had no right to attempt. Now, it will no doubt be able to do some really effective work for the welfare of the world.—Exchange.

The Men Who Carry Burdens and Break Down Under Them.—

The Christian Advocate (Nashville) has this to say of the men who lose through overburdening them with great loads for the public good:

"The breaking down of the last two Presidents of the United States at times when they were in the most important stages of their service to the nation has startled the country and drawn attention to the burdens they have been compelled to bear. No such loads were on the shoulders of their predecessors. Our governmental machinery increases in magnitude and complexity through the years. Every interest, domestic and international, waits for the President's consideration. Not only great questions of policy are to be determined by him, but also innumerable petty matters of politics. 'The grade is steep,' as Mr. Harding remarked during the last days he was in Washington city.

"It is clearly apparent that a way must be found for a division of the load. In France, the President, without losing pre-eminence, shares executive duties with a Premier and Cabinet. The French method would not exactly fit the American system, nor is there a plan anywhere in use which would meet our needs. As always, America must find its own path. An executive board of administration, supplementary to the corps of secretaries in the Cabinet, has been suggested. The question will be under consideration till a way of saving the lives of our Presidents is found. In the business world, the chieftains throw responsibility upon subordinates or have associates who are equally responsible with them.

"The pastors of great Churches have found their strength and time insufficient for the extent of the calls upon them. Many of them have succumbed under the load. 'The care of all the Churches' was the wearing tax on St. Paul's heart. Every faithful preacher is bent under such a responsibility. They need help. They crave assistance from their congregations. Not unfair criticism of their insufficient service, but sympathetic aid would save many a brave preacher. From such kindly helpfulness, thousands of pastors are drawing the strength that carries them through the years. Assistants are being provided for them. The Church outruns the government in adjusting itself to the growing demands of the years."

NOTES-PERSONALS

Dr. Harper is expected home from California on Saturday, August 25th.

Rev. J. O. Atkinson, D. D., was last week attending the Southern Pennsylvania Christian Conference. We hope to have a good report from him.

Rev. W. M. Jay, D. D., is expecting soon to remove to Pennsylvania, where he is hereafter to engage in work. The Southern Pennsylvania Conference is his old home, and we understand that is to be his future field.

We regret to hear that Rev. W. W. Staley, D. D., is sick and in the hospital at Winston-Salem, N. C. He had gone to Moore's Springs, N. C., for a little rest, when he was taken sick and had to go to the hospital at Winston-Salem. It is hoped he will soon be himself again and be able to return to his work and family at Suffolk, Va.

Rev. G. C. Crutchfield, who has so well served the Palm Street Christian Church in Greensboro, N. C., for several years as pastor, has tendered his resignation to take effect at the close of the present Conference year, is open to call for work as a pastor in some other field. He is a young man of real promise to the cause, and to Churches desiring a pastor we commend him. His address is Elon College, N. C.

We have received a copy of the August Bulletin of Elon College. It is full of interest, especially to as many as are interested in educational matters. Send for a copy and read it for yourself. By the way, before THE SUN reaches you again, the college will be open and your son or daughter, and maybe both, ought to be here to enter college on September 5th. Let them come in on time.

Bro. Hook, the president of Bethlehem College, Wadley, Ala., is feeling good over a gift of $1,000 in cash for that institution. Brother Hook and his associates were made to rejoice over the arrival of such timely help. The Bethlehem College ought to have the sympathy and help of all of our people who can afford to give such help. Do something to help it in the time of its need. Help now! Send your check to Rev. M. H. Hook, Wadley, Ala. See his letter in this issue.

We understand that the Church at Henderson, N. C., has extended a call to Rev. C. E. Gerringer to become its pastor, and that the call has been accepted. We wish for our brother and the Henderson Church great success in their united labors. Bro. Gerringer is a young man of ability as a preacher of the Gospel. We have heard him only once, but in that sermon he convinced us that he is a man who is not afraid to tell the truth, and on that occasion he did it in fine shape.

Rev. Roy C. Helfinstein, D. D., pastor of the Dover, Del., Christian Church, has undertaken to build a sort of a parish house in connection with the Dover Church, and he has been very fortunate to find the money in such large quantities. His own congregation is wealthy and quite able to build such a house, but Mr. Eldredge R. Johnson, the founder of the Victor Talking Machine Company, has stepped up and given to Dr. Helfinstein the neat sum of $70,000 to complete the undertaking. Of course, Dr. Helfinstein and his people are very happy over such generosity.

The Church at Bethlehem, Nansemond County, Va., is to be dedicated August 26, 1923. Rev. W. W. Staley, D. D., Suffolk, Va., is to preach the dedicatory sermon. The occasion will be one of much interest. Bethlehem has long held a place of unusual advantage, and has wielded much influence in Nansemond County. They have of late built a very handsome Church house, one worthy of the good working metal in that Church and community.

Rev. B. F. Black sends the following message to our people as to his work: "Rosemont and Berea (Norfolk) are doing nicely, adding to the Church roll new members, and there is activity in all departments. We have banner Sunday Schools, considering the hot weather we are having. We also have good Church attendance. I helped Rev. J. N. Cutchin at Damascus in a meeting, and it was a great meeting. We had twelve additions to the Church, nine were sprinkled and four are to be immersed. August 5th was a great day. At 11 A. M., Hon. S. E. Everett and Bro. J. M. Darden were the speakers. It was Elon College Day. We had special music and a good offering." That is a pretty good report. If we might have such reports each week, it would mean very much to our cause.

ANNUAL MEETING OF MISSION BOARD.

The Mission Board of the Southern Christian Convention is called to meet in regular annual session at the Suffolk Christian Church Wednesday, September 12th, 9:30 A. M. Any person having matters to come to the attention of this board should put same in proper form and place in the hands of the secretary not later than September 5th.

Very respectfully,
J. E. WEST, Chairman.
Suffolk, Va.
J. O. ATKINSON, Secretary.
Elon College, N. C.

Here is a good example for many others. Bro. I. W. Pritchard, Chapel Hill, N. C., says: "I am sending you a check for $2.00 to pay for THE SUN for one year, to be sent to ———." That is the kind of friends we delight to have, for THE SUN, not merely to get their money, for while their money is good and greatly helps our publisher, but we are glad of these friends for other and even better reasons. Such friends not only help THE SUN financially, but they help some of the most worthy people in the Church. Think of sending a religious paper into the homes of parents and children for a whole year, and then if the Church paper is exerting the right influence over people, then who can tell what may come to them as the result of reading the Church paper for a whole year. We believe those two dollars, under the blessings of God, may be the best investment our brother has made in many a day for the good of the cause of Christ. Who can tell what may come out of that family as a result of THE SUN going into its sacred circle for a whole year? Who can say that there will not be a preacher of the Gospel to come out of that family, or a missionary, or a Christian worker, or it may be several good, honest and earnest and faithful members of the Church. If there are others who would like to invest some of their money in such prospects in families who are not now in a position to take THE CHRISTIAN SUN, we are ready to serve them. Think about it, and if you can invest $2.00 in a better way, why let us know what it is, and then go ahead and invest the money in a way that is better, more promising, for doing good than in sending THE SUN into worthy and needy families. Years ago, some one sent a Church paper to Rev. G. W. Truett, and he says it had a wonderful influence in his life, and now he is no longer the small boy who needs help, but he is said to be the ablest Baptist preacher in this country, if not in the world. There are many instances in which some one else might take such an opportunity and get similiar results. Will you try it? Tell the Lord what you are willing to do, and then do it.

3,000 THE CHRISTIAN SUN. 9,000

There are between 8,000 and 10,000 families represented in the Southern Christian Convention, which means if a copy of THE CHRISTIAN SUN is placed in each family, a possible subscription list of 9,000 copies. There are now circulated approximately 3,000 copies, or about one-third of our Church families are reached. Hence, there should be added to the list 6,000 new subscribers in order to have the Church paper placed in every family.

Now, the great personal effort required to do this must be rewarded. To compensate this labor, if premiums are given, it will take 20 automobiles, or 40 radio machines, or 50 to 60 talking machines, or 90 to 100 typewriters, or 200 to 300 watches, etc. Don't you think you will have a good opportunity to secure one of these prizes?

But you need not confine your solicitations to your Church alone. You have friends in other denominations who will gladly assist you by giving a subscription. Make your appeal in a straightforward manner. True men and women are interested in the success of their friends and will lend a helping hand.

PREMIUMS GIVEN FOR NEW SUBSCRIPTIONS.

The subscription price of THE SUN, recently reduced, is now $2.00 per year—two six-month subscriptions at $1.00 each count as one year. One person may take as many as he may wish for himself or for others. Those in arrears should pay up and assist the solicitor by taking an advanced subscription.

SCHEDULE.

1. To one securing 350 Subscriptions, a Ford Touring Car will be given ($298.00 f. o. b. factory).
2. To one securing 150 Subscriptions, one Radio Equipment—Westinghouse R-6 Set, complete with batteries, tubes, phone and aerial equipment, the price of which is $150.00.
3. To one securing 100 Subscriptions will be given one Victrola ($75.00), or cash prize of $50.00.
4. To one securing 75 Subscriptions, one Remington Portable Typewriter, with standard keyboard and case ($60.00 f. o. b. Richmond).
5. To one securing 30 Subscriptions, one Gentleman's or one Lady's Wrist Watch will be given, guaranteed by Jahnke Bros., Jewelers, of Richmond, Va. ($30.00).
6. For 25 Subscriptions, one Gentleman's or Lady's Watch ($25.00), likewise guaranteed by Jahnke Bros.
7. To one securing 20 Subscriptions, one Standard or International Dictionary will be given.

To all authorized solicitors will be paid 10 per cent commission on all renewals, and 20 per cent on all new subscriptions. Those receiving prizes will not be entitled to commission.

Two renewal subscriptions will be counted as one in determining the winners of prizes.

Send in your name and address and receive the necessary report blanks and receipt books.

The contest will close on October 31, 1923.

Remittances made on this campaign are to be net. Post-office money orders constitute a safe plan of remittance.

The Editor's Pulpit

A Weekly Presentation of Truth for the Christian Life.

THE CONDITION OF FELLOWSHIP WITH GOD.

"This, then, is the message which we have heard of Him, and declare unto you that God is light, and in Him is no darkness at all. If we say that we have fellowship with Him, and walk in darkness, we lie, and do not tell the truth; but if we walk in the light as He is in the light, we have fellowship one with another, and the blood of Jesus Christ His Son cleanseth us from all sin." —1 John 1:5-7.

False teachers are always busy when they get a chance to work among the disciples of Christ. It has always been so, at least for two thousand years. The first epistle of John was written in an effort to offset the work of false teachers who were seeking to undermine the faith of believers. Then, as now, a false teacher delighted to get the attention of the two follower of Jesus. His purpose was to get such an one to turn away from Jesus—away from the Christian faith.

In the days of John, there was a man known as Nicolas, who taught that a child of God could live in sin and yet be in fellowship with God. Walking in darkness means living in sin. That is just what Nicolas was teaching the people, but when John knew that to be a fact, he lost no time in showing the disciples that Nicolas was a fraud and a deceiver. If you will turn to 1 John 1:6, you will see that it was just this doctrine John was repelling. Church history also tells us that such a man as Nicolas, who taught this abominable doctrine, lived in the latter days of John, the beloved disciple.

John boldly declares the falsity of this doctrine. He declares that "God is light, and in Him is no darkness at all." He not only discredits the teachings of Nicolas, but he goes a step further and tells them that if they wish fellowship with God the true way to get it, viz: "But if we walk in the light as He is in the light, we have fellowship, one with another, and the blood of Jesus Christ His Son cleanseth us from all sin."—1 John 1:7.

If you wish to live without sin, then walk not in darkness, but in the light, even as Jesus walks in the light, and then we shall have fellowship one with another, and the blood of Jesus Christ will cleanse us from all sin. That is the way of the true life in Christ.

John's first proposition is that God is light, and in Him is no darkness at all. Then he declares that if we think we can live in sin and yet have fellowship with God, we are lying. There can be no doubt that John meant just what he said. Then, in verse 7, he undertakes to tell how we may attain unto fellowship with God—by walking in the light, as He is in the light, and when that is done we get fellowship.

John here presents the way to get clear of all sin, walk in the light and keep under the blood of Jesus. These two processes keep us clean. He does not say that we are thus cleansed, but that the blood of Jesus cleanseth us from all sin. It is not a past tense, but the present—it cleanses us—it keeps on cleansing us as long as we walk in the light. Many believe this cannot be, but that is what the word says. Let me illustrate the thought. There is an old castle in Europe, long since deserted. Visitors find the cobwebs and dust plentiful except at one point; but there the floor is always clean, and yet no one lives there and of course no one keeps the floor at that one point clean. How is it accounted for? Well, the point that is always clean is between two windows. The house being deserted, these two windows are always open and the wind blowing through these windows keeps the floor swept and clean. Now, if the blowing of the wind can keep a floor clean all the time, why may not the blood of Christ keep clean the heart whose possessor is always walking in the light? Certainly He can keep clean continually the life that is given to Him by walking in the light.

It, therefore, seems perfectly plain that the way of fellowship with God is the way of light, not darkness.

Here we enter controversial grounds, but by His grace I mean to tell the truth as John gives it to us. John does say that the blood of Jesus cleanseth us from all sin. However, it is a fact that in the very next verse he says: "If we say that we have no sin, we deceive ourselves, and the truth is not in us." To most people, this is a great mystery, but seen from the right viewpoint and the difficulty disappears at once. Consider what John is doing. He is refuting the teachings of Nicolas. And what did Nicolas teach? He taught that we might live in sin and yet be in fellowship with God. John has just been telling the disciples how they might have fellowship. He said they might do so by walking in the light and living under the cleansing blood of Jesus—that this would cleanse them from all sin. Then how can John at once declare that if they should say that they have no sin, they would only deceive themselves? Why, he meant if they should say, as Nicolas did, that they had no sin, while walking in darkness, that that would be a lie; but if they walk in the light and under the blood of Jesus Christ, that then they would be cleansed from all sin. He knew that no man saying he was living in darkness could say that he had fellowship with God, but He also knew that if one should walk in the light of God and keep under the blood of Jesus Christ, the Son of God, then he would have no sin.

Now, do you not see the difference between the statements of Nicolas and John? Nicolas was claiming that he could walk in darkness and still be in fellowship with God, but John boldly declared that if a man should make such a claim as having fellowship with God while he was walking in darkness, that such a man was lying, and then at once he proceeded to tell how a man might be in fellowship. He might do it by living in the light of God and under the blood of Jesus Christ —that cleanses, does it continually, as long as he walks in the light and keeps under the blood. Now, there is nothing contradictory in the statements as made in verse 7 and verse 8.

I know there is a class of people who say that this view is too good to be true; that the blood of Jesus cleanses us from all sin. They think that no matter what the blood of Christ does for us, some sin must remain in the life. Well, I do not know any better than to take John's word for it, for he wrote under the guidance of the Holy Spirit. Let us apply the same principle along another line. Robert is sick with a fever. The doctor comes and says: "Robert, old fellow, you have a fever at 103. That is pretty severe, but we will try to break it, and real soon." He treats him for the fever. Next day he comes back and says, "Well, Robert, you still have fever. Let me try again to break it." He again treats him for fever. The next day the doctor comes in, but the fever is still doing its work. But the next time he comes he takes his temperature and then says: "Robert, your fever is all gone, but if you say you have no fever you will lie, and the truth is not in you." Why, how could John lie by saying he now had no fever, if the doctor had told him the truth? He could not. Take the two men, one cleansed from all sin by the blood of Christ, and the other a man who had been cured entirely of the fever by the doctor. Now, if it be wrong for one to say that he had no sin, would it not be just as wrong for the other man to say he still had a fever, when he did not? If one had been cleansed of all sin by the blood of Jesus and the other had been cured of all fever, why should one say he had no fever and the other not be allowed to say that he had no sin? Can you tell why?

FIELD NOTES.

People's Christian Church, of Dover, Del., is fortunate in having one of its laymen who, because of his ministerial initiative, is able to rise to the emergencies that occur in the absence of the pastor.

Mr. Herman C. Taylor is a deacon in the Church and a teacher of the large Bible class in People's Church Sunday School, and also was granted ministerial licentiate privileges at the last session of the Eastern Virginia Conference. He is an active newspaper man, corresponding for many of the large metropolitan dailies, but always finds time for any service he can render the Church.

While the pastor, R. C. Helfenstein, was away on his vacation, Mr. Taylor supplied the pulpit of People's Church to good acceptance each Sunday, and, as all but one of the Protestant ministers of the city were away on their vacations on the day designated by President Coolidge and the Governor of the State as memorial day for the late President Harding, in response to urgent solicitations of Dover citizens, Mr. Taylor arranged what all who attended declared to be a most appropriate memorial program in honor of the lamented President, whose death the entire nation and the world at large so deeply mourns.

Mr. Taylor had charge of the program, and was assisted by the pastor of the M. E. Church, who was the only minister not out of the city, each delivering a short eulogy on the life of the deceased President.

The three proclamations calling for the service were read—one by President Coolidge, by Captain H. H. Hansen, representing the American Legion; that of Governor Denney, by his secretary of State, Hon. A. R. Benson; and that of Mayor John C. Hopkins, of Dover (a member of People's Christian Church), was read by Rev. Wilson C. Moore, of the Christian denomination.

A large, life-size bust portrait of President Harding, draped with a handsome silk American flag and a black streamer, was placed in full view of the audience on a table in the chancel, just below the pulpit. This was greatly admired by all.

Chief Justice Pennewill, of Delaware's Supreme Court, and numerous other distinguished citizens were in attendance at the service.

HOW MAY WE REACH TRUTHFUL CONCLUSIONS?

In an editorial career of almost thirty years, we have again and again been rebuked for controversy. There are some excellent people who do not like controversy at all, nor do they like to have their Church paper indulge in controversy. But is this the right attitude? Is it even an excusable attitude in a time like this, when almost every fundamental truth of the Scriptures is not only called in question, but in many instances boldly denied? Suppose we should fall into line with this attitude, what would become of the faith of many of our people?

We unhesitatingly affirm that there has not been an age in the Christian era when men have not contended for the truth of the Bible. Even the Scriptures themselves have been given to us in the face of much opposition. From the days of Jesus till this day, there has been a sharp contention for the truth as He gave it to us. Paul, the apostle to the Gentiles, was perhaps the greatest controversialist of the Christian era. His writings are largely controversial. Not controversial merely for the sake of controversy, nor yet simply that he might show his ability as a debater, but that he might stand for the truth and show people the way of life. While his writings are controversial, they were much more than controversial—they were deeply spiritual and full of instruction.

Let us for a moment suppose Paul had not been a controversialist, what would have become of the truth of salvation by grace? So far as human judgment can discern the facts in the case, if Paul had not been controversial the Judaizing teachers would have overrun the early Church with the thought of salvation by law. What would have been the outcome of such a situation? So far as we can see, it would have meant the covering up of that truth with the error of salvation by law and works, and that would have meant the undoing of the Gospel dispensation, and the glory of the cross would have disappeared from the walks of men. Paul's writings are deep and spiritual, but they are none the less controversial, and they are controversial to the glory of God. Paul was a defender of the truth, and just as long as the truth was assailed, just that long he must stand for it against all opposers, and that he did; and that, it seems to us, all true ambassadors of the Gospel of Christ must do or forfeit their claims to the rewards of the true ministers of the Gospel.

It is true that in our day another phase of the Gospel is assailed rather than the one assailed in the days of Paul, but that in no way relieves the defender of the truth from the duty of standing against the onrush of error. Suppose all ministers of the Gospel should today listen to these dear people who are so opposed to controversy, what would be the outcome of the present conflict? As in the days of Paul, the most precious truths of the Gospel would be swept into oblivion and the people of God would be thrown into a state of darkness. In Paul's day the controversy was over the truth of grace instead of law. In our day the fight is over the same Gospel, but over different phases of its truth. The enemies of the Gospel have grown even bolder in our day, and now the fight is over the vitals of truth, of saving truth, and shall we meekly submit and allow these truths to be covered up by the rubbish of error? We say, "No"! Rather, let every man put on his fighting armor and go forth to battle for truth and righteousness.

Look here, brother, do you rightly grasp the situation at this time? Do you realize that it is not the professed infidel who is opposing the truth of the Gospel today? It may surprise you to be told that the conflict against Christianity is ten times more active now than it was in the days of Paul. Then it was by men who taught the law as the power of God unto salvation, rather than salvation through Jesus Christ, but now the fight is waged against the same Gospel by men who profess the name of Jesus. Many of them are men who stand in the pulpit Sunday after Sunday, and they declare against the truth of the Scriptures; not merely against one truth, but against the vital and fundamental truths of Christianity. For instance, they repudiate the supernatural in Christianity, they repudiate the miracles of the Bible, they denounce the virgin birth of Jesus Christ, they ridicule the divinity of Jesus Christ, they declare that the inspiration of the Scriptures is a mere notion, not sustained by the facts in the case; and, growing bolder as they go, they finally denounce the resurrection of Jesus Christ, and as a last hard blow, as they think, they assert that the Bible itself is not trustworthy, not reliable, and, as an evidence, they claim the Book of books is largely mixed with error, and cannot be relied upon as a guide in Christian truth, thus sweeping out of existence much of the system of divine truth and leaving man without God and without hope in the world—it is true they do not in so many words say that they leave man without God and without hope in the world, but we all know that when they, with one terrible stroke, take away the divinity of Christ, the supernatural in Christianity, the inspiration of the Scriptures, the virgin birth of Christ and the miracles of the Bible, we know if all that is error, then man has no hope for everlasting life.

Now, beloved brethren, if we are confronting such a situation as this today, what will become of the cause we love, if we all shut our mouths and say not a word in defense of the truth? If no man stand for the divine character of Jesus Christ, but allow these enemies of the cross to go on affirming that Jesus is a bastard, that His Gospel is not reliable, that there is nothing supernatural in Christianity, and finally that the Bible is not reliable, what I say shall become of the truth if we all shut our eyes to the truth and allow these men to go on destroying the truth as held by the people of God? If you think that we have not correctly stated the case, we challenge any man who is not in sympathy with these enemies of the cross to show that we are in the wrong—that there is no ground for any such assumption as what we are claiming as the situation in Christianity of today. If ever the Church has faced a serious conglomeration of error and truth, it is today, and the mixture is extensive. It has already divided the forces of the Church on the human side, and is sweeping on to make, if possible, yet greater destruction for the downfall of the cause of Christ. With such an outlook before us, there are brethren, men of fine character and of real ability, who are standing with hands off, and now and then they are saying things which do not compliment the men who are doing their best to stand for the truth—they rather reflect on the correctness of the stand they have taken for the cause of Christ. Because they have influence of a certain kind, the dear people listen to them and say: "Well, if Bill Policy is not right, then I do not wish to know anything more of the matter." Exactly, and you take such a stand for a man who was never known to make a determined stand for a great issue, when it involves his personal populatrity with the people.

As we see this matter, it is not a matter of personal popularity—it is rather a matter of boldly standing for the truth as it is in Christ. We very much dislike to take a stand against brethren if we can avoid it and be true to God and His Word. We may alienate the love and appreciation of some dear people by standing for the truth; we have done so in other days, and we may do so again, and if necessity requires it, let it be, for we had rather offend the whole circle of acquaintance by standing for the truth than to offend God, Almighty God, by failing to stand for His truth even once, when there was a real call for standing. There is something better than to have the approval of our fellows—it is to have the loving approval of God Himself for having been true to the truth in a moment of danger.

In the epistle of Jude we are urged in the third verse "to contend earnestly for the faith once delivered unto the saints." Brethren, to contend for the faith is just as important today as it was when Jude spoke those words. By His grace we hope to stand firm for the right till the end has come, and then we will go into His presence and get the reward He may have for us. If that reward shall be condemnation for the stand we have taken, then we shall find more solace in an innocent conscience than we could find if we had been untrue to what we believed was truth and right. Brethren, to us the Bible means what it says, and the cause it presents for our endorsement and service is more than all human applause. Till He shall show us that we are in error in the stand we may take, we mean to stand, for if there was ever a day in the Church of Christ when true and faithful friends were in demand for the work of Christ among men, it is now; and by His grace we hope to stand till the end. If others differ from us, that is their responsibility, but, as for us and our house, we hope to be true to the truth and to the God of truth, and if to do so shall bring disaster to us personally, we hope to have grace sufficient to take it as our part in the great transaction and murmur not.

How may we reach truthful conclusions? By following closely the Word of God under the illumination of the Holy Spirit, and may the Lord show us His way.

Of course, controversy for the sake of disputing is to be despised, and controversy such as may be of a personal nature is to be shunned; but controversy for the sake of saving truth, that is to be honored and appreciated as a means of establishing the cause of Christ in the world.

Would you like to see what Paul had to say about controversy as a minister of the Gospel? Then here it is:

"But even after that we had suffered before, and were shamefully entreated, as ye know at Philippi, we were bold in our God to speak unto you the Gospel of God with much contention. For our exhortation was not of deceit, nor of uncleanness, nor in guile: but as we were allowed of God to be put in trust with the Gospel, even so we speak, not as pleasing men, but God, which trieth our hearts. For neither at any time used we flattering words, as ye know, nor a cloke of covetousness: God is witness; nor of men sought we glory, neither of you, nor yet of others, when we might have been burdensome, as the apostles of Christ." (1 Thess. 2-6.)

Let us notice that Paul preached the Gospel with much contention. He felt he had been put in trust with the Gospel, and therefore, as a servant of God, he must be true to that Gospel, even if he had to contend for it in the presence of its enemies. He was not a man-pleaser, nor one to flatter itching ears. He spoke plainly and uncompromisingly the truth as God had given it to him, and then when the end came he said he was ready to be offered up, and from that bold promontory of faith he not only called God to witness, but he saw his crown and went to wear it in the presence of his Lord and Master. The approval of God is ten thousand times better than the approval of vain man.

ERROR IS SO PERSISTENT.

If you wish to get a difficult task on your hands, undertake to handle error. As long as you simply talk about error, you will not necessarily know its power, nor the tenacity with which it holds any territory it may have gained. A bad man may not be willing for you to talk of his bad qualities to his neighbors, but he may spare you if you go no further. If you wish to get trouble on your hands, then set to and try to move the bad man from the neighborhood, and then you will find something of what his strength is—and you will not move him either readily or without trouble. He will fight, and fight hard, before he will consent to go from the scene of conflict, and fortunate you will be if you get him away at all.

As illustrating what we mean, you allow some man to come into your community and let him sow the seed of error and allow the seed to germinate. Then you will have a task if you ever uproot and remove them. Error has sticking qualities. That is one side of the reason for its staying qualities. The other is the fact that the average person does not seem to realize that there is danger in the presence of growing error, and so it seems not at all troubled about its removal, and so long as people do not realize that growing error is dangerous, they will not make any special effort to remove it, and of course it will not go of itself, and there you are! What can be done to remove error from a community? The first thing to be done is to arouse the people who are not the special friends to error, and induce them to get into the fight against it, and to do so with a hearty good will.

The Christian Endeavor World has sensed the situation from afar, and it points out the fact that so many have little or no concern as to what error may do, or may not do, just so long as you do not insist on doing something to destroy it It points out a significant instance as follows:

"In a recent popular address, Bishop Hughes declared, 'I have no confidence in talk about the brotherhood of man that is not based on the major promise of the Fatherhood of God.' We do not get close to one another till we get close to God. Man is not the magnet, but God is. Christ lifted upon the cross draws all men to Himself, and so to one another. We love because He first loved us—love Him and love other men. That is why the care of the sick in hospitals, of the old, of the orphans, of the insane, of the poor, all have been developed in Christian countries. That is why Christian countries have freed the slave and alleviated the condition of the prisoner. And that is why, on the other hand, there is so much human wretchedness and so little human brotherhood in heathen lands. We have only one thing to do, namely: to get people to love God with all their hearts. The love of their neighbors as themselves will follow as a consequence."

That is a good case in question. There are many people who are clamoring for the brotherhood of man, never laying any stress on the Fatherhood of God. But how can we have the brotherhood of man without the Fatherhod of God? There can be no brotherhood without fatherhood. It requires the same father to have a family of brothers. Not only so, but there may be a brotherhood in the flesh without a brotherhood in the spirit. That is just what many are refusing to admit. They claim the brotherhood of man on the basis of the creative act of God. The fact that God is the Creator of all men does bind us together as brothers in the flesh, but that fact does not bind all men into the same brotherhood spiritually. The brotherhood of man, from the spiritual standpoint, is just as dependent on the spiritual Fatherhood of God as is the brotherhood of the flesh. There can be no brotherhood, spiritually, till there is a spiritual father. Jesus Himself said on one occasion, in speaking to certain people: "Ye are of your father the devil, and the lusts of your father ye will do." Now, does any man of real sound, practical sense believe that these people to whom Jesus was speaking when he said, "Ye are of your father, the devil," were the brothers of the people to whom He was speaking when He said: "Ye are the light of the world?" Does any man believe that a bad and wicked man can be the light of the world? And can he be the brother of the men who are saved through grace? If brotherhood is dependent on fatherhood, then there is no way to have the wicked men of this world to be the brothers of the men who are the light of the world but to have God be the Father of the wicked.

This plea of the brotherhood of man, as we ordinarily have it, is only an effort to blot out the distinction between the Christian and the man who has never known God in the forgiveness of his sins. It is a trick of the devil to advance his kingdom at the expense of the kingdom of Jesus Christ. The world is right when it declares that brotherhood is based on Fatherhood—it is based on fatherhood of the same father. Now, it seems almost impossible to think of a man who would claim that Bob Ingersoll and Chas. H. Spurgeon were brothers because God is the Creator of them both. God is the Creator of them both, but not the spiritual Father of them both. Is God the Father of Tom Paine and also of Phillips Brooks? And are these two men brethren spiritually, just because God created them both? Surely not—never! They have no spiritual elements in common, and therefore they cannot be brethren. In their first birth, they had common elements alike, but when they were born again, as Jesus said they must be, if one was born again and the other was not, then they could never be brethren till Tom Paine should be born again, or born from above. If Phillips Brooks was born again and Tom Paine was not, there could be no brotherhood, because one of them had been born into the kingdom of God and the other had not, and therefore they could not be brothers. Let us learn to talk of such matters with sense. It is no credit to a man to talk without sense, no matter how much sense he is supposed to have. The more sense a man has, the less credit it is to him to talk without sense, to put forth claims which cannot be supported by truth.

MUSIC THAT IS MUSIC.

Rev. Livingston Johnson, editor of the Biblical Recorder, has been traveling in Europe this summer, and he has written some very interesting letters to his paper. He attended the World Congress of the Baptists in Stockholm, Sweden. In telling us of the many good things he saw and heard, he tells of the music he heard there, and it is so good and wise we are reproducing that part of one of his letters as follows:

"At the conclusion of the sermon, the Swedish choir sang. I am not an expert on music, but I have never heard such music as that choir rendered just after that great sermon. It was more like what I have always imagined must be the music of angelic choirs than anything I have ever heard on earth. They sang that song without instruments, though at the evening service they had a fine orchestra to accompany the choir. The Southern negroes sang, 'It's Me, it's Me, it's Me, O Lord, Standing in the Need of Prayer,' and as usual their singing captivated the crowd. The Lettish choir sang at night, as did the Swedish choir, but of all the music we have had so far, and very much of it has been soul-stirring, nothing has approached the singing of the Swedes.

"Most of the directors of Gospel music whom I have seen perform could learn valuable lessons from the Swedish director. It happened that he was very near me as he led his choir. Indeed he stood on a chair which he placed on my table. He did not say a word to the choir, but directed them by the movement of the baton, as it used to be called. There was no movement of the body, no jumping up and down, no monkey action of any kind, no bawling out for everybody to sing, no attempt to be funny, no calling upon certain sections to sing one verse and this to be followed by the whole congregation on the chorus. One of the songs they sang was the 'Glory Song.' When the director desired the congregation to join in the chorus he simply turned from his choir, which was on the platform, to the great congregation, and beat time for them. No announcement was necessary, as all joined heartily in the chorus. Every movement of his hands was graceful, and his face was radiant. The whole was done in a dignified and reverential way, and it was worship in song, and not buffoonery."

We commend the above to our people generally, but especially to some leaders of song. We have seen choir leaders make a monkey of themselves, and they really seemed to enjoy the privilege of making themselves ridiculous before the congregation, as well as before the choir. We know some choir leaders who can clearly beat the monkey in making themselves ridiculous. We only wish that they could read what Bobbie Burns said of a certain lady who was all unconsciously attracting much attention to herself by the movements of a certain little creature which was rather active on the lady's hair. It was after seeing such a sight that he wrote that couplet—

"O wad some gift gie us—
To see ourselves as others see us."

We commend those lines to certain choir leaders. Brethren, you may not care for yourself, but do spare the people, who must look upon you while you assume to lead the people in the worship of song.

Here is a paragraph worthy of your best consideration. Read it with care: "The Lord's 'shall come' speaks of certainty and reliability. Reliability because He says it, and certainty because His 'shall' is beyond the impossibility of non-fulfillment. When our Lord speaks, there is no 'may be' of uncertainty, nor 'perhaps' of probability, nor 'speculation' of doubt, nor 'conjecture' of human thought, nor an 'hypothesis' of ambiguity, nor the 'unequivocation' of dubiousness, nor the 'ambiguousness' of vagueness. When He speaks, we have certainty for our faith, and the reliability of what He is, for His Word can never pass away. Therefore, let us be strong in faith, faithful in testimony, ardent in love, pure in heart, zealous in work, fervent in prayer, righteous in act, and watching for Him, our Lord who 'shall come,' and will not tarry."

The following from the Christian Century is of interest: "It may well be doubted whether there is a Church in this country with so remarkable a record as that of St. Andrew's Episcopal Church, of Meriden, Conn. In seventy-three years the Church has had only two rectors. The present parish head is Rev. Arthur T. Rasdall, who has just rounded out forty years of service."

ELON LETTER.

The record shows that about one-third of a freshman class will graduate from college. Why do the two-thirds fall by the way?

Financial reasons immediately suggest themselves, because it costs money to go to college. My observation, however, inclines me to the conviction that lack of money is oftentimes a help rather than a hindrance in securing a college education. In some cases, where the labor of son or daughter is required to support the home, this reason holds, but for the aspiring, hard-working student, straitened circumstances do not bar the way to the completion of a college course. Fully one-third of those who holy Elon diplomas have, in one way or another, contributed toward paying their own expenses. Colleges offer various means of self-help, and also have loan funds for deserving students. To borrow money to meet expenses, later paying it back, is a most satisfactory way to earn one's way through college, because it enables one to have time for the campus activities and at the same time teaches the sterling virtue of rigid economy. Not how much earning power we have, but how we spend our earnings is the determining factor between financial success and failure in life.

Too much money will oftener prevent a student from graduating than too little. The student whose parents, out of misplaced affection, supply him with too large an outlay of money becomes oftentimes flabby. Because money comes easy to him, he is likely to conclude that passing marks will also come easy. He fails to apply himself properly and is caught, to his chagrin, by the 60 per cent rule, which means that unless he passes at least 60 per cent of his work he is excluded from college. An allowance is the best plan for parents able to defray their son's or daughter's expenses—an allowance to which, by mutual agreement, the son or daughter will rigidly adjust expenditures. It is not the charges for room, board, fees, and tuition that make college education expensive, but the incidental items, which many a student cannot indulge, that undermine health and character and make graduation doubtful for most of the students in a modern college. These are matters which manifestly no college can control. There are few excuses here at Elon for the needless expenditure of money, but even here parents at times complain that they do not mind the necessary expenses. What they cannot afford is the incidentals, the non-essentials. Firmness at this point on the part of parents will save many a son or daughter to a college degree. Indulgence will mean failure. The policy along this line should be determined in advance of entrance to college.

Some, too, are eliminated from college because of low mentality. Here again the number is small. Failure to apply one's self diligently, rather than low mentality, accounts for most failures to pass college courses. The plodding student with good habits of study is welcome to any college. Such a student oftentimes distinguishes himself and his Alma Mater during his work years. Witness Senator Vance, in North Carolina.

Most of the two-thirds who drop out without graduation come to college from improper motives. They have observed that college graduates move in the best social circles, and they have social ambition. They have heard about the big athletic events of the college campus, and they want excitement. They have heard that college graduates supply the bulk of the nation's leadership, and they want to be leaders, though unwilling to pay the cost of leadership. Some few are morally unfit to remain on a college campus.

The world needs trained men and women of Christian character. College administrators and parents must co-operate with our youth, that more of them may be enabled to complete the arduous task of college graduation. Human experience has found no discipline so able to knit character for the strain of leadership and service through leadership comparable to the four grilling years of the college curriculum. I trust that Elon's incoming freshman class may come with high purpose and noble consecration. The college can and will give itself unreservedly to the life interests of such promising leaders of human progress.

W. A. HARPER.

BETHLEHEM LETTER.

"A friend in need is a friend indeed." I believe I realize the truth of this statement more than ever before. A few days ago, when I received a letter from Dr. Harper, enclosing a check for $1,000 from a friend, it came just at a time when our financial demands were most urgent. What the college needs is a few more liberal friends like this one, who have money to give and believe in helping a worthy cause.

We are very thankful to Dr. Harper for stating our case so successfully. It does us good to know that the college has friends who not merely think of it occasionally, but are really working for its welfare.

We are still pushing the work on the building to get it finished in time for opening, September 12th. The plasterers are now busy in the building and the carpenters who do the finishing woodwork are following close behind them. The wiring for the electric lights is nearly completed, the heating plant has been ordered and part of it has already arrived.

People are already beginning to move into Wadley to take advantage of the increased educational advantages which are being offered. Empty houses are being repaired and rented, new houses are being built, and nearby farms are being bought or rented by people who want to educate their children. Arrangements have been made to "truck" children into Wadley from nearby communities. Some of these will go to the public school and some to the college.

I want all the members of the Christian Church to feel that Bethlehem College is our college and give it their whole-hearted support. Only a comparatively few of the subscriptions to the college have been paid yet, and this is a time when we need the money very much. We will appreciate it very much if those who can do so will pay up at once. Or if you have not subscribed anything yet, we would be very glad to have you send us a cash donation or a subscription.

This is a very crucial time in the history of the college, and we earnestly ask all Christian people to remember us in their prayers and offerings.

M. W. HOOK.

A QUESTION ASKED BUT NOT ANSWERED.

The writer is in receipt of a letter from one of our interested and loyal laymen in which this question is asked: "Where is the fire that our old ministers used to have, and the burning desire for lost men and women to be saved, and for our principles, which are beyond question the greatest and most universally accepted that any Church has ever offered, where they have been expounded by the above types of men? Look at our strong men who are trying to get out of the ministry."

I wonder if other laymen share the anxiety expressed by my correspondent. And, then, I am wondering if we of this day are expounding the polity and setting forth the principles and position of the Christian Church as did our fathers. Are we as devoted to these principles as the preachers of past generations, or do we think it wiser to keep our position and principles in the background? Evidently our correspondent has raised a question which the writer cannot answer, but which every pastor will have to answer for himself. I thought the question worth passing on, as it came fro mone of our level-headed, far-sighted, most loyal and interested laymen.

J. O. ATKINSON.

HERE IS WORK FOR US ALL.

We have heard people, Church members, complain that they had nothing to do in the Church. We have even heard some complain that the pastor had given them nothing to do. They seemed by their complaints to indicate that if no one should come and give them something to do, they would be entirely excusable for doing nothing for God in the salvation of the world. Now, we happen to know that there is no excuse for any such condition. The pastor may be too busy to give you something to do, but be assured that there is a plenty of work, and always at your right hand, and you can get busy at this work every day, even though your pastor should forget to do anything in the way of providing work for you. We are going to give you a clipping from an exchange, and from that you ought to be able to find a plenty of work of the most important kind—work, which if you truly engage in it, will give you the richest compensation of your life. The work to be done is prayer. Some who do not know may not call it work, but that is where you make your mistake—true prayer is real work—a work in which every Christian needs to be much engaged. Read the following, and then see if you can find enough to do in prayer to engage your best effort and your most precious time. Read:

The last intensity is the intensity of prayer. "My God, My God"—Jesus is the same in His dying moments—"Why hast Thou forsaken Me?" (Mat. 27:46.) Praising-time will soon be over: never for all eternity shall I be able to stand again for a rejected Christ against an entire world: little children, it is the last hour—let us give ourselves to prayer. "Had I known what I now know of the service of prayer," said a dying saint, "I would have given three-fourths of my day to intercessions." Nothing is effectual that is not first covered by prayer. Dr. Bachus, a former president of Hamilton College in America, was told that he had but half an hour to live. "Is that so?" he replied; "then take me out of my bed and put me on my knees, and let me spend it calling on God for the salvation of the world." And so they did: he died upon his knees.

The sunset burns across the sky;
Upon the air its warning cry
The curfew tolls, from tower to tower;
O children, 'tis the last, last hour!

The work that centuries might have done
Must crowd the hour of setting sun;
And through all lands the saving Name
Ye must in fervent haste proclaim.

REV. JEREMIAH W. HOLT.

(December 7, 1848—August 3, 1923.)
A Tribute

By. Wm. Thornton Whitsett.

For forty-six years Rev. Jeremiah W. Holt was a well-known minister in the North Carolina-Virginia Christian Conference, and had preached at various times throughout the Churches of the Piedmont section. Born near Burlington, Alamance County, N. C., he grew to young manhood without educational advantages, save those afforded by the local schools. When he determined to enter the ministry, he entered Graham Normal College, and later went to Rutherford College, in order to prepare himself for his life's work.

His education being completed, he settled near Burlington, where he made his home throughout his life, and entered upon an unusually active life's work. For thirty years he conducted a school near his home, and many of the leading men and women of his section well remember him as a faithful and conscientious teacher. His work in the school-room was never allowed to interfere with his preaching, but every Saturday and Sunday found him active in his Church work, and his pulpit was seldom vacant. Living in a day when roads were poor, and automobiles had not come into use, he made long drives with his horse and buggy to reach his appointments in Orange, Alamance and Guilford Counties.

Perhaps, the outstanding trait in his life may be said to be his intense devotion to the cause of temperance. Early deciding that the curse of strong drink should be blotted out, he waged a warfare throughout his life against the evils of strong drink. His speeches on the subject of temperance were logical, strong, and effective. He gave no quarters and asked none in his warfare. His position being so much in advance of the thought of his times, he was often criticised, and even ridiculed for his intense devotion to what seemed a hopeless cause; but it made no difference with him, the warfare was continued. Time has vindicated the wisdom of his views, and he lived to see his ideas made into law, and in active operation. At one time he was a candidate far Governor of North Carolina on the Prohibition ticket; not that he desired to enter a political life, but that he was willing to stand openly and publicly for the vital cause so dear to his heart.

After seventy-five years of valiant warfare in the causes of right, he passed in peace to his final reward. Gathered for his funeral was an immense congregation, largely made up of former students, Church members, and those with whom he had so long labored. The services were conducted from the Burlington Christian Church by Dr. P. H. Fleming, assisted by Dr. W. W. Staley, Dr. G. O. Lankford, and Rev. P. T. Klapp. Dr. Staley and Rev. P. T. Klapp, both classmates of Rev. J. W. Holt, spoke tender words of appreciation of their life-long friend and early schoolmate.

He was laid to rest under a mass of beautiful flowers in the cemetery of New Providence Christian Church, near Graham, and it may be said in truth that a life rich in good works has passed from earth. One of the most impressive incidents of the funeral service was the reading by Dr. P. H. Fleming of a sketch of the deceased's life, written by himself some months ago when he realized that his health had broken and that he must soon pass away. It was brave, tender and full of the faith that had carried him through a long and courageous life of earnest work.

A TRIBUTE TO JOHN D. GRAY.

John D. Gray was born in Sussex County, Del., April 25, 1870, and died in Sussex County, Va., July 14, 1923, age 53 years 2 months and 19 days. He moved to Virginia when about fourteen years old, with his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Alfred L. Gray. He, with his brothers, Messrs. E. L. and H. A., entered the lumber business as very young men, and through hearty co-operation, hard work, and faithfulness to their company, they have in these years achieved wonderful success. He was a man of clear vision, strong convictions, and splendid judgment. These elements of character were seasoned with genuine Christianity. His was a splendidly rounded Christian character. He joined the Waverly Christian Church soon after the Gray Lumber Company moved to this place, and entered immediately upon the work of the Sunday School and Church by becoming a teacher, which position he held till his death. About ten years ago he was elected to the office of deacon, which office he filled faithfully to the last.

On June 19, 1895, he was married to Miss Mary Johnson, of Isle of Wight County, Va. They have three children—Col. Marvin L. (a member of Governor Trinkle's staff), Alvah, and A. Landon, and Katherine, wife of Marvin. He is survived also by one sister, Mrs. P. Fleetwood, and two brothers, Messrs. E. L. and H. A., all of Waverly, Va.

Deacon John D. Gray was a leading citizen of his community. His influence was always felt on the side of morality and spirituality. He will be missed by his Sunday School class of young men, by his Church that he so liberally supported and faithfully attended, and by the community at large, whose interest he sought to advance.

The services were conducted from the home and concluded at the cemetery by the writer, assisted by Dr. W. W. Staley, of Suffolk, Va., who officiated at their marriage. The attendance was very large. The floral offerings were beautiful. Bro. Gray was very fond of male voices, and a quartet of mem sang tenderly appropriate hymns.

FROM DR. D. A. LONG.

Dear Dr. Barrett:

Preached here 11 A. M. Just returned from the funeral of Bro. Mitchell's little boy. Will preach here again tonight. Our Sunday School at this place meets at 10 A. M. every Sunday. Deacon Napoleon House is our superintendent, and Deacon Mitchell, secretary; Bro. Geo. T. Whitaker is teacher of the Bible class. Mrs. Henry Pearce is assistant superintendent. We have a small, but earnest, band of workers. We expect to receive three new members the first Sunday in September. Delightful rains and fine crops.

D. A. Long.

Franklinton, N. C.

Dr. Staley has had a week at Moore's Springs of late. That is regarded as a very remarkable mineral water. It is especially remarkable for its curative powers. Dr. Staley spent a season there last year and was much benefited. We trust he had a very helpful and beneficial visit there this summer.

THE NEW DEPARTMENT OF ADMINISTRATION AND LEADERSHIP TRAINING.

By Rev. H. Shelton Smith, Ph. D.

A few months before my graduation at Yale, last spring, I had the surprise and pleasure of an invitation from the Board of Christian Education, through its general secretary, Dr. W. A. Harper, to become the secretary of "Administration and Leadership Training," on August 1, 1923. After several weeks of deliberation and inquiry, it became clear to me that my duty was to accept the call of my Church and become its public servant in the capacity suggested. Since that decision was made, I have endeavored in every reasonable way to extend my knowledge of our Church's outlook, educationally, and to get more intimately acquainted with the educational needs, problems, and possibilities of our denomination as a whole.

Therefore, I take this first opportunity to state through our periodicals some of the things which the department, as I understand it, wishes me to do, and also to suggest ways whereby members of our Churches and Sunday Schools and Christian Endeavor Societies and other organizations may assist in promoting intelligent administration and leadership training throughout the Christian Church.

Co-Operate with Pastors and Churches in Making Educational Surveys.

The crucial demands of the World War revealed as never before the necessity in the United States for efficiency—physical, mental, and spiritual. Resulting surveys and tests laid bare to us the humiliating fact that vast masses of illiterates were unreached by our educational system and that millions bore in their bodies physical handicaps that were at one time entirely remediable, but who in the crisal hour could not bear a soldier's part in bringing victory to the side of right. Since the war, survey after survey has been made in county, State, and nation to detect weakness, correct malpractice, and institute well-orbed programs of public education with equal privileges to all.

The survey is fundamental also to the Church's future program. As yet but few and scattered attempts have been made to discover her resources and problems, and most of the surveys made so far have dealt with large territories rather than small localities which constitute the ordinary outreach of a local Church. The Interchurch Survey did great good; but its greatest contribution will be missed if the local Churches of all denominations do not institute more intimate surveys designed to show their own specific assets and liabilities.

The Christian Church should employ in a larger way the survey as a preliminary to a more effective educational advance. Your Church wants, for example, to erect a Church building adequate for the needs of your own community or city. What are your needs? Do you know approximately how many people your Church should be expected to accommodate, not only today, but twenty years from now? What size territory is your Church supposed to minister to, and what type and race or races of people do you serve? What other agencies are there in your community besides Churches which may be expected to serve in their chosen fields? Are you avoiding duplication of time, expense, and effort? Numerous other questions occur, but these show sufficiently that every Church ought not only to sit down and "count the cost," but should first make a detailed analysis of the obligations and types of services to be performed in its specific locality. Not to do so is folly.

The Board of Christian Education authorizes me to say that it will assist, through the department of administration and leadership training, any Church that would like to make such surveys with the view to erecting new buildings or altering old ones for new and larger services. I am at your service and will gladly correspond with any who may desire my assistance in this respect.

Suggest Appropriate Building and Educational Equipment for Both City and Country Churches.

After the survey is made, your Church will naturally want to supply the necessary physical equipment by which to accomplish its educational functions. To whom shall you go? To an architect that knows little or nothing about the demands of the modern Church building? Unfortunately, this has been all too frequently done, resulting in an unscientific structure and a prodigal waste of money. I have in mind two Churches in the same city that were designed by the same architect about ten years ago. One of the Churches is now to be scrapped in favor of a more complete structure of forty class-rooms, assembly departments, and preaching auditorium, is gaining in favor and usefulness—the pride of its one thousand Sunday School pupils. The former Church allowed the architect to select what he called a "model" building; the latter selected a competent and consecrated building committee, who, after visiting some of the leading city Churches of the United States, required the architect to design their Church to suit their own far-seeing vision.

It is the purpose of this office to gather, in due course of time, a list of the most reliable Church architects in our country, said list to be furnished to any Church in our denomination wishing to build or remodel its plant. Also an effort will be made to secure pictures and drawings of up-to-date country and city Church plants now in use in the various denominations. These will be at your disposal for the asking.

May I request all Churches that are now in possession of drawings of their Church buildings to favor this office with duplicates if possible, or with the originals when you are no longer in need of them. In this way, our Churches can be of real service to each other. Also try to have a good photographer make several attractive pictures of your plant and send duplicates to this office for the purpose of publication and comment as occasion may arise.

Assist Churches in Organizing Modern Church Schools.

Our denomination is now in the process of erecting several of our greatest Church plants. I have already had invitation from a number of the pastors to assist them, at the completion of their buildings, in organizing their Church schools. Nothing will give me more pleasure than to make myself of service in this way; for a new, handsome Church should be satisfied with nothing less than a thoroughly graded school—organized from the beginners' department to the adult with respect to the religious needs of the several ages registered in the school. I shall be glad to answer any inquiries or make personal visits to any Churches, with new or old buildings, which are in need of assistance. Don't be timid about asking questions whenever information is needed; that is what you elected me for.

Assist Church Schools in Obtaining Adequate Courses of Study.

The successful administration of a school requires not only an adequate physical plant and equipment but also properly selected lesson materials and integrated expressional activities. If you want to establish a completely graded Sunday

[redacted] of Religious Education, whereby our denomination may greatly increase the number of prepared officers and teachers in the local Churches. Efforts are being made to announce such a program following the meeting of the general board of the Christian Church in October.

To set going the various phases of the program outlined will obviously require not only an unlimited amount of work in the office and in the field, but also much patience and a period of years. To the best of my ability, "trusting in the Lord Jesus Christ for strength, I promise" to give myself unreservedly to this joyous task. I shall covet at all times the prayers and co-operation of the Church at large, and it will be a pleasure to have suggestions concerning ways of achieving more successfully the work committed to your secretary.

MOSES vs. DARWIN.

By William Jennings Bryan.

(In Three Parts—Part II.)

"I sent my son to college a Christian, and he came back an atheist."

About the time they got settled on the tooth, somebody found the skull of a monkey in Africa. Somebody was digging down in a cave and went down sixty feet and finally came to the skull of a monkey.

Isn't it ludicrous that learned men should get so excited about a tooth or a skull? The fact is, when a fellow gets obsessed with the idea he has brute blood in his veins and he must have come from something somewhere, he is so interested in tracing his family tree and getting it straight that he will go around the world to see a skeleton when he will not cross a street to save a soul. That is what it means. You cannot interest these men in the saving of souls, but they are very much interested in a five-toed horse. They will tell you there is a portion of an ear from an ape like a man's ear, they will say you have canine teeth like a dog, that you wiggle your ears like a horse. They take your child in the school, and day after day they will teach that child, trying to convince him that he came from a monkey or an ape, but there is one fact worth more than all the points of resemblance, and that is they cannot find a species that ever changed, and if they cannot find where two species in the plant life came one from the other, or the two from the common ancestry, why do they try to drag man from his high estate and give him a brute ancestry?

I have had people ask me, "Do you mean to say, Mr. Bryan, that there is no evidence upon which to base this evolutionary hypothesis?" I say, absolutely none that ought to have any weight with reasonable people. How on earth can these intelligent men believe it if it is not true? they ask. I get my first explanation from Tolstoi, who spoke twenty years ago of the "cultured crowd." He says those who belong to the cultured crowd think religion is a superstition good enough for the ignorant to hold in check and restrain them, but who believe when man reaches a certain period of intellectual development he outgrows it.

The first explanation of these learned men is that they are mind-worshipers, and they are trying to substitute education for religion; they believe all you need is to train the mind; that the heart doesn't need to be trained. You have a man, John H. Williamson. I do not know whether he is still the enforcement officer, but he was sent down to the penitentiary with a committee of lawyers to examine criminals. Four were selected from the lot, and three out of four had college or high school training. You cannot go to a penitentiary in the United States but what you will find college graduates, and yet we have men teaching in our schools who pay no attention to the heart, and think all you have to do is to train the mind. If they understood the Bible they would know that "out of the heart are the issues of life," not out of the mind. They would know that "As a man thinketh in his heart, so is he." When the heart goes wrong it takes the mind with it. There is not an ounce of love in all the minds in the world; there is no morality in the human mind—it is a mental machine. It works for its master, and the master has a heart. The man of the trained mind will work just as willingly to plan a burglary or a murder as he will to plan service to society. The first thing is that these men are mind-worshipers. Romances, born in Canada, educated in Great Britain, a prominent biologist, says it was evolution that led him away from orthodox teaching. He went out and wrote a book against the existence of a God. He stayed out for nearly twenty-five years, and when he began to come back as the intellectual prodigal son, he explained his going away, and said that he could not pray for twenty-five years. The reason he thought he could not even pray was because he put too much emphasis upon the reason and not enough upon the will and the heart, and as he came back he found he over-estimated the reason and under-estimated the heart, and that is the way he explained his second view. He quoted the words of Bourdillon:

"The night has a thousand eyes,
And the day but one;
But the light of the whole world dies
With the setting sun."

—and, then, that which he was trying to illustrate

"The mind has a thousand eyes,
And the heart but one;
But the light of a whole life dies
When love is done."
It Simply Cannot be Done.

They are mind-wirshipers, and when Romanes went out and wrote his book, what did he say? He said: "I am not ashamed to confess that, with this virtual negation of God, the universe to me has lost its soul of loveliness * * * and when at times I think, as think at times I must, of the appalling contrast between the hallowed glory of that creed which once was mine, and the lonely mystery of existence as now I find it—at such times I shall ever feel it impossible to avoid the sharpest pang of which my nature is susceptible." They are trying to worship the mind and substitute education for religion. It cannot be done.

The second reason is that evolution flatters the mind of vain man. The evolutionist says to the student: "You cannot understand the Bible; there is the miraculous and the supernatural. You cannot understand them. Let us give something that makes everything plain. Here is evolution; that is a law and when you understand evolution you know everything, for evolution explains everything." It is flattering to the mind and some of their minds are susceptible to flattery. But there is a third reason. I would not want to pick them out and name them, but I think it is a lazy man's theory and is attractive to the lazy man. It is the laziest theory anybody ever proposed. If a man believes he is descended from the animals, all he has to do on Sunday morning is to go out to the zoological garden and stand in front of a cage of animals and speculate on how far he has come. But if he is a Christian he has to go to Church and consider how far he has to go before he becomes perfect. Christianity is no lazy man's job. There never was a religion that stirred to perpetual energy like Christianity does. Christianity presents to us an ascending plane. It tells us that every human being is traveling every day, every hour and every moment, up or down; ever rising to the highest plane that God has made possible, or sinking to the lowest level that man can reach. Christianity gives us ideals that are within sight of the weakest and the lowliest, and yet so high the best and noblest are kept with their faces turned ever upward. Christianity gives us a life of climbing where the scenery grows brighter every moment and the heart is happier for it. Evolution chills hope and courage and ambition. It is the doctrine of fatalism, and if you will take a book on psychology written by a believer in Darwin, you will find he tells you that man is just a bundle of brute instinct, and it is not your fault you do wrong. It makes a wonderful difference whether a man traces his ancestry to the jungle or to the throne of God. We try to live up to our ideals. If they are below us we live down; if above us, we strive to climb upward.

QUIET TALKS ON THE SIMPLE ESSENTIALS OF GOSPEL TRUTH.

By S. D. Gordon.

Delivered Under the Auspices of Atlantic City, N. J., Council of Churches.

(No. 4) The Beginning of Man.

Man is of a princely brood and breed. He is not mere dust and dirt of earth. He's more. He's kin to God.

The story of how man got his start on the earth, and the old Book of God, these two, are tied up together tight. The Book has a story about man's start. It is told clearly, simply and positively. It is put in a leading place, at the very beginning. It dignifies man in a peculiar way.

There's another very different story being told today. It really lowers the dignity of man. It is being told so loudly and dogmatically that people are coming to think, unthinkingly, that it is the only story. Everybody worth while believes it, we are told.

Yet—yet, it is striking, that there are distinct groups of the ablest thinkers among scholars and scientists who don't accept it, but say some very strong things against it, with a quite settled positiveness.

What is this strange modern story about man's start? In a word, it is this, that man evolved by a series of steps, up from the very lowest forms of matter, up through an ascending scale, getting higher and higher, till finally he got up to where he is now. Some put a supernatural creative touch of God at various stages. Some leave God clean out.

Even though weak links in the chain of evidence are frankly admitted, indeed sometimes the distinct absence of links, yet there is a peculiar insistence on the main teaching, quite ignoring the fact that the weak links, the absence of links, completely neutralizes the whole teaching.

It seems as though the process must have stopped, however. New man ought to be continually evolving up from the lower stages. It seems queer that they all come another way. And the other way fits into the Book's story. Rather striking that!

The two teachings are directly opposite. That's clear. The question involves not the present teaching of science on the matter merely, but the status of the Book, whose story is so radically different.

The Book's story is that man was created essentially as we know him today, by the direct act of God. On the lower levels of life, in this creation story, there are distinct forms or kinds. The striking thing to mark is that these never cross. Each kind reproduces after its own kind. It is never after another kind. This is specifically stated nine times. There is no crossing from one kind to another. There are unbridged chasms at certain points.

Then, at the climax, God, by direct act, formed man as a distinct creation. God breathed His own breath of life into man, making him still another kind, distinct from the other lower kind, God's own kind. That's the story.

Of course, the principle of evolution, or growth by development, is everywhere, but always within certain fixed limits. There's growth from early immature forms, up and up, until full maturity of that particular sort of life is reached. This is in all nature, and in all life. But there's never a crossing over from one form or kind to another.

The attempt at this is always punished by death—death by sterility. The power to reproduce life is lost, irretrievably lost. It's a well-established fact of science that crossing species results in sterility. It is the very thing that stops life, truly a dead stop.

The familiar illustration is the mule. The arbitrary crossing by man of the horse and the ass produces the mule, a peculiarly strong and peculiarly stubborn animal, and, be it noted, always sterile.

At its core, the question is a scientific one. It's a matter of biology, the science of life. And the striking thing to mark carefully is that there is a distinct group of scientists, of highest scholarly rank, in each of the nations of Christendom, who say plainly in print that scientifically this teaching of evolution is childish, wholly unscientific. The biologists among them say it is a biological absurdity, a biological impossiblty.

Some of these have pointed out how the simple creation story of Genesis fits in with the latest findings of science. But the other teaching persists, like a dense fog, settled down, obscuring and quite ignoring, simply ignoring, proven facts.

In the earlier days the teaching was put forward as a "hypothesis"; that is, a supposition, nothing more. It's a strange perversity that now it is taught as an established fact, even with scientific facts against it.

On the other side, the things peculiarly distinctive in man tally with the Book's story. Man is not only superior to all lower creation, but radically different, not in degree, but in kind. There are four distinctive things in man—the mind, the understanding and reasoning powers; language, the power of expressing thoughts in a reasoned-out, intelligent way; conscience, the moral sense; and moral choice, the power to discern moral differences and to decide.

There is absolutely nothing in lower life out of which these could have evolved. Out of nothing, nothing comes. These four things are found nowhere else except, ah! yes, except in—God!

Indeed, these are the distinctive God traits. Here is the link upwards. Man reveals unmistakably the direct creative touch of God upon him in these traits. His make-up tallies with the Book. And this characteristic of the Book. It and man fit together.

And so a man has in his own very self the fact that the Book is reliable. It is indeed the Book of God, dependable at every turn.

(No. 5—"The God-Man.")

THE PEOPLE WHO DO ATTEND CHURCH, AND WHY.

The most efficient agency of human service on earth is the Christian Church, and they who would make their lives count should be counted among those upon whom the Church may count. Every non-attendant upon religious services virtually votes for the elimination of the institution from society. If we believe that the world needs the Church, we have but one clear, unmistakable and unanswerable way of stating it; that is, by regular Church attendance. The man who goes to Church stands for an indispensable institution, even as a good citizen stands for the State by voting.

The great master passions, such as love, honor, justice, patriotism and brotherhood, are kindled at the altars of the house of God. The most expensive thing about a Church from any point of view is the empty pew, and no well-conducted Church can afford it, even on the low plain of business efficiency. Church attendance is conducive to religious thinking. Take God out of the human mind, and you eliminate the greatest incentive to noble thinking and living, and the greatest safeguard of society. A churchless community, a community where men have abandoned and scoffed at or ignored their religious needs, is a community on the rapid downgrade. Church work and Church attendance means the cultivation of the habit of feeling some responsibility for others. At Church we meet and nod or speak to good, quiet neighbors, and go away feeling a little more charitable toward all the world, even toward those excessively foolish young men who regard Church-going as a soft performance. We may not hear what we term a good sermon, but we will hear a sermon by a good man, who, with his good wife, is engaged all the week in making hard lives a little easier; we will hear read or take part in reading some beautiful passages from the Bible and take part in singing some good hymns, all of which are indispensable in the building of Christian character.

I believe that going to Church is a duty we owe to the world, "for none of us liveth to himself, and none dieth to himself." The nature and extent of our obligations to our fellowmen, it seems to me, are rarely considered sufficiently to be adequately understood. How much, and what, do I owe to humanity? Literally, everything I have, everything I am; and this is so literally and so simply true that no man has a right to say, "I will do as I please with my possessions, my time, or my powers." If I have a strong and fair body, have I a right to be proud of it and do what I please with my physical strength? The long struggle and effort of the race in every stage of its progress, from brute propensity toward angel, has evolved whatever is fine and fair in the human form; and it is an outright gift to me. Is my brain-power mine? The human race, from the beginning, has been developing and creating the human brain. When men have tried to think straight and clear, they have been creating brain cells as much as the athlete in his exercises creates lung cells.

Whatever mental ability I have, then, is an outright gift to me. My consciousness of right is largely the result of age-long evolution of the human race; for the human race, from the beginning, has been religious, and it has conveyed all that is high and fine in the religious life as an outright gift to me. Every man that has dared to speak in the face of the opposition of his time, every man who has gone to the prison or the stake, who has been consecrated to the high and noble, has transmitted to me my religious liberty and opportunities, my high and fine aspirations to reverence and worship, as a priceless heritage which I enjoy today. Again, whatever business ability I may have is a heritage, an outright gift to me, an opportunity which I have taken advantage of, every invention that has put its forces within my control has contributed to my success if this should be my lot. So, no man has any right to stand apart from the Church, in isolation and attempted independence, and say, "I will do as I please, and let the rest of the world wag as it will," for he is under the highest conceivable obligation to do what he can to make things what they ought to be. There are many good ways in which I can serve people, but if I serve them in the highest things, I serve them most effectively and in the best possible way. I may train my child to be dependent upon somebody else and lay up provisions for him in such a way that there shall not be an hour in his life when every wish may not be supplied, or I may train him to become master of himself, to use his faculties and powers so as to provide for himself, and in this way I not only supply his wants and needs, but I make a man of him, which is infinitely more important.

Then, in order to serve men in the best possible way and render them the most effective and lasting benefit, we must belong to the Church, and consecrate ourselves to its service. The highest obligation resting upon a man is to be a man, with all that it implies, and to be a man is to be a child of God, a living soul, a spiritual being. The highest and finest things in a man is love, sympathy, tenderness, pity, helpfulness; and when we say that a man ought to be a man, it means that he ought to climb up and live in these ranges of his being. Any creature ought to be what it can. We think that a singing bird ought to sing, a horse designed for the race course ought to be able to run, a pointing dog must point, and a setter dog must set; we claim that a creature ought to be what it is called, and capable of being. A man ought to climb up and live in the spiritual ranges of his being, and if he does not, he is not a man, is not true to the highest and noblest conception of his being. A magnet might as well be called a magnet and not attract anything, the sun a sun and not shine, as a man a man when, in the highest and truest sense of the term, he does not cultivate the highest and finest qualities that go to make up a spiritual being; and which, of necessity, relate him vitally and helpfully to his fellowmen.

The Church is the only organization on the face of the earth that has this cultivation of manhood, this development of the highest and most essential characteristics of men and women, as its one essential aim. It is the place where these faculties and powers are appealed to, where they are called out and developed, where they are directed and brought into play. The Churches are not perfect, they are made up of the kind of people who live in the places where they are organized—they have to be, but they help people think and feel and love and worship and live. The world is full of good things, but the best things can only be found in brave lives, great deeds, the experiences of those who have conquered temptation and difficulty, who have suffered and have not despaired.

All of us have to meet sorrows and endure misfortunes—this is an experience from which no one escapes. This is a strange voyage we have started out on. No matter what the nature of the ship—a great merchant ship, a man-of-war, a pleasure boat, a canoe, no matter what—every craft afloat on this sea of life is doomed to go down before it reaches any visible harbor. When these experiences come, shall we lose heart, "curse God and die," mourn our hearts out, wrap ourselves up selfishly in our personal griefs, and leave the world to its sorrows? I believe that the hopes and thoughts and aspirations and inspirations which the Church stands for have the only sane and divine answer.

The Church stands as a witness to the Fatherhood of God, His eternal love and care; and if I may believe that—and I do believe it—then let my ship sink, that is not the end. I believe that every ship directed by God through Jesus Christ that sinks, sinks to another sea and sails on to some port as yet invisible to us, but finer than anything of which we can dream. The Church is not only a place of instruction—it is a place where you come in contact with the living and active influences of God, under conditions not to be found elsewhere. Among such influences, and under such conditions, attributes and faculties are quickened in you, which otherwise would remain dormant, and gifts are bestowed upon you which otherwise would be withheld.

It is, therefore, an urgent necessity that we should, at frequent intervals, place ourselves within an atmosphere of prayer; for the power to stand firm against temptation, to be just instead of unjust, merciful instead of unmerciful, light on the way, consolation in sorrow, are always vouchsafed to him who prays. The practical difficulty is, for a man, amid the bustle of active life and absorbed in the anxieties of bread-winning, to make the effort, to find time, or quiet, or any of the conditions necessary, to attune the mind to prayer. The plain and obvious and common-sense way out of the difficulty is to go to Church. There, as nowhere else, the right conditions exist; there, as nowhere else, it is possible for you to comply with them. We should consider it a religious duty, and also a necessity of our spiritual, moral and, indeed, of our physical nature to go to Church every Sunday.

There is a temptation to substitute good reading, and the beauties of nature, for Church-going. The consequence is that, though the books we read may be good ones, what we obtain from them is not the same kind of good the Church has to give. Nature does much for us, contact with her gives strength and health; nevertheless, her methods are those of a relentless mechanism. Her instrument is unfeeling force. It is a fallacy to fancy we can learn from her justice, mercy, faith; that we can draw from cloud, or stream, or tree, the strength to overcome temptation or the hope that will deliver us from despair. So long as men have taken her for their sole teacher they have remained barbarians. It is in conquering nature, not in submitting to her, that the best in us is called forth. There is a tendency to degeneration in the blood, from which the best of us are not free. Vicious, ignoble, selfish habits of thought increase their hold on us, unless we set up a counteracting influence. The most effective one is frequent intercourse with those who are better than ourselves. He who neglects such intercourse will find himself, at the end of twelve months, on a lower level, less capable of worthy effort, more responsive to the solicitations of base things. The Church provides a remedy. Here we are brought face to face with great souls, with the best and worthiest examples—with objects of worship, of adoration—which exalt the mind, purify the heart, and invigorate the will.

We should go to Church for our country's sake. The Church is the solitary institution which holds men fast to the thought of an overruling Providence, which proclaims the constantly forgotten truth that justice and mercy are not things it is permitted us to take or leave, but are expressions of the imperative will of the living God. In a word, the Church keeps alive and spreads abroad the spirit of religion—the spirit which comes from belief in and intercourse with God. Is not this spirit essential to patriotism? From Leonidas to Lincoln and from Lincoln to Woodrow Wilson, the moving force in every true patriot's heart has been a firm faith in God. The conquering nations are the believing nations. Is it not essential to public honesty?

If every official of the State were in reality a Godfearing man, would not dishonest dealing with the interests and property of the people be a thing unknown? Is it not essential to public order? Is it not a public service, then, to support the Church, inasmuch as it maintains that spirit of religion, without which there is likely to be neither patriotism, nor honesty, nor order?

Then, we should go to Church for the sake of the children. If the influences of religion are vital to the best citizenship, should they not be instilled into the minds of those who are to become citizens? Is not the consequence sure to be that our children will grow up irreligious, without that strength to endure misfortune, that power to resist temptation, that sense of responsibility and of loyalty to the right, which a sincere religious faith alone can give? For the sake, then, of the coming generation, for the sake of the children, the Church deserves our strenuous, our faithful, our personal support. How can we support the Church without going to the Church? We may contribute to its finances, but to make its influence felt, we must participate personally in its work and share its responsibilities.

THE DEATH OF JOHN A. MILLS.

The death of Bro. John A. Mills, which occurred at a hospital in the city of Baltimore on July 12, 1923, was most sudden, and even unexpected to his many friends. He had left Raleigh only a short time before to go to Baltimore for treatment for what he and his friends regarded as only a slight ailment. How true it is that in the midst of life we are facing death, and may be called in a moment.

Years ago, Bro. Mills was prominent in the general work of the Christian Church. He was treasurer of the Southern Christian Convention and was a trustee of Elon College, and was a leading member of the Raleigh Christian Church and was for years superintendent of the Sunday School connected with that Church.

The News and Observer of July 13th, in giving account of his death, said:

John A. Mills, railroad builder, manufacturer and one of the best-known business men in North Carolina, died at a hospital in Baltimore yesterday morning at 10:20, following a complication of diseases which took him to the hospital in May.

His four sons, who were with him at the time of his death, will accompany the body to Raleigh, arriving late this afternoon. The funeral will take place Saturday afternoon at 5 o'clock.

Best known, possibly, as the builder of the Raleigh and Southport Railroad, from Raleigh to Fayetteville, now a part of the Norfolk Southern system, Mr. Mills was identified also with a large number of business enterprises. That first line of railroad from Raleigh to Fayetteville was begun in 1895. The first stretch of rail ran to Fuquay Springs, but in 1906 the road was completed to Fayetteville, and in 1911 the sale was made to the Norfolk Southern.

Another railroad venture in which he was interested was the construction of the Elkin and Alleghany Railroad. His interests in this road were disposed of during the war.

At the time of his death, Mr. Mills was director of the Caraleigh Phosphate and Fertilizer Company, the Commercial National Bank, the Morris Plan Industrial Bank, and was interested in other enterprises, including a milling plant near Holly Springs.

During an active life, he found time for public duties. He served for a term as chairman of the Wake County Board of Commissioners, and it was under his administration that the new courthouse and the new county home were built. During the same period, the present good road system of the county was inaugurated.

In addition, Mr. Mills served as president of the State Fair, and at the time of his death was a member of the board of trustees of the Olivia Raney Library.

Mr. Mills, who was sixty-five years old in January, was born and reared in southern Wake County, near Holly Springs, the son of W. J. and Elizabeth (Wilbon) Mills, and was the oldest of a family of nine children, all of whom are living, with the exception of a brother, Wayland A. Mills, who was in the lumber business in Alabama and died there several years ago.

Mr. Mills was for several years engaged in the lumber business in Moore County, moving to Raleigh in the early 90s, where for some time he operated the Mills Manufacturing Company. Soon after locating in Raleigh, he conceived of and began the building of the Raleigh and Southport Railroad, from Raleigh to Fayetteville, operating it until he sold it to the Norfolk Southern Railroad in 1911, it being now a part of that road's western division.

In 1884 he was married to Miss Julian Isabella Johnson, also of southern Wake County, to which union six children were born—a son, Edward, dying in 1905, and an only daughter, Myrtle, in 1907; the surviving children being Mable, Hartwick, Eugene, and Dan. There are four grandchildren.

His mother, Mrs. C. E. Mills, who survives him, now lives at Benson, N. C., with a daughter, Mrs. Utley. Surviving brothers and sisters are Mrs. John L. Rowland, Mrs. D. T. Adams, and June Mills, all of Wake County, and Mrs. H. H. Utley, Benson, Mrs. D. A. McPhail, Florala, Ala.; W. O. Mills, Fayetteville, and W. W. Mills, Barnesville, Ga.

Mr. Mills was a member of the First Christian Church of this city and of William G. Hill Lodge of Masons, and of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks.

APPRECIATION OF A BEAUTIFUL LIFE.

On the night of August 15th, the spirit of Nora Lowdermilk Albright, beloved companion of Rufus Lee Albright, passed from earth to her heavenly home. She had been an invalid for two years, confined to her bed. She had the treatment of the best local doctors, who could give only temporary relief. She was carried in her helpless condition to Baltimore, where she was treated at both Johns Hopkins and the Kelly Hospitals, but received very little benefit from either.

Sister Nora lived a beautiful Christian life. She did not need to say, "I am a Christian," for her life and loving deeds proclaimed that to all. We have always loved her. She was so kind, so gentle and pleasant. In all sickness she was cheerful and hopeful, trusting in her Heavenly Father at all times. She was a blessing to her neighborhood and in her home and Church by her noble Christian example, always generous and helpful to those in need. She has left a vacant place on earth in the home and in our hearts. We cherish her loving memory. Heaven is dearer to us because she has gone. We will always remember her as we left her the last time. The sweet smile she wore as we bade her good-by, hoping to see her again; but Jesus wanted her in the mansion above, and we humbly bow to His will. With the same smile so often seen on her face, she fell asleep and awoke in heaven, and that smile remained on her face in death. When we looked on the beloved face for the last time, she looked so much like she was just sleeping, as an infant might have been, one could hardly realize that she would wake no more.

As the sun sank behind the hills, she was laid to rest in the new cemetery at Mt. Olivet M. E. Church, where she was one of the members. Later in life she joined, with her husband, New Center Christian Church. Rev. T. J. Green, assisted by Rev. G. R. Underwood, conducted the funeral services, where a large assembly of friends and loved ones had gathered to pay their last love and respects. The beautiful floral offerings spoke silently in honor and love to her beautiful life, covering her last resting-place, making a lovely picture as the sun cast its last rays over her grave.

We will see Nora in this world no more, but if we are faithful to our Saviour we shall meet her beyond the sunset's radiant glow. We loved her as one loves a sister. She had been in our family over twenty-two years, and as the years passed she became dearer. She was faithful to the Lord's command: "Be thou faithful unto death, and thou shalt inherit eternal life."

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

SEPTEMBER 9, 1923.

SUBJECT: John Mark.—Acts 12:12, 25-13:13, 15:36-40; Colossians 4:10; 2 Tim. 4:11; 1 Peter 5:13.

GOLDEN TEXT: "Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might."—Eccl. 9:10.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Ps. 32:1-7.

JOHN MARK, THE HELPER—THE MAN WHO FAILED AND TRIED AGAIN.

"I hold this truth with him who sings to one clear harp in diverse tones, that men may rise on stepping-stones of their dead selves to higher things."—Tennyson.

The wise man is he who can profit by his failures. The real failure in life is the man or woman who keeps on making the same mistake over and over again. The great character has faced times of discouragement and yielded momentarily, but greatness came because he did not give up the whole way because of one mistep. If the story of the life of John Mark had ended when he did not follow Paul and Barnabas into Pamphylia, and if he had returned to Jerusalem to do nothing except perhaps to bemoan his hard lot, John Mark would not be included in this series of great Bible heroes.

The Bible story of Mark is brief. Only ten verses mention him directly, but well do they portray both his deeds and his spirit.

I. Mark's Home.—Acts 12:12.

Mark had a godly mother and a Christian home. This was his great birthright. His home was where the disciples met to pray. To his home Peter went directly from prison, for he well knew that there he would find his devout friends. This home may have been the scene of the Last Supper, as it was the place for many holy gatherings. Such a home and mother is an influence which touches most deeply later life. Such a home and mother are happy memories and a precicus heritage, and we find, in the words of Homer in his Odessey: "His native home deep imaged in his soul."

II. Mark's Early Service.—Acts 12:25, 13:5.

We may picture Mark as a strong, attractive, as well as a spiritual youth. He must have taken an active part in the prayer meetings. His eager interest in the work led Barnabas and Saul to choose him as a companion and helper. This choice of the Church leaders revealed their confidence in the youth, both regarding his Christiauity and his ability to serve. Young people have much to give to the Church. Enthusiasm, strength, vision, a zeal that is hard to discourage, a faith in themselves and others are among the gifts which youth may contribute to the work of the kingdom. What a great blessing comes to the life which hears early the call of the Master, and to the Church which may train that life for the most effectual and loving service!

III. Mark's Desertion.—Acts 13:13.

When Paul and his company set sail from Paphos for Perga, John Mark went home. The reason is not related. It may have been homesickness, or discouragement, or a longing for some other task. He looked back, and he failed to complete his work on that first missionary journey. He deserted Paul and Barnabas not because he had ceased to love the cause, surely, but really because he failed to be close enough to the Christ they were representing. Many have gone far away since the time of John Mark. Many have shunned the call to duty, and have failed in the service of the Lord Jesus. In Mark, they may find a kindred spirit—but only if they come back. "Not failure, but low aim is crime," and Mark had an aim and a godly purpose high enough to make of him a loyal Christian worker. Something in Mark's character made him too big to give up wholly to discouragement, and back in Jerusalem he continued to be a "helper."

IV. Mark's Later Service.—Acts 15:37, 38, 39.

One strong influence which helped Mark to make up for his desertion on the first journey was the always strong confidence of his cousin Barnabas. Barnabas believed in Mark, and was ready to trust him again. How often we feel the need of knowing that somebody really believes in us, and expects us to do something! How many times that feeling comes into our hearts—

"I would be true, for there are those who trust me."

And Barnabas and Mark went to Cyprus. Paul was not willing to trust Mark just yet. Mark paid for leaving him by missing great opportunities on the second journey. Paul had a high standard, and that very standard may have helped Mark to strive to regain his old friend's love and esteem.

V. Mark's Restoration in Paul's Favor.—Col. 4:10; 2 Tim. 4:11.

"Receive Him" if he comes your way, was Paul's message to his friends, the Colossians. He was speaking of Mark, who by his faithful service had convinced the apostle beyond doubt of his sincerity. And to Timothy: "Take Mark, and bring him with thee; for he is useful to me for ministering." What a testimony! What greater thing can be said of a person than that he is useful? There are many ways of being useful. The saddest thing is for a human being to feel that he is not needed any more by any creature. Just by being, of service, useful, usable, John Mark more than made up for his desertion. All persons cannot be nation figures. All men cannot be kings. But everybody does have the opportunity to be a helper, in the home, in the community, in the State and nation—even to the world may the individual influence reach, if the heart and mind are big enough for a world vision. Let us be "world helpers."

VI. Mark's Great Friend.—1 Peter 5:13.

The tenth verse, in two words, reveals Peter's affection for Mark. "My son," he calls him, and from this we may infer that he won Mark to Christ. There must have been a friendly relationship, very friendly, that Peter should look upon John Mark with a fatherly affection. Mark's Gospel presents the teaching of Peter, the first apostolic missionary. Written, with Peter probably, this Gospel presents the deeds of the life of Jesus Christ in a graphic, energetic style. Forty-one times is the word "straightway" or "immediately" used. Mark was a man of action, but a man big enough to forget failure, loving enough to have a friend, serviceable enough to be trusted by great men with worthwhile tasks.

John Mark, the Helper, brings a life-lesson to modern Christians which is fundamental and vital to their Christian growth and influence.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC.

SEPTEMBER 9, 1923.

TOPIC: "Different forms of Gambling and the evil of it."—Prov. 16:8; Jer. 17:9-11.

THOUGHTS FOR THE MEETING.

Happiness comes from living in conformance with God's laws. Lasting prosperity for both nation and individual must be rooted in righteousness. Verse 8.

"Great revenues with injustice" is the Bible description of gains from gambling. The extent of the gambling does not matter, nor determine the wrong of it. The Bible makes no distinction between the game at the card table and the chance taking at a Church fair. The gambling may be done in a den of vice, or in the home, or by the roulette wheel or grabbag at a Sunday School social, and yet it is gambling. The principle remains that getting something for nothing is gambling or taking a chance, hoping to get a "great revenue" for small expense is "unjust." Church societies who choose questionable means to secure funds for the Lord's work will do well to consider the influence which such practice may have upon boys and girls, as well as upon men and women. It is easy at the start to create the gambling spirit in a youth's soul, but difficult to reach the confirmed gambler. Verse 8.

A reformed gambler condemns the practice from two viewpoints. First, where there is loss in gambling, worry destroys ability to do other things well. Second, where there is gain, the exultant spirit and thirst for more renders honest work impossible. Verse 8.

Gambling destroys honesty, kindness, helpfulness, thoughtfulness and moral values. We are our brother's keeper. We should work for his happiness. Can we do so without these virtues?

As the bird claims eggs which do not belong to her, so the gambler lays hold of money of another, the bridge-player claims a gift which she has not earned, the housekeeper receives a quilt for which she has not paid. The analogy holds in all forms of gambling. Verse 11.

"We are a temple of the living God." Anything that will mar that temple must not be allowed to enter.

PLANS FOR THE MEETING.

Suggested Hymns.—"Trying to Walk in the Steps of the Saviour," "What a Wonderful Change in My Life Has Been Wrought!" "More Like the Master," "I Gave My Life for Thee," "More About Jesus."

Plan an open forum, or roundtable discussion, led by a good leader who can get people to talk on the general theme: "Why Must I Keep Gambling Out of My Life? How Can That be Done?"

Questions for Two-Minute Answers.—Why is gambling wrong? What responsibility has the Church in regard to gambling? What are some of the most common forms of gambling? How can Christian Endeavor help decrease gambling, and eradicate the evils coming therefrom?

JUNIOR CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

SEPTEMBER 9, 1923.

TOPIC: "The Twin Graces of Kindness and Truth."—Prov. 3:3, 4.

Kindness and truth are two very necessary materials which must be woven into our lives. Truth gives strength which makes folks trust us. Kindness gives sweetness which wins love. Jesus had both of these graces in His character, and we are trying to live like Him. Read John 1:14, and for the word "grace" there, read "kindness," for that is what it really means. Jesus came to us "full of kindness and truth."

Junior Christian Endeavor is sort of a schoolroom, where we learn about Him, and how to make our lives like His, and today our lesson is how to be true and kind.

CHILDREN'S WEEK.

Time.

"Children's Week" will be observed in October this year instead of in May, as in former years. This time has been chosen by leaders in children's work throughout the country as the best time to observe this important week in the Church calendar. The definite week suggested is October 14th to 21st, but if another week is better suited to the local Church and community, the definite time is left to the local workers.

Reason for Observing "Children's Week."

"Why has "Children's Week" been planned, and why should our Church observe it?" will be a very natural question from pastors, Sunday School superintendents and teachers.

Thirteen million of the twenty-five million children under twelve years of age in our country receive no religious instruction whatever. That the other half and more of our children may have the religious training due them, and that all of the boys and girls may be taught better, the International Sunday School Council of Religious Education has suggested and planned for the observance of this week. For six years, the interest of leaders in this week has been growing, and each year a larger number of Churches introduce its observance into their annual programs. What has been the result? Many children have been brought into the Sunday School as parents have come to see their spiritual needs. Better facilities for teaching those already there have been secured—better equipment, week-day religious instructions, vacation Bible schools. Parents and teachers and Christian workers every where have been brought to see the "child in the midst" and to realize that upon him must our future depend. As he is trained to think and live and do, our country and our Church will go.

The week has been endorsed by the Board of Religious Education of the Southern Christian Convention, and recommended to all thoughtful pastors, parents and teachers as very worthwhile.

Plans for "Children's Week."

Agreeing that "Children's Week" is valuable and worth planning for in every Church, the second question arises: "What can we do about it at B———?"

1. Learn all you can about it. Religious papers will all carry information. Send for "Children's Week" leaflets, which may be secured free through Mrs. Bullock, Dayton, Ohio, or from your secretary, at 715 West Eighth Street, Erie, Pa. There are leaflets on "Preparation" and the "Observance of 'Children's Week' in the Rural Church," which give suggestions for arrangements. There are three leaflets which give material for "Children's Week" talks and addresses —"The Child a Citizen," "Home Training and the Problem of Authority," "The Power of Example." Through your field secretary (715 West Eighth Street, Erie, Pa., address for the present), secure the September number of the Pilgrim Elementary Teacher (10 cents), which contains a complete "Children's Week" program, or "Children's Week Plays and Programs," which contains much material, including music (38 cents). This literature will give abundant material for any and all programs.

2. Have a committee on arrangements, consisting of pastor, superintendent, Christian Endeavor leader for children, teachers of children and parents, to make general arrangements for the program in your Church. Subcommittees may be the program, which secures speakers and music for the parents' meeting held during the week; publicity which makes the week known through newspaper notices, posters and announcements; home visitation, which works with the teachers to see that every Sunday School is visited during the week, preferably by his own teacher. Features which have been most helpfully introduced into "Children's Week" programs have been a sermon by the pastor on the Sunday preceding; story hour for children, rally for young people, exhibits of children's work in the Sunday School, parades, and the parents' meeting. This meeting should close with the decision upon some forward step for the religious training of the boys and girls. A committee may well be thinking about this, and propose something very definite for the consideration of parents and teachers to conserve the results of the increased interest aroused during the week. It may take the form of securing better equipment, better organization, a separate primary and beginners' department in your Sunday School, a class for training teachers of children, week-day religious instruction begun or any one thing which you decide to do which is needed most in your own Church and community.

"Children's Week" has a place in our work.

"Children's Week" can be observed in any Church that is interested in boys and girls, and interested in securing the co-operation of parents with the Church for their spiritual welfare.

PROGRESSIVE WORK IN SUNDAY SCHOOL IN ALABAMA.

Mr. J. W. Payne, of Wedowee, Ala., a newly elected member of the Board of Religious Education, writes a very interesting and encouraging report of Sunday School work in the Alabama Conference, to which he belongs.

In the spring, the Alabama Conference was divided into three districts, and each district placed under the direction of one member of the Conference committee on Sunday Schools. The plan was to hold an institute in each district during the summer to carry on the work of the Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention held in the spring.

Mr. Payne reports an institute held at Antioch the second Sunday in July, with splendid attendance and good interest. A second institute was held at New Harmony August 5th, with Rev. G. H. Veazy in charge. All Churches but three were represented by good delegations, and when the meeting closed late in the afternoon the building was about full of people who seemed intensely interested. The third institute will be held before Conference under the leadership of Bro. Carter. Mr. Payne has also arranged for institutes in the North Alabama work, and a rally will be held at Liberty Grove the fourth Sunday in August, and one also at Pisgah.

These gatherings have been successful not only from the point of view of good attendance, but much real work has been done, and the interest is very encouraging.

The Burlington Christian Church asks that the whole of their fund go to Bethlehem College.

It will be noticed that the names of the first two Churches are not given. Funds sent to the president are receipted for from the president's office and are turned over to the treasurer of the college, and often the name of the Church is not given. In case the treasurer has failed to give the name of the Church correctly or in case of any mistake in any way whatever, if the Church will please notify the treasurer, any and all mistakes will be corrected.

The total amount received by the treasurer from the "College Day" offerings to date is $351.86. As it was hoped this collection would net an average of one dollar a member, it looks as if quite a number of "College Day" offerings must be taken yet.

Elon College is rebuilding, and Bethlehem College is being built. If there will ever be a time in the history of these colleges when they need money, that time is now. The treasurer hopes to report much larger offerings in the future.

With all good wishes to all the Churches, I am,

Fraternally,

T. C. Amick,
Treasurer Elon College.

SPECIAL TO THE SUN.

Our work at Pleasant Grove and Ingram is progressing nicely. The Churches are in good working order. We have just closed a series of meetings at both of the Churches.

The meeting at Ingram started the fifth Sunday in July. Bro. O. D. Poythress, of South Norfolk, came to us on Monday and stayed until Friday night. He did the preaching while with us, and also sang several special pieces for us. Bro. Poythress sings the Gospel as well as he preaches it. His messages were of power and inspiration. There were several conversions during the week. Thirteen joined the Church. One or two went to other Churches after making a profession during the meeting.

The week following the first Sunday in August we held our meeting at Pleasant Grove. Bro. Stanley C. Harrell, of Durham, came over on Monday and stayed with us throughout the week. This is the second time that Bro. Harrell has been with us. His messages were full of power and instruction. As a result of the week's work, there were fifteen added to the Church.

The members of both Churches were well pleased with the preaching, and they seem to be greatly helped also. Our visiting friends of the other denominations were also highly pleased with the preaching and progress. We hope to have these brothers to visit us again.

Joseph E. McCauley.

Brethren, you can leave the spiritual side out of your ministry if you desire, but we can promise you now that it will mean serious loss to your life work. If Christianity is not spiritual, then it is not genuine, but some other thing which is not likely to develop into a Church of Christ.

Christian Orphanage

PLEASANT OCCASIONS.

The writer had a most enjoyable visit to the Virginia Valley Central Conference August 14th to 16th. We went by way of Winchester, Va., and was met there by our dear friend and brother Rev. J. F. Morgan, who is the pastor of the Winchester Christian Church. Brother Morgan looked after us while in the city and carried us to the most interesting points. One thing that interested us as much as anything else we saw was the building occupied by President George Washington when a young man and used as his office while a surveyor and located in that section. The old cannon mounted on wheels now standing on the lawn carried us back many years and brought to mind what crude implements of war were used in those days.

The new school building given to the city by an individual was also very interesting.

The apple orchards, with their thousands of trees loaded with apples, were also interesting to us. While we were passing the orchards and looking at the trees loaded with apples, we wondered what our one hundred children would do if they were turned loose around the trees. We imagine apples would disappear rapidly and hungry children would be satisfied. The children here are so fond of fruit that it is hard to teach them to have patience enough to wait till fruit is ripe before they pull it. If our good friends in the Valley Conference just knew how much the children here appreciate fruit, they would be glad to have the opportunity to ship us some each fall to help satisfy that craving for apples.

Mrs. Johnston (our betterhalf), who has charge of the music department and singing class at the orphanage, was invited to render a program at the Masonic picnic at Pleasant Grove High School, Alamance County, August 8th, and she and the class gladly accepted the invitation and gave a program for the occasion. They all came home very happy for the nice time given them, and complimented the good Brunswick stew they had for dinner. This picnic is an annual affair, and our singing class is often invited to give a program for the occasion.

The orphanage was highly honored by a very pleasant visit from Dr. and Mrs. L. F. Johnston, of our Carversville Christian Orphanage, in Pennsylvania. Dr. Johnston is the superintendent of that institution, and informs us that his people are giving him loyal support, and he hopes to have a great institution at some future day when the people have time to get in touch with the great work and take advantage of the opportunity to help the helpless. We extend to them our very best wishes for a great success in their undertaking.

The Mebane Sunday School held their picnic here on Friday, August 17th, and treated the children to a watermelon feast. The melons had been in an ice house for several days and were cold and crisp, and the little fellows enjoyed them to their hearts' content. We hope our Mebane friends will make this an annual affair. We always enjoy having picnics, and hope more of our schools will come to the orphanage on their annual picnics.

A MODEL FOR OUR READERS.

We have not been under a censorship since I came here, as to our acts, but when you figure the time given outside of the Church and all of the inter-relationships, and all that happens, it would take a page of THE SUN weekly. But I will try to brace up and give you the big things in a word.

Here is a sample week:

Monday—11 A. M., doctor's office for treatment; 8 P. M., board meeting.

Tuesday—In study; try to visit afternoon; 8 P. M., school league (am president); 8. P. M., civic league (on two committees).

Wednesday—Study; calls, prayer meeting; 9-10, entertain friends; watermellons.

Thursday—1-2, lunch at hotel; executive committee of American Legion; 8 P. M., American Legion meeting (chaplain); Jr. O. U. A. M. or F. O. A. (have to divide up); 11 A. M., doctor's office for treatment.

Friday—Go fishing; call after supper.

Saturday—For poor white people and colored folks.

When school is going, one to two mornings, speak to 300 children; school entertainment, by league; athletics; county visiting to be kept up; all the rest; preachers' meetings; when do I read, study?

Last winter I lectured—think of it!—for the lodge boys, $100; at Brambleton, for the orphanage, $130; for a "T. B." brother and family at Lanchet's Point, $20; on a rainy night for our high school library. Have a schedule for the winter.

You see I have had some things to write about. Our meeting at Rosemont last fall, 20 conversions, 23 to Church roll. They insisted on my preaching a few weeks more. Bro. Poythress was hurt, and on that Sunday P. M. I baptized 12 of his members.

On Monday was up at 5 A. M.; went to Halifax County, Va.; held meeting for Bro. C. E. Newman, to keep off a disappointment; preached for Dr. Staley "College Day"; got a preacher to fill my pulpit, and ran over to preach for Smith, when their supplies seemed to have suddenly been lost in "no man's land." All the time trying to forget that my family is realy in want for clothing they should have, and some comforts due them, because home-aid are holding from us $200 (good bucks) due us on salary, and wondering if I have forgiven them, after writing deacons and treasurer for two years, and no answer.

You see, dear Doctor, I am not after blowing my own through the papers, but, after all, think I shall, from this on, write you some of our daily life in the cause that is so dear to me and to you. It may be I will call your attention to some of the wickedness in high places. I have some inside information weekly. Some people sell their souls to His Satanic majesty. Some more "whys" and "how can it bees." For instance, how can we have some stars—not meteors or satallites—but stars, be Unitarian in mind and thought, but perhaps Christian at heart?

How can Methodist Episcopal, Presbyterian, Baptist, Unitarian, Universalist, build a Church and unite—or unite in the "every summer service?"

Why the rave about just a backwoods farmer, like myself, being on a committee to search out and consult with reference to a new building.

You can't get the fundamentals out of books. Why the howl about recruits for missions and the call, as a soul-cry of a mother bird for her young in a storm-cloud, for money to send these volunteers to redeem the heathen? Then when a little advantage comes, they kick out and step in the highest places!

Why some of the rant and storming! Our Convention, with the blood-stained hands from fondling our blood and flesh who have been placed upon the altar of sacrifice, to the extent of making men and women stand up, shout themselves hoarse, then when the hurly burly is done, the ideal fought and won, we take up the paper and glance along the social column, and, behold! the sacrifice is not dead, nor burned, but at a dance party, showing their shapely legs through silk hose, and their backs and fronts in "V" form as far as the law allows.

But the next laundry has come, and I must put it on the clothes line, as my good wife has actually run over to Norfolk for an entire afternoon.

You see I wanted to chat with you, and I did. You are a good sport and a real artist, for you let me talk and I have not heard a word from you all through the chat.

Well, mum is the word on pages 2-8.

Hurriedly,
BENJ. F. BLACK.

FROM DR. R. L. WILLIAMSON.

Revival services were held at Shallow Well last week, closing Thursday evening. Rev. J. Lee Johnson did the preaching. His sermons were powerful and convincing. There were a number of conversions and reconsecrations. Bro. W. T. Scott will assist this week in a meeting at Turner's Chapel. With kindest regards and best wishes for you and Mrs. Barrett, I am,

Yours in His service,
R. L. WILLIAMSON.

LASSITER.

John Q. Lassiter was born October 21, 1853; departed this life August 10, 1923. He leaves to mourn their loss five children—T. H., W. C., J. L, M. L. Lassiter and Mrs. Sallie M. Blanchard; eighteen grandchildren, and one sister, Mrs. John Hafler. He was a faithful member of Damascus Christian Church.

Funeral services were conducted at the old home, where he lived with his son. The flowers were many and beautiful. Friends from far and near were there to pay the last tribute of respect to a good man in the home, community, county and Church. In his last days he suffered very much, but was resigned and ready to go. We laid him to rest in the old family burying ground, beside his good wife, who left him a few years ago to enter the joys that await those who are faithful. Dear loved ones, father, brother is gone. Emulate his virtues; for get his shortcomings. Look not to the cold and silent tomb for comfort, but the the hills of Zion, from which cometh your strength.

B. F. BLACK.

LOY.

George Adam Loy passed from labor to reward August 8, 1923, at his home in Burlington, N. C., in his fiftieth year. His wife, two brothers, one sister and his aged mother survive him. He united with the Christian Church in early life and held his membership at the Burlington Church when death came. In the absence of the pastor, Dr. Lankford, the writer conducted the funeral services in the Burlington Christian Church, assisted by Rev. Mr. Jones and Rev. M. W. Buck. His remains were buried at Shallow Ford Christian Church. George loved his Church and was fond of its services.

Amblyopic blindness, cataracts, diseased eyes, crossed eyes and poor vision due to near-sight, far-sight, astigmatism or old-sight, yield to late methods when other systems have failed.

Under our methods, glasses are rarely needed—healthful and proper vision is afforded without them.

THE SUN'S OBSERVATORY

Not True to Type.—

"Smell anything, grandmother?" asked the youngster, who was lying on the floor drawing. Grandmother assured him she did not.

The young artist gave a few finishing touches and repeated his question. Grandmother sniffed the air and again declared she smelled nothing.

"Well," said the boy, "you ought to—I have just drawed a skunk."

Jails and Almshouses Closing.—

Prohibition Officer Edward Hall, at Springfield, Mass., is authority for the statement that since the Volstead act went into effect seven jails and nine almshouses in Massachusetts have been closed for lack of inmates. In addition to this and other blessings which have come from prohibition, Mr. Hall pointed out that the orphan asylums and home for deserted children which formerly were overcrowded are now scarcely half-filled.

In the old days there were never fewer than 2,300 men and women at any given time in the State reformatory at Bridgewater. About 25 per cent women. Today there are but 300 prisoners at Bridgewater, and only a few of them are women. The same is true of the Good Shepherd and of women's reformatories in general.

Not Willing to Work.—

One of the discouraging effects of charity is that recipients become reconciled to their fate and lose ambition to become self-sustaining. The curse of alms is its demoralization of character in the recipient.

For ten years, we are told, a Russian immigrant has toiled in this country with the end in view to unite his family in this country. The task has been prodigious, the more so because in addition to saving the money needed, he must assist in feeding and clothing them there. "Starving Russia" was a reality to him, and the constant fear that his loved ones might be suffering was the torturing goad to increased effort and still greater privation on the part of the father that the day might come when, in this land of opportunity, they might be gathered about him and all enjoy the prosperity and freedom found only here.

The day came not long ago. A daughter and her husband were yet in Russia, among those fed on charity. The relief agent who was the messenger of the glad tidings to the family in Russia, reports they refuse to come to America, the man evidently in fear of being compelled to work.

"Let Peter Reisel send food and money, and we are well off in Russia," was the reported answer of the son-in-law to the tendered transportation to America.

What a field for speculation as to human nature is opened in this incident!

Three Biblical Towns Identified.—

Scholars report that they have identified the three Biblical towns of Shiloh, Bethany and Jeshanah, over whose sites American, British and Danish excavators have been digging. Until a few months ago, no archeological work of any kind had been done over the sites of ancient Jewish towns in the highlands of Palestine. Borings over the site of Shiloh, where the Hebrews kept the ark of the covenant, disclosed clear stratification, representing early Israelite, Saleucido-Roman and Arab occupation. In the first stratum a flint sickleedge was found among other relics. This, considered in connection with the fact that iron sickles were not generally used by the Israelites prior to the eleventh century B. C., indicates something of the age of the stratum.

The findings so far are said to agree remarkably well with the biblical data. Bethany, the town in which Mary and Martha lived with Lazarus, has been identified with the village of Ananiah, mentioned in the book of Nehemiah. The original name, it appears, was Beth-Ananiah. In much the same manner, scholars have identified the town of Jeshanah, mentioned in 2 Chronicles, whose site, it is believed, is now occupied by an Arab fort at Buriel-Isannah.

Savings Bank Straws.—

While the outcry against national prohibition is so loud that it seems like a national protest at times, instead of a megaphone yell made by the thirsty along the salt-water coast that bounds a large part of New York City, it is good to notice that the dear people whose personal liberty is being taken away are not going around complaining of increased poverty because of the Volstead act.

The savings and time deposits in all banks reporting on June 20, 1917, when the country was wet, were $10,526,924,627.97. The deposits on June 30, 1922, after the country was dry, were $15,570,160,000 (taken from the annual reports of the Comptroller of the Treasury). That does not look as if the people's pocketbook was thirsty. And, of course, the rummies will say that the increase in deposits is not due to prohibition, but to other causes. But, granting all that, it is also true that national prohibition has not been a financial calamity, as the wets prophesied it would be.

While we are calling attention to these bank straws, it is also interesting to note that since prohibition the consumption of milk has increased from 84,612,000,000 pounds in 1917 to 102,562,221,000 pounds in 1922. A part of this increase is, no doubt, owing to increased use of milk in families which used to drink beer. Also there has been a very large increase in the consumption of milk at soda fountains, and the amount of buttermilk consumed now is almost twice the amount in the days before prohibition.

Put these two straws into your next drink of cool milk. And as you refresh your thirst with a drink that does not make you feel like hitting your wife with a club, reflect calmly and coolly on the magnified cry that emanates from the Atlantic seaboard hoarsely and beerily shouted through the megaphone of the minority wets.—Exchange.

"The Town that Forgot God."—

In passing one of our theatres the other day we saw this advertisement on the front and were struck by it. We do not attend the movies, and we don't know what the character of the play is, but it really startled us to find an advertisement like this in front of a movie theatre. It set us thinking; for there are towns that have forgotten God, where the commanding things, which have no relation to God and His will and way, reign. We have not space enough to discuss this question, but there is no tragedy that is more serious than the tragedy of a town that has forgotten God, as also it is true there is no tragedy more serious than a man who has forgotten God. The condition, however, becomes very much more serious when the multitudes have turned away from Him and the moral standards of a community have been broken down; when righteousness is no more the law of home life and does not control in civic affairs. It behooves us, therefore, to consider, you and I, whether the town in which we live has forgotten God, and if it has, the hour is ripe for us in whatever way we may, and to the extent of our capacity, to seek to bring the knowledge of God back to our community.

There is a tendency to let things slide on the part of some very good people. The politician does not want Christian people to try to interfere with the moral character of the community. He wants them to let the community alone for the exploiting of bad politics. He very soon gets into trouble with Christian men and women who feel personal responsibility for the moral character of the community in which they live. We get very weary of hearing these men say the preacher ought to attend to his business and let politics alone. When the politicians let the moral character of the people alone and stop fighting every great moral issue, it will then be time for the politician to say to the people of the Church, "You ought to let politics alone." But as long as they debauch good men and break down the character of a good community for selfish reasons, it is the business of the Church to take its stand against them and whatever influence there is that makes a town "Forget God."—Exchange.

NOTES-PERSONALS

Oh, yes, as long as it is you talking about the other fellow, the shoe does not pinch much, but when you are the one talked about, then the shoe does pinch. Better try it on before you try to put it on another.

Rev. John G. Truitt has been very much indisposed since his graduation at Princeton Theological Seminary last spring, but is now very much better and is resting and recuperating at Alleghany Springs, Va. He is just now beginning some very interesting articles for our SUN columns. Give him a good and careful reading every time you have a chance.

If any Church is in need of a pastor, they can learn of a man open to engagement as pastor by sending a self-addressed envelope, stamped with a 2-cent stamp, to the editor of THE CHRISTIAN SUN, Elon College, N. C. This man is a graduate of Elon College and has had two and a half years of training in theological seminaries. He has also had considerable experience in work both in the country and in the city.

"I read your editorial "Fifty Years in the Ministry" with much interest. I could but think of the benefit you have been to me."—W. A. Crawford, Geer, Va. If in these fifty years, the servant has served his Master and helped some of his people to a closer walk with God, then that is enough, even though it be not accompanied by human praise, for after all, human praise is a very small thing as compared with the approval of God, if one may be so fortunate as to have His approval.

"My father was a subscriber to THE CHRISTIAN SUN from its first publication in Hillsboro, N. C., and he kept it up till his death; and from that time I have kept it coming till now, and now I am getting more from reading it than ever before. I wish the Lord may bless you with health and wisdom to edit THE SUN yet for many years." —Hon. I. W. Pritchard, Chapel Hill, N. C. Just such letters from men of real strength help when the burdens are many and the way difficult. But the better thought is the good that may be done in that home where bright and happy children live and read. What an insentive to do one's best!

"I am here in the Blue Ridge Mountains, teaching a State summer school. This is the second school I have taught this year. The first was in Green County, about four miles from where I lived when you visited me some years ago. I organized a Sunday School here last January and have enrolled seventy-six pupils. I ordered supplies from Dayton, Ohio, for the new school, as well as for our Sunday Schools in Green County." —W. A. Crawford, Geer, Va. That is one way our lay brethren can be useful in building up the cause of Christ. How many of our lay brethren will thus enlist in the cause of the Gospel?

We are introducing a new department in our SUN columns, beginning this week, to be known as "The Family Altar," and to be conducted by Chaplain H. E. Rountree, of the United States Navy. We ask the head of each family to give this department close attention. There is matter for every day in the week, and for Sunday, too. We hope this may be the beginning anew of the good old custom of having family prayer every day. Your home needs it and ought to have it, not only for the benefit of father and mother, but family prayer in the home will have a telling and molding effect for good on the children of the household. To neglect family prayer is a step in the wrong direction. Chaplain Rountree provides matter to help out in such worship. He even gives a short prayer for each day; it is too short for the purpose, only because we have not the space to give more room.

We called in the home of the pastor of our Church at Graham, N. C., just for a little brotherly visit (Mrs. B. and myself), and we had a delightful hour there. In talking of the work in the Graham field, Bro. Beougher said several things which impressed us much. Of course, in the days of the long ago, we knew personally many of our people in Graham, but we have not been there but little in more than thirty years, and so most of the acquaintances of those days have gone away to come no more. Only a few are now living that I knew in those days. After these we asked, and the pastor said they are here and doing well as Church attendants. One we asked about was Bro. John D. Kernodle, the editor of the Alamance Gleaner, and Bro. Beougher said he is very regular and a good listener. Then I asked after Bro. Lovick Kernodle, who is now very aged, and Bro. Beougher said, for a man of his age, he is quite regular in his attendance on the Church services. Then we asked after the Montgomerys, and again we were assured that they are fine members. It is a real pleasure to hear a pastor give such testimony of his people, and, by the way, their pastor, Rev. S. L. Beougher, is a strong man, and if you wish us to prove it, you just watch THE SUN'S columns from week to week and read his articles and see if you are willing to say that THE SUN editor is not giving him taffy, but telling the real truth as to Bro. B.'s ability. If he can preach as well as he can write, we are not surprised that he has good listeners.

On the fourth Sunday in August, we had the pleasure of preaching for Rev P. T. Klapp's field down at Mebane, N. C. For forty years we had been, now and then, passing through Mebane, but we had not had the pleasure of visiting the town and the Christian Church there. It was a real pleasure to get acquainted with our people there. We preached in the morning and evening. This is comparatively a new Church organization, although they have a very excellent house of worship, and when it is finished it will be a good-looking house. Bro. Klapp has put in some of his best work here, both in pastoral labors and in the pulpit. He has seen in part the fruits of his labors. He has resigned, and means to leave them at the end of the Conference year. It is to be hoped they may find a man who can fill the place, and do as good work as Bro. Klapp has done for them. We had dinner with Bro. and Sister Fowler, and supper with Miss Lillie Fowler and her two sisters, and in both homes we were well cared for. These are relatives of the Rev. Thos. J. Fowler of the long ago, who in the days of fifty and sixty years ago was a man of great usefulness among our people in this part of North Carolina. Although we never met him in person, yet we had heard so much of him from many of the older brethren that we could but feel a deep interest in his memory. He was buried there, and the cemetery is alongside of the Church. I went to visit this grave. I could but feel a deep and loving respect for his memory, and this sense of respect and love was deepened as I stood looking upon the tombstone that marks his grave. It had sculptured into the stone an open Bible, which to this day speaks to those who visit his grave of his love for the Bible as the Word of God. Blessed be the memory of these departed servants of the Lord. Just a few miles out from Mebane is one of our Churches, known as Zion. Bro. Fowler used to preach there. I am told that Rev. J. F. Apple is now preaching there, and that the old Chruch, under the labors of this young man, is building up rapidly. May he and it continue together in the cause of Christ.

On Friday afternoon, August 31, 1923, we journeyed by auto from Elon College to Winston-Salem, N. C., to visit Dr. W. W. Staley in his sickness. Four of his friends accompanied us. When we reached his room in the Lawrence Hospital, he looked up in surprise and said: "Why, where are you all going?" I replied, as did others: "Why, we have just come to see you." "Well, then," he said, if we remember correctly, "where have you been?" and again the reply was given: "We have driven from Elon College here just to see you." And still he seemed hardly able to take it in that we had driven so many miles just to see him. Then he told us of how good the people had been to him since his sickness. He had received so many letters and so many flowers and other kind attentions from his friends. Then, turning to the editor of this paper, he said: "I wish you would express to my friends my high appreciation of all the kind attention they have shown me. Tell them I cannot write now, but that I do truly appreciate all their loving attention to me in my sickness." We assured him his wish should be complied with.

Now, as to his condition. His condition is serious, but his physician is very hopeful of complete restoration to his usual good health. It is expected that he will have to submit to an operation of a rather serious nature, which he will undergo, if present plans are not in some way frustrated, on Wednesday, September 5th. Dr. Stirling, his hospital physician, assured me that he is very hopeful of complete success. He said he had not lost but one patient in his practice in a similar operation, and that he had operated on men eighty-five years of age. He thinks Dr. Staley's condition is very good, although at this time he is far from comfortable, but is considered as doing well.

We ask that the prayers of our brotherhood be offered in his behalf, and let us begin at once, as he will likely go under the surgeon's knift before this request reaches our people. Remember him daily, or oftener, as it may be convenient. Let him not be forgotten. J. P. B.

Some one has asked about the number of years the present editor of THE CHRISTIAN SUN has been in the editorial harness. If that may interest our readers as to our service in the editor's chair, we will give the facts as follows: (1) On THE SUN from February 10, 1879, to February 10, 1881 (two years); (2) on THE SUN from July 1, 1882, to November 19, 1891 (nine years, five months); (3) on THE SUN from June 1, 1922, to September 1, 1923 (one year, three months); (4) on Sunday School Worker from July 1, 1881, to July 1, 1882 (one year); (5) on Sunday School Quarterly from July 1, 1883, to 1884 (one year); (6) on the Shining Way, about 1897 (one year); (7) on the Herald of Gospel Liberty, 1907 to July 1, 1919 (twelve years, six months). According to these dates, the present editor of THE CHRISTIAN SUN has given twenty-eight years and two months to editing periodical literature for religious purposes, and that is by the grace of God a longer period by several years than any other man in the Christian Church has given to a similar work, North or South, East or West, in and for the Christian Church. When we think of these long years of service, it may seem that we have been blessed of God with a rare privilege; and that is true, but do you think of whether we have met these responsibilities in a manner that shall be pleasing to God or not. If we have, then there is cause for real gratitude to God and for real rejoicing personally. We dare not venture to say or do more than hope that at least helpful and acceptable service has been rendered in the name and for the sake of the Lord. If any person who reads THE CHRISTIAN SUN feels that at any time he or she has been helped by this work of editing our Church literature, we ask that you will grant us one simple request, and that is that at least once each day, so long as we may be permitted to occupy the editor's chair, you will engage in prayer, that the Lord will give me wisdom and strength and courage to do His work in His way and for His glory in the building up of the Church. Do not forget this request, please.

BRO. GRAY'S REPORT.

It seems, in some way, the annual report of Rev. H. M. Gray, to the Georgia and Alabama Christian Conference, did not get a place in the last "Annual," and for some reason it needs to be reported; hence we give the following:

Ministerial report to the Georgia and Alabama Christian Conference of the pastoral labors of Rev. H. M. Gray for the Conference year commencing October, 1921, and ending October, 1922:

Churches in charge: Lanett, Langdale, Oak Grove. Sermons preached, 140; conversions in pastoral charge, 135; persons baptized, 30; prayer meetings held, 40; members received, 227; pastoral visits, about 200; burial services, 20; salary received, $1,577.48; paid on Conference requirements, $130.00 in full. I received 9 members for the Methodist Church and nine for the Baptist Church; total for the year, 245, and seven young men have been called to preach from the Lanett Church as a result of the great revival the Church enjoyed. REV. H. M. GRAY.

BEAMAN AT WAKEFIELD, VA.

The revival services at the Christian Church at Wakefield, Va., closed Sunday night, August 26th. Through the efforts of our esteemed pastor, Rev. A. R. Flowers, we secured the services of Rev. T. E. Beaman, who did most of the preaching. Bro. Beaman is a member of the North Carolina Freewill Baptist Conference, and so far as we can see, preaches the same old Gospel of salvation through Christ that our ministers of the Christian Church have been preaching all these years.

Probably the greatest expression of our appreciation for Bro. Beaman and his services is in the fact that the people of our town unite in the hope of having him again. He has our best wishes in his work. A. H. SPIVY.

THE SPIRIT AT ELON.

BY MISS ESSIE MAE TRUITT.

In the fall of 1917, when I entered Elon College, well do I recall the lonely feeling when I was nearing the college where I was to spend four years preparing for life's work. Immediately upon arriving, the lonely feeling vanished, for the Y. W. C. A. cabinet members of the college were at the station to welcome us freshmen, introducing themselves and others to us, carrying our handbags, asking for our baggage check, showing us to our rooms, and rendering every kindness at all convenient. We felt the "spirit at Elon" at once.

There was no time to feel homesick, lonely, or blue. In the evening we were invited out on the campus to sing hymns and songs that we all knew. There we seemed to catch the true spirit at Elon, and it seemed as though we were a large body of brothers and sisters, and from the first we shared our happiness with each other; also our troubles, and using them as stepping-stones in life's pathway.

The true "spirit at Elon" is Christian character first and always. There is an atmosphere prevalent which tends to strengthen the spiritual life of the students as individuals, and to bring them closer together in their various activities.

The "spirit at Elon" is to ever push onward and upward to attain the goal which we set out to attain. There are good times—yes! not the time that is wasted in foolishness and lavishness—but good times in athletics, in debates and in college socials, and with these our college career is made a pleasure instead of a drudgery.

After we have finished our college course and have gone from the sacred halls into various walks of life, the "spirit at Elon" still lingers with us. Some of our class-mates or friends may have won honor, or fame, and we may meet them in our travels. Yet they show no distinction toward us, and are willing and ready to aid us in any way. This is one minor reason why it is helpful to go to college.

Elon is calling for young men and women to help them to greater service. Though she has gone through the flames, the "spirit at Elon" is not scorched. So, may we, as a Christian Church, render our full support to our Christian college, and keep the "spirit at Elon" growing.

3,000 THE CHRISTIAN SUN. 9,000

There are between 8,000 and 10,000 families represented in the Southern Christian Convention, which means if a copy of THE CHRISTIAN SUN is placed in each family, a possible subscription list of 9,000 copies. There are now circulated approximately 3,000 copies, or about one-third of our Church families are reached. Hence, there should be added to the list 6,000 new subscribers in order to have the Church paper placed in every family.

Now, the great personal effort required to do this must be rewarded. To compensate this labor, if premiums are given, it will take 20 automobiles, or 40 radio machines, or 50 to 60 talking machines, or 90 to 100 typewriters, or 200 to 300 watches, etc. Don't you think you will have a good opportunity to secure one of these prizes?

But you need not confine your solicitations to your Church alone. You have friends in other denominations who will gladly assist you by giving a subscription. Make your appeal in a straightforward manner. True men and women are interested in the success of their friends and will lend a helping hand.

PHILOSOPHY AND REVELATION IN CHRISTIAN THOUGHT—BUT WHICH?

Fom the earliest days of human thinking there has been more or less of conflict between philosophy and revelation. Philosophy has been defined as the love and pursuit of the wisdom of this world. Revelation, on the other hand, is the expression of God's will as to the works of His hands for His people. Here open to us two fields of unparalleled importance. It is to be expected that man will be interested in human thinking. He wishes to know what his fellow-men are thinking. It is even far more important that men should wish to know what God is thinking. Human thinking is interesting and important, but divine thinking transcends all other thought. The difference between the values of the two is the difference between the spider's web and the planets. The one is very thin and not dependable, while the others are always to be found in their places and functioning to the glory of their Maker.

This comparison will be found, on examination, to represent the situation exactly. Philosophy, as an expression of human thinking, is evanescent, easily broken and soon forgotten. Revelation, as an expression of divine thinking, is always dependable and the same. The reason for this difference is to be found in the nature of the two systems of thinking. Human thought is as changeable as the moon, while divine thought, like the sun, is the same every day. By this we mean that God's thought on a given theme is always the same; but the same cannot be said of human thinking, and it cannot, because it may be here today but gone tomorrow. It is of immense value today, but tomorrow it is not worth the paper on which it may be written. If you wish this position to be defended, take up the history of the two systems of thinking and you will readily see it.

From the beginning, God has been giving out His thoughts to the children of men, and these thoughts are the same today as they were in the beginning. Whatever God thought on the morning when the stars sang together, He thought on the morning when Jesus arose from the dead, and what He thought on that morning, He thought when He closed the last page of Revelations, and that He thinks yet. It is not so with philosophy, for its thought changes almost as often as the weather. What was regarded as true in philosophy ten years ago may be regarded as entirely false today, and a man who keeps well posted might not accept it as truth at all. The philosophy of one generation is the nonsense of the next. That is not true of divine thinking, for what was true in the days of Moses is true today. It may be said that this or that was true in the days of Moses, but not now. Take as an illustration of this fact the Mosaic law, which is now done away even in the Church. Quite true, but that does not disprove the claim, for while the form of the Mosaic law is changed, the truth of that law is still in force. Then the ceremonial law was for the cleansing of the Jewish people and for preparing them for God's highest purposes in them. The form of that law has changed, but its truth has not changed, and is shown in the fact that Jesus became the end of the law to every one that believes. Thus the truth of the atonement, which was established under Moses is perpetuated in Christ. He ended the law by fulfilling it all in Himself.

On the other hand, no such claim can be maintained for philosophy, for as history shows, philosophy has been changing with the coming and going of the years, from the day of its beginning till today, and it is likely to continue to do so till the end of the wisdom of this world shall fold the drapery of its couch about it, and be no more. We believe it can be shown that the leading phases of philosophy have changed at least with the coming and going of each generation. If one would familiarize himself with the changes which have come into the various philosophic systems for the last two thousand years, he would, in taking a retrospect of the same, find a kaleidoscope of such proportions as he could find only in one other field of human learning, and that would be in the twin sister of philosophy —the realm of the scientific, for science changes about as often as philosophy. What is science in one generation is on the rubbish heap when the next generation comes to its maturity.

Now we are facing a puzzle. We have three systems of thinking. One is the philosophic, another is the scientific, and the other is the divine. The puzzle is this: How can any intelligent man or woman, after acquainting himself or herself with the history of these three lines of human thought, and seeing that the first has been checkered from the beginning, with constant changes in its claims to truth, and that the second (the scientific) is no better, being a twin sister of the former, and that the third—divine revelation of the thoughts and purposes of God have always stood the test of the ages; that it is the "same yesterday and today and forever." The puzzle is this: How can men and women of intelligence, cultured minds, choose the first or second method and turn their backs on the third, the divine revelation of God, when His thoughts have always been as firm as the eternal rocks? If some of our scholars will undertake to explain this seeming anomaly and show a reason for clinging to the first and second, and for repudiating the third. If a man had three friends, viz: Thomas, William and John, and he had found in actual experiment that Thomas was disappointing and that William was much like him, while John had always been dependable and true to the right, how we say, would it be possible to cling to the first and second and repudiate the third? That is just what some of our scholars are doing when they hold on to the conclusions of human philosophy and to the deductions of science, while they turn away from the truth of the inspired Word of God that has stood the test of the ages and is yet to be found untrue to the truth, the eternal verities of the Bible.

It would seem to a thinking mind that if we had tried to make a trip at sea in one boat and then in another, and both had failed, burying its passengers in the depths of the sea, and then if the next boat should come along with the assurance that it had safely made every trip for two thousand years and was still in fine shape for sailing the sea, which boat would a reasonable man choose? We fail to see how it would be possible for men of sense to take the one boat that had been safe and sound for two thousand years and commit themselves to either of the other two. You can see the significance of this little parable. Sensible men would travel by the safe boat and avoid the other two that had failed practically in every voyage they had undertaken. We admit that a poor unfortunate who had been born with a badly deficient mind might be induced to travel by the unsafe boats, but the man who is sane and sensible, it seems, could not be induced to make life's journey on one of the unsafe boats while there was at his disposal one that had never failed to make her voyage in safety and had never lost a man.

As we see it, here is the whole difficulty with men who stumble over the teachings of the Bible, but commit themselves to philosophy and science, with such faith as to make it appear to them a bright and shining way. It is not that they have any proof against the accuracy and reliability of the Bible, but having accepted human philosophy and finding that in opposition to the Bible they boldly accept philosophy or science, and it may be both, because they do not agree with the Bible. It is not, as we think, because they really believe the Bible is wrong, but since the Bible so persistently shows men their moral and spiritual wrongs, they feel a degree of pleasure in accepting anything that will condemn the Bible and give them a little shallow pretense of safety for a time, but what a mistake for sensible men! Talk about the consensus of opinion among scholars so agreeing, it looks like it was the consensus of another class of men, whom we will not name, because we wish them a better standing than such a conclusion could possibly give them.

A LITTLE VISIT TO THE OLD HOME.

If there be a man who never had a childhood's home, he is to be pitied, for he can know nothing of the joy of going back to that sacred spot to rekindle the memories of childhood days. What days they were! Days so filled with air castles, promises of the great things that were to come, when he should become a man, or when she should become a woman. Then we saw these air castles, and the beauty of it was we saw all the good and beautiful things that were to come to us some time, and we saw only the good things that were coming to us—not one of the bad things in life did we see in this wonderful picture. No wonder we were charmed with such a prospect—any dear soul would be.

But there were other memories quite as dear. We took one more look at the old house in which we lived in those days. It was very plain, but it was a dear old building, and its dearness remains till this day. As I looked, the scene grew in its loveliness. It was the reproduction of the pictures made on my childish mind away back in the "fifties" and "sixties" of the last century, but what pictures they were! The real scenes have long since faded, but the memory holds them just as sacred as ever, and even more so. As I thought of those days, there we all were in the dear old sitting-room. There was father, sitting in his accustomed chair, and near-by was mother sitting in the old rocking chair, knitting, and the children, they were all there, chatting as children do, with now and then one teasing another, and in the corner opposite father's seat there was my maternal grandmother, aged, but cheerful and bright, and always interested in what we children were doing. Also, so many of these dear faces can now be seen only as they are held in memory. Grandmother was the first to go, then father went away, and years later Brother Joseph was the next, and then mother left us, and then Sister Willie. Of those who remain, I saw Jennie, Robert, Mills and Mattie—the remnants of a once large and happy family. William, though living, was not with us to fill out the picture, but the picture of all the dear ones was easily made out and I could see them, not merely as they were then, but as they are now, and what a change! Once we looked upon ourselves as children, but now we are all wearing gray hairs and the wrinkles on the faces are clearly visible, and with the growing ages some of us have grown to be more like father, and some more like mother, and we all esteem it an honor to be like them. Brother William is now about the age father was when he died, and is more like him in his ways than any other of the boys. To myself comes the likeness of mother and I prize it, for if any boy had a better mother than I had, then he was a fortunate one. The old house in which we all once lived is no longer a place of family residence, but it has been converted into a building for other purposes and another building has taken its place. This fact, however, could not rob me of the picture of the once plain, but happy, family as we were assembled in the evenings after the day's work was done. How beautiful to my eyes is this family picture, and how I prize it. Until my memory totters and fails, it cannot be taken from me. Other pictures fade, but this one will not.

I was at home this time to celebrate in a quiet way an important event in my life—the fiftieth anniversary of my entering the ministry. I felt I could not do this in a better or more fitting way than to go back to the home and to the old home Church at Antioch, Isle of Wight County, Va., where I spent my childhood in the Sunday School. Through the kind invitation of the pastor, I preached for the home people on Sunday, August 19th. The text was Gen. 35:14. It had no special reference to the occasion. The main reference to the occasion was a little talk of perhaps three minutes preceding the sermon in which reference was made to fifty years in the ministry. My first text was from Heb. 3:1—

"Wherefore, holy brethren, partakers of the heavenly calling, consider the Apostle and High Priest of our profession, Christ Jesus."

It was preached in Union Christian Church, near Franklin, Southampton County, Va., on Sunday, August 10, 1873. As Dr. Staley has said: "The distance between two points in the future seems long and tedious, but when the same distance is in the past, it seems very short indeed." Looking forward, fifty years seems almost without a shore line, but when it is passed, it seems as if it were but a few months ago.

At Antioch, where this service was held, the day had been named "home-coming day," and there were quite a few there who now live elsewhere. There was an unexpected featur introduced which touched many hearts. Since I was last at home, last December, my brother, Robert H. Barrett and his family had been overwhelmed in a great sorrow. His youngest daughter, Irene, had been burned to death. She lived after the accident three weeks, but died a very beautiful death, when viewed from the standpoint of a Christian. A few hours before she left us, she called her father to her bedside and said: "Papa, I want you to pray that I may go home tonight." He very naturally shrank from the ordeal, but upon her insistance, he tried to pray, as she had asked him to do, and from the time that prayer was offered, her great suffering ceased, and a few hourslater she went home to be with Jesus and the angels. Just before she breathed her last, as her brothers and father and mother stood about her bed, she said, looking them full in the face: "When you come home next summer (as they are in the habit of doing), I want you to remember me." It was felt by some that her request must not be forgotten, and so her oldest brother, Rev. J. Cleveland Barrett, Conshohocken, Pa., and a cousin (Miss Alice Barrett, of Ponce, Porto Rico, sang in acknowledgement of her request and as a tribute to her beautiful and consistent Christian life, "The Old Rugged Cross"—

"To the old rugged cross I will ever be true,
Its shame and reproach gladly bear;
Then He will call me some day to my home far away,
Where His glory forever I'll share."

It was a day of tender memories and of soul-blessing, one that we cannot soon forget; but there cannot be many more such meetings here before some of the rest of us will be called to meet the dear ones who have gone on before.

How true it is of us all that we are—

Drifting today on life's sunset tide,
Drifting far out toward the great divide;
Drifting from friends and loved ones here,
Drifting to heaven and loved ones dear.
Thou art drifting home.

Drifting with Jesus as our faithful guide,
Drifting, yes drifting, on the outgoing tide;
Drifting with heart fixed on things unseen,
Drifting beyond things sordid and mean.
Thou art drifting home.

Drifting with Jesus, yes, hand in hand,
Drifting with Him to that love-lit land;
Drifting to join that celestial choir,
Drifting to things that are purer and higher.
Thou art drifting home.

Drifting with Jesus from sorrow and strife,
Drifting with Him to eternal life;
Drifting with Jesus, His ransomed to greet,
Drifting with Him, thy joy is complete.
Thou art almost home.

Drifting with Jesus, O God, may we be
Drifting with Jesus over life's troubled sea!
Drifting with Jesus, from Him ne'er to roam,
Drifting with Jesus, we shall all reach home.
We shall all reach home.

A FEW WORDS TO YOUNG MOTHERS.

It may be that old and experienced mothers will not need the word we are about to give, so we say these words are for young mothers, such as have not had much experience in this wonderfully delicate task of serving as a mother. It is a delicate task, and not a great many are really very well qualified to administer its duties. We have found in the Sunday School Times two letters—one is from a young mother, who writes to Mother Ruth to ask certain questions to guide this young mother in training her children. The correspondence follows:

"My dear Mother Ruth,—I want a little advice, as a young married woman. I am very anxious to be a good mother, and I am eager to deal in the right manner with my children. I would like to know if you believe in corporal punishment. I have read so many books on the subject that I am all confused. The different theories I have tried to apply really are ridiculous, if the consequences were not so serious. I want to do the right thing, no matter how hard it is. I will appreciate your opinion.—Young Mother."

"Dear Young Mother,—Your question is a very vital one to the home and to the community at large. Well-trained children make good citizens, and empty reformatories and jails. Oh, the power of motherhood! How I wish the women of our land would study to make good mothers!

"To make a general statement on corporal punishment would be unwise, for children are so different in their needs in training. The great charm and pleasure, for a mother, is to study each child's peculiarities, and direct the life according to the different needs. That I believe in the good, old-fashioned "spank cure," I can say unhesitatingly. And my authority for it is found in the Bible. Read Prov. 13:24, and 22:15, and especially Prov. 29:15, 17.

"The Word of God is the true guide for every mother. We are told there 'Train up a child in the way he should go: and when he is old he will not depart from it.'

"I wonder if you have family prayers in your home. There is nothing to keep the wheels of life running in the right direction like gathering the family around the prayer circle! Oh, little mother, give your child the best in life, and that which comes straight from heaven! Teach them to depend on God, and in the days to come you will not regret it.

"While I believe in proper corporal punishment, I do not believe in hitting or striking with the hand. And I do not believe in ever punishing when not in perfect control themselves. To strike a child in anger is almost impardonable! I know a father who felt a whipping was often necessary to train his ten children in the right way, but he never punished at the time of the wrongdoing, but always allowed a day to intervene before punishing. This was not easy on the father or child, but was a method which made the children know they were never struck in anger. Those children not only loved their father, but believed in his respect for justice, and knew if they disobeyed they must pay the penalty. To the truly loving mother, a corporal punishment is harder to administer than not to do it.

"I know a mother who never punished without going down on her knees in prayer with the child, and there the child learned to know sin and to fight the enemy of her life. Satan wants your child, and you must teach him where he can get power to overcome every sin.

"Yours is the greatest work on earth! Don't wonder if you get puzzled in it. Remember, there is not another child like yours in the world, and you cannot apply any rules to your disciplining; only God who made the child can direct you in guiding it aright. Prayer is your weapon!"

HOW IS THIS WITH YOUR CHURCH?

The Rev. Livingston Johnson, editor of the Biblical Recorder, who has just been abroad, going to Stockholm, Sweeden, to attend a great meeting of the Baptists, strikes an important note in one of his letters to his paper at home, as follows:

"Wednesday was 'Missionary Day.' An excellent sermon was preached by Rev. W. Y. Fullerton, of London. He exhibited the old hammer with which William Carey made shoes, and said that William Carey praised God with the hammer just as truly as he did when preaching to the heathen in Burmah, because he was dreaming and planning for the work of the Lord.

"This may be as good place as I shall have to say that European Baptists do not have the craze for boy preachers that we do in America. Mr. Fullerton would be laid on the shelf in our country, and yet we have few preachers who can unfold the Scriptures as he did today. Most of the European preachers here are past middle life and are actively engaged in the ministry. They are great preachers. It may be well to say another thing here: These European preachers give themselves to the ministry. They are not expected to attend to all the business affairs of the Church, visit constantly whether or not they are especially needed in the homes, and snatch what time they can from these semi-secular employments to study and prepare their sermons. They follow the apostolic method of 'giving themselves to prayer and to the ministry of the Word.'"

Bro. Johnson's suggestion as to boys in the ministry is worthy of our thought. If a boy is called to preach, and can, as we sometimes say, "deliver the goods," why we say let him preach. Do not stop him just because he is young. We believe this argument will hold good at the other end of the line. If an old man has been called to preach, and can do it, is in physical and spiritual trim for preaching, we say it is a shame to refuse him the privilege of preaching the Gospel. The truth is the God-called man is always ready to do his part in proclaiming the Gospel—at least as long as he has strength to do it.

Bro. Johnson says that Mr. Fullerton would be laid on the shelf in this country were he here, and yet he regards him as a preacher of remarkable power. Now, why should such a man be required to give up the ministry when he is really in his prime for preaching the Gospel?

SUFFOLK LETTER.

The way one looks, determines the impression made upon the mind. Looking forward in human life and service, that time seems long; looking backward over life's years and experiences, it seems short. The difference is not in facts, but in impressions. God sees "the end from the beginning," and hence "one day with the Lord is as a thousand years, and a thousand years as one day." This leads me to say that right views eliminate the varied experiences that discourage or encourage us. Fifty years seem long at the beginning, and short at the close. These thoughts are intended to introduce to the readers of this letter Rev. J. Pressley, Barrett, D. D., editor of THE CHRISTIAN SUN, who has been in the Christian ministry for fifty years, having preached his first sermon August 10, 1873. He has been in the ministry more than one-third of the age of the United States of America. Many changes have taken place in the nation and the Church during this half-century; but signs of progress appear in all directions. The leaders of that day have passed over the river, and new leaders fill their places and fill new places in the larger sphere of Christian activities. Wellons, Manning, Savage, Duck, West, in Eastern Virginia; Iseley, Holt, Moring, Martin, in North Carolina. Barrett has always been enthusiastic in the advocacy of his convictions, supersensitive in regard to theological dangers, rigidly adhering to fundamental doctrines. He has filled many positions in the Church as pastor, as official, and especially as editor. In the field as pastor, he was devoted, watchful, fearful, and overanxious, making the work a strain on his nerves and his spiritual nature.

The chief line of leadership was in the introduction and promotion of missions. He introduced into the Eastern Virginia Conference a system of missionary contributions in the form of 6 per cent notes, the interest of which was to be paid annually until the term for which the note was given expired. When I began work in Suffolk, that was the only money sent to Conference for missions. I collected the interest on those notes, and that was all that was collected; but it was the beginning, and when those expired (the principal was void upon the full payment of the interest for the full period of ten years), then followed annual offerings for missions. The simple system had cultivated the missionary spirit, and now one Church will send up more missionary money to Conference than the whole Conference did thirty-five years ago. As a rule, the pioneers, the promoters of ideas, the leaders of new movements never receive full recognition for their service. The biggest redwood tree started in the tiniest seed in the earth; so the missionary idea, as a working force in the Church, has had small beginning.

But Dr. Barrett's chief service has been in the editorial field. Editor of THE CHRISTIAN SUN for eleven years, of the Herald of Gospel Liberty, Dayton, Ohio, for twelve years and six months, and again of THE CHRISTIAN SUN for two years, his experience and usefulness have been tested in this tripple-tripod service. He has not been as liberal in his theological utterances as the Church which he represents, but he has never been accused of insincerity. His convictions have found expression in his editorials, and his critics have turned upon him the same methods which he has used upon them. There has been the absence of Christian tolerance on both sides; but this is always true in the field of theological thinking and discussion. The other thinker is liberal, if he thinks with us; and illiberal, if he differs from us. But it must be borne in mind that truth emerges from opposite thinking. That Dr. Barrett possesses the editorial gift and has cultivated it, is written in his history; that he has not kept up with the changes in theological interpretation and application of the Word of God may be questioned in the spirit of Christian thinking. It is as difficult for the new generation to enter fully into the ways of thinking and doing of the past generation as it is for the old generation to enter into the ways of thinking and doing of the new generation; but it must be admitted that the new generation discovers new ideas and new interpretations of old ideas, else there could be no progress; and it must be admitted further that there would be no new ideas were it not for the old ideas. The Christian era is the new interpretation of the patriarchal era, and the Spirit gave us a new interpretation of the Christian era.

But this letter did not intend to drift into theological discussion, but to write a line of congratulation to THE SUN'S editor, to express appreciation of his service through THE SUN, the oldest Church paper in the Southern Convention, and the Herald of Gospel Liberty, the oldest religious newspaper in the world; and to hope that the second half century, as a minister, may continue for years his great work and usefulness to our beloved Zion.

W. W. STALEY.

PETER'S USE OF "PRECIOUS."

Peter uses the word "precious" seven times in his two brief epistles. He uses it to describe four different things. I have just recently read these two epistles, and I could but notice how like seven great sign-posts the words were on the part of my reading as I went from verse to verse and chapter to chapter.

As I read 1 Peter 1:7 (precious faith), a part of the history of Peter came into my mind. What did he know about the faith? But had he not left his boats and nets to become a propounder of the faith? Had he not in the searching moment of our Saviour's question replied with heaven-given faith: "Thou art the Christ; the Son of the living God?" Had he not seen its power on the day of Pentecost? Yes, brave, impulsive, confident, unstable, affectionate Peter had known full well personally how the faith had saved him both on the Sea of Gallilee when he doubted and on the sea of life when he denied his Redeemer. And now as Peter recounts his experiences with Jesus—some of them sad from his own standpoint, and yet glorious—he thinks of his faith in Jesus as being one of the four things he can justly and conservatively call "precious." Hence, in his second letter, he re-enforces his former statement by ascribing himself "a slave" of Jesus, writing "to all them that have obtained a like precious faith with us in the righteousness of our God and the Saviour Jesus Christ."

As I came to verse 19 of the opening chapter of his first epistle, my eyes fell upon his second use of the word "precious." This time it is "precious blood." How beautiful this phrase is, and especially as it comes from the pen of Peter! By it, he reaches at once the superb core of his letter and the supreme compassion of his Lord. It was the blood that changed Peter forever. After his bitter repentance of his ugly conduct in Pilate's outer court, he was in just the right state of mind to suffer intensely at his Lord's crucifiction. How tenderly he speaks of Him in this verse as "a Lamb without blemish and without spot"! Peter is now old and facing martyrdom, but he cannot forget that day, nor the "precious blood," nor the spotless Lamb! There is nothing uncertain or unsound about Peter's gospel, and dying for the faith he flings it to us unfiltered. God grant that we may not forget the precious blood, nor preach a crossless Christ! There is something beautifully true about the old colored man's paraphrase when he sang "There is a fountain filled with blood, and sinners plunging in." There may be other pleas (?) for the impenitent and heartless, but for the broken and contrite heart, the precious blood is his only plea.

Having obtained the "precious faith," and the "precious blood" applied, it is not strange that Peter should call our attention, figuratively, to the fact that we are become a part of something; that all the foregoing is for a very definite purpose and planned to a definite program. We are become a part of that building which is eternal and whose corner-stone is "chosen of God, elect, precious." How noble of Peter to make it thrice emphatic (1 Pet. 2:4, 6, 7). You remember that many years prior to this, Christ had said to him: "Thou art Peter, and upon this rock I will build My Church." Peter tells us plainly that the Church is built upon a precious, chief, living Stone, and that He is the one who is "rejected indeed of men." Builders may reject this despised stone, but God has laid it in Zion forever! The gates of hell shall never prevail against it. If any one shall try to theorize it out of the way, such an one shall find it "a stone of stumbling, and a rock of offense." A rock in the right place is a good thing; in the wrong place, it is a stumbling block. If we give Jesus first place in our lives, we ourselves are changed from stumbling-blocks in God's kingdom to "living stones * * * acceptable to God, through Christ."

And, finally, in Peter's second epistle 1:4, he calls Christ's promises "precious and exceeding great." Think of the promises He had made to Peter! And think of their fulfillment! Fisher of men! Three thousand in one day! Founder after Christ of the Christian Church! First preacher to Gentiles! Sometimes he was impetuous, weak, and wavering; even after Pentecost he had to suffer a stinging rebuke by a fellow-apostle—but his Lord and Saviour had promised to see him through. Accordingly, he interceded for him even while He was with him on earth. There are said to be 32,000 promises to us in the Bible. Not a single word of God's, or His Son's, shall fail. To keep them, Jesus gave His life on the cross; to keep them He ever maketh intercession for us with groanings that cannot be uttered. When the work went hard with Peter he could, just as you and I can do, fall back of Jesus' promises. When he faced death and needed a friend, he could rely on the promise: "I will supply your every need according to My riches in glory." And no doubt the friend who foretold His martyrdom, stood by his side.

Faith in Christ, the blood of Christ, the living corner-stone, Christ and His exceeding great promises—these are the things Peter calls precious. 1 Pet. 2:7, 8, "For unto you, therefore, that believe is the preciousness; but for such as disbelieve * * * a store of stumbling and a rock of offense."

INTERPRETATION OF THE BIBLE—No. 2.

By Rev. Julius C. McCaslin,
Methodist Protestant Church, Anderson, Ind.

Wisdom of Man—Foolishness.

Inasmuch as there are two interpreters and two systems of interpretation, it is evident that there are two kinds of interpretation—the man-made interpretation of the natural man and the God-given interpretation of the spiritual man. The natural man, having rejected the guidance of the Holy Spirit, with his heart darkened by sin, his mind puffed up with worldly wisdom, surrounded in his study with the latest books, now proceeds to interpret the Bible according to the spirit and most advanced methods of this cultured age. He interprets Genesis one and two as a primitive account of evolutionary creation, written by ignorant men who did not know what they were writing. He tells us that the sin of Adam and Eve, as recorded in Gen. 3:1-19, was merely an error of mortal mind and never had any disastrous physical, mental or moral effect upon humanity. He explains that the old doctrine of the fall of man is preposterous to the modern mind. He interprets the record of the flood, burning bush, raising of Lazarus and the deliverance of Paul and Silas from prison as folk-lore tales. With a great show of intellectual superiority, he declares that all miracles are myths, that parables have no doctrinal value, that the Bible cannot be taken seriously in this advanced age, and that Jesus Christ, being human, undoubtedly made mistakes and did not know what He was talking about when He discussed His second coming to this world. The natural man makes 2 Tim. 3:16 mean that man, having a divine element in his nature, gave the Bible to the world with the approval of God; that the Bible is inspired only in the sense that other good books are inspired. He also claims that the intelligence, education, attainment and spirit of this age demands a new Bible. With shameless blasphemy, he states that Matt. 1:18-25 and Luke 2:1-8 is a rather unreliable account of the birth of a natural, illegitimate child whose parents, Joseph and Mary, named Jesus. In like manner, he declares that the death of Christ on the cross is a heroic example of supreme sacrifice, but that the idea of His giving "His life a ransom for many" is unthinkable and repugnant to the consensus of modern scholarship, and must be rejected as a vile species of butcher-shop religion. As for the resurrection, intercession and second coming of Christ to establish His kingdom, he dismisses all with a wise nod of his head and a final wave of his hand as he exclaims: "Superstition." With studied finality, he interprets the New Jerusalem and the lake of fire, described in Rev. 21:1-8, as a wild dream of the imagination. Thus man-made interpretation contradicts the plain statements of God's Word. The spirit of this age never hesitates to insult the Almighty.

The spiritual man, alone with God, in the woods or in his study, having asked for wisdom from above and depending on the Holy Spirit to guide into all truth and teach him the meaning of the references under consideration, proceeds to interpret the Word of God. As stated by Dr. C. I. Scofield, concerning the inspiration of the Bible: "The revealed things are communicated in spirit-taught words. This implies neither mechanical dictation nor the effacement of the writer's personality, but only that the Spirit infallibly guides in the choice of words from the writer's own vocabulary." This truth can be applied to the interpretation of the Bible. Human intellect never functions with greater efficiency, never thinks with stronger force, never conceives with deeper thought, never perceives the truth with keener insight, never holds facts and truths in memory with such a masterly grasp, never reasons with such rigid, convincing and conclusive logic; yea, conscience, will, and emotions never function with such brilliancy, effectiveness and power as when under the conscious, personal guidance and teaching of the Holy Spirit.

God reveals to the spiritual man the interpretation of Gen. 1 and 2, as a literal account of the creation of the world, life and man. The man of God, as instructed by the Holy Spirit, tells us that the sin of Adam and Eve is a real fact and that the physical, mental and moral consequences of the fall of man, such as sickness, suffering, struggle, and death, are horrible realities. He states with God-given authority that the flood, the burning bush, the raising of Lazarus, the deliverance of Paul and Silas from prison; indeed, all the miracles recorded in the Bible, actually occurred. With God-given insight, the Spirit-filled man interprets 2 Tim. 3:16; 2 Peter 1:21; John 20:31, and Rev. 22:18-19, and all related references to mean that the Bible is the supernatural, authentic, complete, redemptive, inerrent, verbally inspired Word of God. He places a literal interpretation upon the plain statements of the Bible concerning the virgin birth, perfect life, perfect Gospel, infinite wisdom, deity, crucifixion, substitutionary atonement, physical resurrection, intercession, personal return and kingdom of Jesus Christ. The Spirit-taught man understands the doctrinal value of the parables and prophecies, especially Isa. 11; Dan. 5-9; Matt. 13; Zech. 14; Rev. 2-20, and all related passages, and applies them to Jew, Gentile, Church of God, believers, unbelievers, kingdom of heaven, kingdom of God and the coming kingdom of Jesus Christ, respectively, according to the direct, comparative and special teachings of all the Holy Scriptures.

Two Methods of Interpretation.

There are two methods of interpretation—the method of the natural man and thte method of the spiritual man. Two persons originated the two systems of interpretation. The devil originated the principles and dictates the methods of the natural man. The Holy Spirit created the principles and directs the methods of the spiritual man. Satan is transformed into an angel of light and transforms his ministers into ministers of civic and social righteousness; yea, he makes them popular interpreters of the Bible with the latest scientific methods. The Holy Spirit quickens the mind of the spiritual man and guides him into scriptural principles and methods of interpreting the Bible.

Consider the principles and methods of interpretation which the natural man applies to the Word of God. The directing wisdom of the natural man is the "wisdom of this world, which is foolishness with God." The guiding power of the natural man is the finite power of a well-disciplined mind in command of historic facts, scientific demonstrations, philosophical reasoning and man-made conclusions. The natural man, with a carnal mind and carnal weapons of interpretation "receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God," including the Word of God," for they are foolishness unto him; neither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned." Yet, in spite of this plain statement, the natural man presumes and proceeds to apply the following principles and methods to the interpretation of the Bible: Exalt man. Magnify the intellect. Maintain the dignity and honor of modern thought. Question the supernatural. Resent divine authority Despise anything dogmatic. Ridicule the orthodox. Square faith with science. Interpret the mind of Christ in the terms of this age. Put God and His Word to the acid test. Look closely for the "contradictions" of the Bible, discrepancies of translation and poor punctuation. Accept as true only that part of the Bible which can be understood by reasoning. Reject as false everything "out of harmony with the spirit of our modern thought and life." As a final issue, whenever modern scholarship says one thing on a certain point and the Bible speaks exactly to the contrary on that point, always accept as authority the statement of modern scholarship and reject as unreliable the statement of the Word of God. Make the Bible mean what you want it to say. The natural man uses man-made methods of interpretation. He emphasizes the human element, the environment and evolution of the men who wrote the various books of the Bible. In fact, he makes the man and his message merely a product of the age in which he lived.

The natural man uses some pet words, terms and phrases, such as scientific, historic, progressive, development, liberal, criticism, environment, evolution, myth, folk-lore, superstition, tradition, comparative, reasonable, assured results, advanced thought, modern scholarship, intellectual honesty, social order, principles and ideals of Jesus, spirit of the age, twentieth-century mind, and the harmonious consensus of reliable opinion.

Dr. French E. Oliver recently said: "The words 'science' and 'evolution' are the most overworked of any two words in the English language, so far as I know. They have become talismanic fetishes among apostate theologians and atheistic educators. They seem to be passports into the circles of scholastic bombast and theological chicanery. They cover oceans of ignorance and mountains of conceit."

AN APPEAL TO OUR SUNDAY SCHOOL SUPERINTENDENTS.

It is sincerely hoped that every Sunday School superintendent in the Eastern Virginia Christian Conference will give sympathetic co-operation in the work of having the children of their respective Sunday Schools respond to the questionnaire being sent to all the schools of the Conference by Rev. James H. Lightbourne, chairman of the Conference committee on education.

The committee has prepared a list of vital questions, seeking to ascertain what the boys and girls of certain ages are actually thinking about, relative to the subject of religion. What impressions have the youth been receiving in your Sunday School as a result of their contact with your teachers? It is expected that the pupils will write their own thoughts on the questions without opportunity for special study, and without consulting their teachers or parents. The answers received will prove of real interest and value to the pastors and all Sunday School workers in the Conference.

The chairman of the committee will give special instructions relative to securing the answers when he sends out the questionnaire. In response to the request of the chairman, I make this appeal to our superintendents and pastors, urging their enthusiastic co-operation in this important work. The information will be of value to the local school, and also to the Conference in enabling it better to plan its program of education for the future.

NOTICE.

I have been in the revival work for several weeks; have been having very good meetings, of which you will hear more about later. You may state in our paper that I will be open to a call to pastoral work for the coming year.

With very best wishes to you and for your work, I remain,

MISSIONS

Rev. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Field Secretary.

OUR MOUNTAIN WORK.

The readers of The Christian Sun must miss the news from Fancy Gap since Bro. Bradshaw left the field. While attending the missionary rallies last spring, a number of the friends of our mountain work told me that they looked anxiously for a letter from the workers here.

I am spending the summer at Elk Spur, with the exception of two weeks. One week I spent at Rocky Ford attending evangelistic services. While there, I stayed in the home of Mr. and Mrs. H. T. Rigney, with whom I boarded during the early part of the winter. I visited the different homes of the neighborhood and was very happy in having this opportunity. Bro. Bradshaw's sermons were pure Gospel messages, and altogether we had a spiritual feast.

During our meetings at Elk Spur, we had with us Mr. and Mrs. R. L. Baker and Miss Elizabeth Eley, of Portsmouth. Their singing was a delight to all who attended the services, and they made many friends here in the Blue Ridge who will be glad to have them come again. Mrs. Teague and Miss Clemmer were here for our meetings also, Mrs. Teague remaining for three weeks after the close of the meetings. She and I visited many of the homes in the vicinity of Elk Spur.

On July 16th I went with her to Sandy Ridge, where I stayed a week. On Sunday, July 22nd, we opened a Sunday School, with thirty-four people present. The following Sunday we had thirty-two in our school. The condition of the roads has made it impossible for me to attend since July 29th. Some of the members of our Sandy Ridge Church are trying to keep up an interest without outside help. I am truly sorry that they cannot have the needed help.

Mrs. Teague returned to her home in Burlington on Tuesday, August 2nd. Miss Clemmer left August 21st for Eaton, Ohio. Both worked faithfully while here, and they are missed by those with whom they were associated. I should have been so happy to have them stay for the remainder of the summer, but circumstances would not permit my insisting.

Miss Alice Marguart and Miss Bessie Leavell are in the Elk Spur section for two weeks. They are members of the Christian Church of Springfield, Ohio. Dr. Kendall is their pastor. It is a pleasure to have them with us, and they are enjoying the mountain scenery and the hospitality of these good people. I had hoped that a number of our friends of Eastern Virginia and North Carolina would come this way for a vacation. Am I to be disappointed?

I invited my friends who live here to visit me Saturday afternoon, August 18th. I had forty-four guests, although there was rain during the forenoon and a heavy fog in the afternoon. Our grafonola furnished the music. At 4 o'clock, we had lunch. All were happy, I believe. I should mention that I was "at home" in the old schoolhouse that stands on our mission grounds. Am told that it was built fifty years or more ago.

We are always in need of the prayers of the readers of The Christian Sun.

THE BIBLE AND DARWINISM.

Dear Bro. Barrett:

As you grow in age and experience, you seem to grow even stronger and stronger in defending the dear old Book. Single editorials in The Christian Sun are worth the price of the paper for one year.

Keep on hitting your sledge-hammer blows at Darwinism and higher criticism, which is nothing more nor less than infidelity by another name. If I believed either, I would come out flat-footed for infidelity.

Of all the great evils we have to face today, there is none to compare with these. There is some hope for a man that has committed almost any of the other crimes mentioned in the Bible, but, as I see it, there is none for either of these, because they have set aside God's own word and have discarded the most important things of the Bible. It is high time that God's people rise in their might and put down this monster evil, and not patronize any institution of learning that teaches it.

Today Darwinism is taught in many of our schools and higher institutions of learning and a great many of our State universities, which are supported by the taxpayers of the country and their boys and girls are sent to these places and their faith in God and the creation as recorded in the Bible are undermined.

How long will we allow such conditions to exist? School histories are being introduced in our schools that teach Darwinism out and out, under disguise. Books of that kind should have no place in any of our schools.

What we teach our children, the next generation will be.

I was reading editorials in our Baptist brethren's paper last week, and I notice they are greatly alarmed over the same question.

One of the main questions put to any minister when he is ordained should be something like this: "Do you believe in Darwinism or higher criticism?" If he does, drop him right there; he is not fit to enter the sacred stand and proclaim the word of God. But our Baptist brethren say that a good per cent of their ministers are tainted with this giant evil. The same condition, doubtless, exists among many of other Churches. Not long ago I was talking with a young minister in the Methodist Episcopal Church, and we got on the subject of Darwinism and he frankly confessed that there were better grounds for evolution (another term for Darwinism) than there was against it. His Churches are as dead almost as they could be; several of his members have recently left and joined other denominations.

Living where I have most of the time for the last three years, at Morgantown, W. Va., I have been thrown in contact with quite a number of students of the University of West Virginia, and invariably they believe in evolution as taught by Darwin. Two years ago, William Jennings Bryan gave a lecture on Darwinism at the assembly-hall, at the university at Morgantown, W. Va., and for days and weeks it was the leading subject that was discussed, but you would have been surprised to know how many people believed in Darwinism, especially of the student body. If all the people could hear Mr. Bryan's lecture in defense of the Bible against Darwinism, I don't think it would be long till it would be wiped out of universities and higher institutions of learning.

May the good Lord spare your life and give you good health to pursue the same course you have for the last fifty years in the past, and when you lay down your fertile pen, may your mantle fall upon some other brother who, with equal power and fearless manner, will defend the same Book you have so ably defended for over a half a century.

WALLS OF THE HOLY CITY.

By Rev. Patrick H. Fleming, D. D.,
Burlington, N. C.

"And the foundations of the wall of the city were garnished with all manner of precious stones. The first foundation was jasper; the second, sapphire; the third, a chalcedony; the fourth, an emerald; the fifth, sardonyx; the sixth, sardius; the seventh, chrysolyte; the eighth, beryl; the ninth, a topaz; the tenth, a chrysoprasus; the eleventh, a jacinth; the twelfth, an amethyst."—Rev. 21: 19, 20.

Sitting in my study one day, thinking about the message that I should bring to my people, I thought about the gems that compose the foundation of the wall around the city—the New Jerusalem. And as I thought there passed before my mind the most beautiful picture I have ever seen. I sat and gazed upon the scene. I asked myself, did you ever see anything half as beautiful? Did you ever read anything to compare with this picture of the lonely Seer on the lonely Isle of Patmos? Combine all the beauty of the most beautiful things read and seen—weave them all into one wreath—and will it compare with the foundation and the wall about the City of God—the home of the saints?

I thought of the most beautiful and costly private residence in the world, that of Lord Bute, called Monstuart, in England, covering, as it does, nearly two acres, built of stone, in Gothic style, the rooms finished in mahogany, rosewood and walnut, the halls of marble and alabaster, the fireplaces of carved marbles, antique design. In this I find no comparison, and almost shudder at the thought, for it seems well-nigh sacrilegious, of comparing the most costly private mansion of earth to even the foundations of the wall about the home of the saved of God.

I thought of the most beautiful resting-place of the dead ever prepared by a wife for her husband—one of the seven wonders of the world as reckoned by the Greeks. The Mausoleum at Halicarnassus, a monument erected by Artemisia, the Queen of Caria (B. C. 353), to her deceased husband, Hausolus. It was built of the most precious marble, and the decorations were of the highest Grecian art. Its cost was immense. The philosopher Anaxagoras, upon seeing it, exclaimed: "How much money is changed into stone!" Nothing of it remains. The mind revolts at a comparison here. Within were death and corruption. It has passed away, and though classed as one of the seven wonders of the world by the cultured Greek, nothing of it can be found today.

I thought of a husband's love for his wife, and of the monument erected to her memory, in the city of Agra, in northern India—the Jewel of Agra—said to be the only perfect work of architecture in all the world—the Taj Mahal. The Taj Mahal is the famous mausoleum of white marble, a gem by the great Mogul, Shah Jehan (1628-58) over the grave of his beautiful empress and favorite wife, Mumtazi Mahal. It is the most beautiful tomb in the world. Built under the blue of an Indian sky, its white dome pointing heavenward, seems to float above. It is situated in the midst of a beautiful garden, with flowering shrubs, palms, fountains, and marble tanks in which gold fish play. Within, where rests the dust of his favorite wife and of himself, polished marble and precious stone abound. Jeweled flowers of many precious stones are seen within the building and about the empress' tomb. There are bloodstones, agates, turquoise, and many others. There is said to be one gem flower containing 300 different jewels, forming a beautiful rose. This is the most beautiful tomb that a husband, with love and wealth untold and unmeasured, could build for the wife of his bosom.

There is no comparison here. For within are death and decay. It will one day pass away. The gems will disappear and the flowers will fade.

I thought of the most beautiful display of many colored and tinted lights, revolving in many forms, as seen in the electrical building, Columbian Exposition, Chicago, when the sun was set and the stars came out. It was beautiful beyond description. Yet I see not the faintest resemblance in this to the beauty of the many hues as seen in the foundations of the wall of the beautiful city.

I thought of the beauty of a golden sunset on a beautiful summer's eve, when the flowers are in bloom, and the birds are in tune. The earth about us clothed in garments of green, and the heavens above us a dome of blue; and the sun sinking behind the western horizon, changes the blue above us first into rose-colered, then into deepening red, followed in quick succession by death-like pallor, which suddenly changed into darkness. The stars peeped out. It was night. And as I sit in the afterglow, wondering if such is life, I find no comparison in the wondrous glory of the sunset, to the beauty of the foundations of heaven's walls, for the sunset faded into darkness, and into night.

I thought of the rainbow as it arches the heavens on a dark background of a disappearing cloud. The beautiful rainbow, described by good old Nokomis to little Hiawatha as—

> "The heaven of flowers you see there,
> All the wild flowers of the forest,
> When on earth they fade and perish,
> Blossom in that heaven above us."

The rainbow, with its beautiful tints of red, orange, yellow, green, blue, indigo and violet, give us but little idea of the harmony of the beautiful colors of the twelve different gems in the foundations of the wall of heaven.

And the foundations of the wall of the city were garnished with all manner of precious stones. The first foundation was jasper; the second, sapphire; the third, a chalcedony; the fourth, an emerald; the fifth, sardonyx; the sixth, sardius; the seventh, chrysolyte; the eighth, beryl; the ninth, a topaz; the tenth, a chrysoprasus; the eleventh, a jacinth; the twelfth, an amethyst.

Here we have named twelve different gems that are in the foundations of the walls of the city. Let us see the beautiful colors that enter into the foundations of the walls.

There is the variously colored jasper, red, yellow and other dull colors; next comes sapphire with its white, blue, yellow, green, black, violet colors; the third is chalcedony, white, black or colored; the fourth is emerald with its bright green; the fifth is sardonyx, white, black or colored; the sixth is sardius, of a brownish red; the seventh, chrysolyte, yellow or green; the eighth, beryl, with its white, blue, yellow or pink hues; ninth, topaz, white, blue, yellow, green, pink or orange; tenth, chrysoprasus, green; eleventh, jacinth, orange or reddish yellow; and twelfth, amethyst, violet. It may be that all the colors in which these twelve gems are found enter into the foundations of the walls, if so most all of the twelve gems would have several colors. But, taking the usual color of the gems, we have red, blue, white, bright green, reddish yellow, rich brownish red, green, bluish green, yellow, grayish green, orange and violet. We see here the five simple colors—red, orange, yellow, green and blue. I ask, do these, the usual colors of the gems, harmonize to the human eye? There are two color theories. The first is that harmony is produced by the blending of closely related colors, such as red, orange and yellow. The second is that harmony is produced by the contrast of opposites or complementary colors, softened, toned down and run together, such as green and red, yellow and blue. One of the best classification, perhaps, is into warm and cold colors. The warm colors are reds, orange and yellows. The cold ones are blues, greens and violets. It is generally believed that a predominance of warm colors relieved by cold ones; or of cold colors relieved by warm ones produces harmony.

Let us apply the test of harmony produced by opposites. Then we have red, a warm color, and blue, a cold color. Harmony. Red and and blue are complementary—that is, they produce white. The next in order of the gems as named is white. The next comes bright green, a cold color, and reddish yellow, a warm color. Next is a rich brownish red, a warm color, and green, a cold color. Next, blueish green, a cold color, and yellow, a warm color. Next, grayish green, a cold color, and orange, a warm color. The last-named is violet, which harmonizes with red in the beginning, and shows that there is perfect harmony of color from beginning to end. The city lieth four square, and so the violet-colored amethyst at the last would come next to the red-colored jasper at the first. In the rainbow, we find the red color at the first and the violet color at the last, and the other colors between. There is perfect harmony in the colors of the rainbow. So in the foundations of the wall about the city of many mansions —the Christian's home—there is perfect harmony, and the blending of beautiful, tinted gems from beginning to end. The city is pictured as having twelve gates of pure pearl, as being a square 12,000 furlongs or 1,500 miles around. That would make each side 375 miles long and as each side hath three gates it is probable that there are 1,000 furlongs or 125 miles between each of its twelve gates. The twelve foundation stones, each one is represented to be a special jewel, supposed to reach from gate to gate, and on them were the names of the twelve apostles. The walls are of jasper, the gates are pure pearl, and the streets like transparent gold. The length, breadth and the height are equal. Here is faultless symetry.

I have been deeply impressed, as this subject unfolded, by the harmony and beauty in the foundations of the walls about heaven, and especially so when I think of the fact that an old man on a lonely isle wrote the words concerning the walls of the city of God. But he had been with Jesus. He was in the Spirit. He saw the city. He talked with God's messenger. That explains it all. The Builder of that city told him what to write. And so, as I look at the beautiful foundations, I am wont to exclaim that the Icelanders expressed a beautiful thought when they spoke of a "land where all the rainbows that have ever been or are yet to be, forever drift to and fro, vanishing and reappearing like immortal flowers of vapor."

There appears something else of striking interest to me to the building of that beautiful city. It seems that every land hath yielded and given of its most precious gems for the foundation, walls, gates, and streets of the city, it gathered on earth, would come from many lands and countries.

There is yet another thought connected with these gems. They each have a language of their own, and whether the Seer had such in mind when he wrote does not matter. All the good that the language in the gems in the foundations of the wall speaks of is true and found in heaven. From the earliest times, gems have been given symbolical expression. Jasper signifies courage and wisdom; sapphire, constancy, truth and virtue; chalcedony disperses melancholy; emerald, immortality, incorruption, conquers sin and trial; sardonyx, happiness; sardius, prevents misfortune; chrysolyte, gladdens the heart; beryl, happiness and everlasting youth; topaz, friendship and happiness; chrysoprasus scatters gloominess; jacinth signifies modesty; amethyst, deep and pure love. The material out of which the city is built tends to promote joy and to drive away sorrow. This, then, is a city where all the material used in building are emblematical of that which is purest and best.

This is a beautiful home prepared by a beautiful King for a beautiful people. A home prepared by a loving bridegroom for his faithful bride. Christ is the King and Christians are the beautiful people. Christ is the loving bridegroom, and the faithful Church is His bride. He said to His disciples ere He ascended to His Father: "I go to prepare a place for you; and if I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again and receive you unto Myself, that where I am there you may be also."

Ere the scene closes, I ask who shall inhabit that city? And the answer comes, "They who came out of great tribulation, and have washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb." I ask again, who shall enter the beautiful home? The answer comes, "And there shall in nowise enter into it anything that defileth, neither whatsoever worketh abomination, or maketh a lie; but they which are written in the Lamb's Book of life."

Will you, will I, enter that holy city, whose walls are of jasper, whose streets are of gold, whose gates are of pearl?

FROM REV. B. J. EARP.

I wish you could have been at the dedication of Bethlehem Church last Sunday, August 26th. It was a wonderful day in the history of that Church. The pastor, Rev. T. E. White, presided and did his part in making every one feel at home. Rev. S. C. Harrell, of Durham, N. C., preached the sermon, and in the absence of Dr. Staley; who was detained in the hospital because of illness, Dr. N. G. Newman read the dedication formula, setting apart the building to the glory of God. In the afternoon, Mr. W. E. MacClenny gave the history of Bethlehem Church. His paper proved to be an exceedingly interesting one. Many Churches in the Eastern Virginia Conference were represented there. There were thirty members and pastor of the Newport News Christian Church there, and when you consider the distance I think our Church was well represented at the dedication. We enjoyed the day very much.

We have had a fine vacation, and are now back trying to advance the cause of Christ as best we can. The Newport News Christian Church has extended us a call to serve them another year, and the call has been accepted. These Newport News people have been very nice to us. If the Lord gives us the health and strength, we hope to work still harder next year.

Week after the second Sunday in August we were with Rev. and Mrs. J. L. Foster in a meeting at Spring Hill. We had a mighty fine time in the service of the Lord. We surely did enjoy it. There were six members added to the Christian Church. Five joined Spring Hill and one was transferred to Waverly.

This week, after exchanging appointments with Rev. B. F. Black (September 2d), I shall be with Rev. W. B. Fuller, at Johnson's Grove, near Sedley. This is one of the Churches you served as pastor when a younger man than you are now. I trust you will remember us in prayer.

Now, a word about THE SUN. I like it. I am proud of it. Long may its pages shine, sending forth their rays of truth, to brighten homes, to cheer heavy hearts, and to advance the kingdom of our Lord Christ.

Your brother in the King's service,

B. J. EARP.

NOTE.—Yes, Johnson's Grove was our first pastoral charge. How I wish to visit that Church once! Wish you may have a good meeting, winning many to Christ.—Editor.

FAMILY ALTAR

Conducted by H. E. Rountree, U. S. Navy.

"In Thee and in Thy seed shall the families of of the earth be blessed."—Gen. 28:14.

MONDAY.

"Worship the Lord in the beauty of holiness." —1 Chron. 16:29. (Read 1 Chron. 16:23-31.)

Did you worship the Lord yesterday, and do you wish to worship Him today? If so, do not think it is a type of piety you must engage in which is repulsive, useless and interfering with your pleasure. It is bowing to Him in complete adoration for what He is and what He does for you.

A close touch with Him takes away unbecoming pride, breaks down obstinacy, shames indifference, forgives guilt; and to bow down and worship in adoring love is not only our highest privilege, but our duty to ourselves that we may attain unto the highest state of life and possess the sweetest pleasures known to man. He has promised this, and has never failed to give "love, joy, peace and goodness" to all who seek it.

To touch Jesus, gives one character that attracts highest graces, makes the soul as pure as a flower, and sweetens everything around about it. The beauty of making surroundings beautiful is the supreme beauty of holiness. Therefore, the beauty of holiness is no creation of the fancy, but a blessed, winsome reality. Nothing is more lovely than purity. Nothing is more winsome than humility. Nothing is more beautiful than abundant love, patience toward the erring, and helping those who are in need. These are the things that enoble and make happy. God does it. Whatever else you do, worship Him.

Prayer.

Dear Heavenly Father, help us to think about the good things of life, and enable us to do our best in turning everything with which we have to do into that which is beautiful. We adore Thee today, our God, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

TUESDAY.

The Way of Happiness.

"When a man's ways please the Lord, He maketh even his enemies to be at peace with him." —Prov. 16:7.

There is a difference in our way of happiness—the way we think we get it—and God's way. We are all seeking happiness, some in autos, some at the beach, some in the mountains, some with friends, some hunting, some fishing, some at the watermelon feast or at the candy-cracking and the dance. In a thousand different ways all are in quest of what they think is happiness. With many, it is like the bunch of steers I have seen that went to a dry trough for water, and finding none turned away in utter disappointment and dissatisfaction. It is all empty, and the soul is poorer. We find satisfaction only in the ways and things of God.

Please take the time to read the following messages today: Ps. 146:5; John 16:22; Ps. 128:1, 2; John 4:14; Prov. 16:20; Job 36:11; Prov. 29:18; Job 20:5; Ps. 84:10.

Prayer.

Our Heavenly Father, teach us that Thy presence in all our experiences is the only thing that gives us the true and lasting pleasures of life. If Thy grace alone sustains our souls unto the true joys of life's varying way, dear Lord, give us this. We thank Thee that thou hast not cut us off in our wrong-doings. We abhor our sins. Forgive us and forget our slowness to see Thee as our Guide. We have followed too much our own devices and pleasures. Oh, help us to follow Thee and so shine in our lives that we may walk without stumbling. Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

Christ's Way.

"I have given you an example, that ye should do as I have done to you."—John 13:15.

(In addition to the above, will you not also read the following: Lev. 19:18; John 13:35; 1 John 4:7, 8; Deut. 10:12; 1 John 5:3; Rom. 8:28; John 13:35.)

We need Christ's way today more than ever before. Can't we have it? Do not think of Him with a halo over His head, separated so far from you that you can't touch Him, and God whispering into His ear His will, while you struggle on with a thousand voices and cries in your ears and despair is dangling before you, and you are waiting for His will too, and you have no answer.

Our problem is bread and butter, to keep the wolf from the door, the many ups and downs of life. Remember that He had all those experiences too. He was a carpenter's son, who worked for his living, and there is not an experience known to us that is not known to Him also. In them all He showed us the way out, and it was the simple method of seeking God's will and following it, unwaveringly, it mattering not what the consequences would be.

His way was to put Himself in the place of others, to give the square deal, the Golden Rule, and to forgive all penitents their trespasses; and He wanted all men to do likewise. Let's try to be all that today.

Prayer.

Our Father, we praise Thy name, that no ill can touch the soul of those who trust in and follow Thee. As we undertake the day's duties, teach us how, and enable us, to respond to the call of right and promote justice, kindness and truth in all things. We ask Thee for Thy way. Grant it, Lord, for Christ's sake. Amen.

THURSDAY.

"We know that if He shall be maniftsted, we shall be like Him."—1 John 3:2.

Christ is manifested in everything that reveals him and His goodness. When we turn to Him and engage in the things of Him, He is manifested to us, and then we are becoming like Him. Some one has beautifully said: "Every act of goodness is a step toward heaven." Every manifestation of Christ in us is a step nearer to the time when we shall be perfected and be like Him.

We may never fully attain the character of Christ, but, by carrying on, we can (as Paul says) come to the measure of the stature of the fullness of Him. As we strive for this, we grow more sensitive to wrong, suffer more keenly for sin's damages, and the passionate devices of wickedness strikes us down all the more quickly; and yet the stronger are we able to rise against it. In this, Christ is manifested and shall be triumphant. If the world is ever to be saved, it is to do every day what He has said do. "He that would come after Me, let him deny himself, take up its cross and follow Me."

"If Jesus Christ is a man,
And only a man, I say,
That of all mankind,
I will follow Him,
And to Him will I cleave alway.

"If Jesus Christ is God,
And only God, I swear,
I will follow Him through heaven and hell,
The earth, the sea, and air."

Prayer.

Dear Father, Thou who are the light of the world, the way of life, the path of right and truth, inform our minds, enrich our hearts, and light our pathway all the way. Dispel all the shadows that come from any cause whatsoever. Forgive us and let not our souls be tainted with sin to leave us hopeless in the future.

May we consecrate our seconds to Thy thoughts, our minutes to Thy service, and our hours to Thy will. Thy name be praised forever. Amen.

FRIDAY.

The Golden Rule.

"All things, therefore, whatsoever ye would that men should do unto you, even so do ye also unto them, for this is the law and the prophets."—Matt. 7:12.

Nineteen centuries of the Golden Rule have engaged the attention of men. No philosopher or teacher before Jesus Christ or since ever proclaimed anything equal to it. It is a principle of life all men are charged to reduce to action. Because, first, it enjoins regard for the rights and feelings of others. Our personal habits show themselves in intimate relations. If we show no regards for the rights and feelings of others we soon become an irritating factor. It is a small matter to take the best piece of cake. You may deserve it, but it is a serious matter to make self first. It is a small matter to shirk your share, or seek the best seat, but it is a principle which makes a tyrant. If you wish to know whether you are a Christian or not, ask yourself honestly if you are comfortable to get along with.

One of the greatest menaces to the American soul-life today is the small-family, and apartment houses, because it is developing a selfish and a pleasure-loving people and depriving the world of the effectiveness of the Golden Rule; and the big family is the finest opportunity for the training of citizens in the Golden Rule. Any place can be made heaven or hell, as the Golden Rule may be practiced or not. Civilization begins where we trust one another, and it stops where it closes. Be selfish and gain all one can, if you please, but then when one has done so, there remains only the lot of the rich man, who hugged his own casket and left the pearls in the road.

Prayer.

Dear Father, we have erred from the life we ought to live, and, like lost sheep without a shepherd, we have gone astray. We come to Thee today. Save us, use us and keep us for the good of others, and not ourselves. This we ask in Jesus' name. Amen.

SATURDAY.

The Purpose of Christ in the World.

*"The fruit of the spirit is love, joy, peace, long-suffering, kindness, meekness, self-control * * , etc."—Gal. 5:22.

"To this end came I into the world, that I might bear witness of the truth."—John 18:37.

"That they may know Thee, the true and living God."

From the first to the last of Christ's ministry, He was interested chiefly in doing the will of the Father. His work was to make men know the will of God; to cause folks to live in the spirit of friendly co-operation and good will, and He traversed the Galilean highways and the despised Roman provinces to ask men every where to join Him in making the world honest and right and safe for this. And He is asking you today to devote your life to this. Are you joining him fully?

Prayer.

Father, into Thy hands we commit our spirits just for today. Make us all that Thou wouldst have us be. Amen.

SUNDAY.

THE COMING OF THE KINGDOM.

"The kingdom of God is within you."—Luke 17:21.

If the above Scripture is true and the parable of the leaven means anything at all, it is that we shall see the kingdom of God come to fruition just in the same way we see seed germinate, grow and mature and bear fruit. It is not to be understood that there is some great day to come when wondrous things shall happen, and a mighty deliverer shall rise up and smite the enemy, suddenly transforming the righteous and bringing them into the possession of the world. Jesus says the coming of that time is within you; that it is to develop in you as the tree develops within itself by virtue of the very power within it, or as the leaven leavens the whole lump. The coming of the kingdom of God is the spiritual reign of God within you now.

It is frequently asked, "When will it come?" If our text means anything, the answer is, "It is within you." "It's up to you." When will righteousness, joy and peace come? "It's within you." "It's up to you." When will God control the lives of men? "It's within you." "It's up to you." When will all co-operate and be brothers? "It's within you." "It's up to you." When will war cease? "It's within you." "It's up to you." The world is to be made good by goodness. When goodness comes, then Christ is coming and the kingdom is come. Get busy and bring it.

PRAYER.

Our Father, if the kingdom is up to us, forbid that we shall stand in the way. Enable us to bring it to pass in our little circle. This we ask for Jesus' sake. Amen.

A CHRISTIAN COLLEGE IN THE VALLEY.

All Christians, as well as many members of other denominations, will be glad to know that at the Virginia Valley Central Christian Conference, held at Timber Ridge, August 14-16, a committee was appointed to look into the matter of erecting a college somewhere within the limits of the conference.

That committee will consider some of the many opportunities that the far-famed Valley of Virginia has in store for such an institution. They will also take up the matter of finance, the getting of students, and the very limited number of colleges throughout the Valley that are now available for students from Virginia, Maryland and West Virginia.

It is hoped that somewhere in the Appalachian Mountains a Christian College will tower high above the surrounding hills and bid welcome to many students who are now seeking a better education than the State is endeavoring to give. Further, that such a college, with Christian character as her goal, will mean the dawn of a new day for the Virginia Valley Central Christian Conference.

According to figures gathered by the National Health Council, the average span of human life in the United States has increased in ten years from 54 2-3 years for each individual to 58 years. This substantiates a prophesy made at the annual meeting of the American Public Health Association a year ago that the average span of life could be lengthened by twenty years in half a century, it was said. Most of the gain was made during the earlier years of life.

Christian Orphanage

WILL WE DO AS WELL THIS YEAR AS LAST?

DEAR FRIENDS:

Our financial report for this year, up to and including this report, carries us up to $10,528.69. This is less than our report showed at this time last year. We always like to do better each year. As the crops are much better this season than last year and tobacco and cotton selling for excellent prices, we hope that our income from now until the end of the year will be much better, and that we will yet be able to do as well or better than last year.

When our people learn to tithe their income and set aside the part that is due the Lord, then the little orphan, helpless children will no longer cry for a home and bread, but will be able to eat and be satisfied.

"Thou shalt bring forth all the tithe of thine increase the same year, and shalt lay it up within thy gates; and the stranger, and the fatherless, and the widow, which are within thy gates (territory) shall come, and shall eat and be satisfied; that the Lord thy God may bless thee in all the work of thine hand which thou doest."

When you sell your tobacco and your cotton this fall, and gather in your bountiful crops that the Lord has so richly blessed you with, don't forget the little orphan children at the Christian Orphanage.

We met a man some time ago. He was a poor man, so far as this world's goods are concerned, as it had not been possible for him to accumulate much in this life, but he gave me a dollar without my asking, and said he was left fatherless and motherless at a very young and tender age, and he knew something of the hardships, disappointments and loneliness that a fatherless child had to go through with, and he wanted to contribute a little, that it might make the lives of these helpless ones a little more cheerful. While it was a small amount, yet if we could get every member of the Christian denomination in the Southern Christian Convention to send to the orphanage just one dollar, it would make nearly thirty thousand dollars. Just think of it!

It is the little things in life that make big things. Enough pennies gotten together in one pile will count big things. The great mountains are composed of small particles. The mighty oak is composed of small limbs, twigs, leaves, etc., and has grown from a small acorn and has added to itself perhaps for a hundred years. The world itself is composed of tiny particles of matter, but putting it in one large globe it makes the beautiful world in which we live.

Some twelve years ago, the Christian Orphanage received a little girl in its care. This little girl came from very humble surroundings, without a chance in life. She was bright, energetic and a whole-hearted little girl. She did her part while in the institution and completed her grammar education while here. Last year she completed a business course in one of the leading schools in the State and is now holding a splendid position with one of the departments of a great State. You invested a few of your dollars in a little orphan child. You gave to the world a beautiful, refined, sweet, whole-hearted young woman, who will be a credit to the institution which reared her and a credit to the community in which she lives. Do you regret you made this investment?

THE HAW RIVER MEETING.

Our protracted meeting at Haw River, N. C., began on the third Sunday in August, and closed on Monday after the fourth Sunday in the month. Dr. W. C. Wicker was with us on the third Sunday and preached to good acceptance. On the following Monday, Rev. P. T. Klapp came to our assistance and remained till the close of the meeting. His sermons were earnest, forceful and helpful. There were about thirty professions. One member was received on the fourth Sunday evening, and four were received at the close of the meeting. Two members were baptized at the closing service. The outlook for the work at Haw River is good. Considerable improvements, in the way of a furnace, memorial window to the "White Pilgrim," lights and interior decorations, are under consideration.

The Service of a Friendly Physician.

The village Church had an eloquent pastor. Week after week, his members listened with eager interest to his great sermons. With pride, they took visitors to hear his masterpieces of oratory and rhetoric. But the time came when he felt called to leave the village Church, and to begin his work. Some time later, the former pastor visited his old field. He was interested to know of the progress made and to know what had been done. And he also wanted to know of the sermons of his successor, and this was the answer to his inquiry of an old friend: "When we heard your sermons, we enjoyed them, and went home saying, 'What a great preacher we have'! Now, after a sermon, we go home saying, 'What a wonderful saviour we have'"! Like the spirit and service of the second preacher was that of Luke, the beloved physician, the kindly friend. He has not been studied as often as other Bible characters. It is new to have a whole lesson given to the survey of his life. His words, written by the inspiration of God, we read over and over again, but their message is always of the "Wonderful Saviour" and the "Hero Paul," rather than dwelling on their writer. In the words of Dr. Geikie: "As with many other noble spirits to whom the world is indebted for the greatest benefactions, Providence has seen fit to let His work be His only record, veiling personal details in impenetrable obscurity, as if to remind us that fame on earth is not worth seeking; work for God carrying its high reward here in the good done, and hereafter in the welcome accorded the faithful servant."

"Friendly service" seems to be the phrase which will best sum up the life of Luke, and kindliness one of his leading virtues.

Luke was the friend of all in his writings, the gospel of St. Luke and the acts of the apostles. Both are dedicated to Theophilus. Both begin with a direct reference to the purpose of his writings, to instruct and confirm in the faith those who had accepted the truth. Keeping self in the background, he tells the beautiful story of the life of Jesus, revealing those details of his early life, and of his ministry, which the other writers omit. Or he tells of the heroic career of St. Paul, and of the other apostles, referring to himself only by changing the pronoun to a modest "we." Little progress is made in friendship, or in anything else worth while in life, when the emphasis is all on self.

"Others, yes others—
Let this our motto be;
Help us to live for others,
That we may live for Thee."

The true friend gives. Luke gives much in his gospel. He was not with Jesus from the beginning (Luke 2:1), but eyewitnesses furnished him much material that is not given any place else. Luke is fullest in describing our Lord's private prayers, giving eight instances of his devotional life. He gives us great hymns, as "Ave Maria," the "Gloria in Excelsis" and the "Magnificat," and others. Dr. Farrar includes among the special messages of Luke, Christ's ministry to the world, the sacredness of infancy, the gospel of womanhood, and the mercy of the Saviour toward the needy.

Luke was a friend of missions. His Christianity could not be held to refer to only those nearby. When Paul had the vision of the need in Macedonia, Luke was there ready to start at once (Acts 16:9, 10). "When he had seen the vision, straightway we sought to go forth to go." Always there must be some one with a vision—a vision of need, a vision of opportunity and responsibility. And just as surely, there must be those to respond to the vision. Paul had a vision, and heard a call, and then he found a friendly helper to meet the need, and do the task well. To many other places Luke went to help tell the "good story" (Acts 20:5-13, 21:1-18, 27, 28). Luke was especially well-fitted to render service as a physician. The medical missionary has always helped in carrying the banner of the cross. Luke has had many successors, and the call still comes for the men and women who can reach the soul by relieving the suffering body, and tell the healed one of the greatest of physicians, the Lord Himself.

Luke was a personal friend. Paul found in Luke a loving friend. "The Beloved Physician" was the title He gave him, and such titles reveal much of the personal life. Paul needed a doctor friend, for his body must have been full of pain often, from disease and from his strenuous life. Luke was a sympathetic friend, for he loved the same Lord, and must have liked to sit and talk of Him. Luke was a loyal friend, for Paul writes "Only Luke is with me." He did not grow tired by the way, nor lonesome for other friends or tasks, nor covetous for a great career by himself. He was always there—just where he is needed. Love, sympathy, loyalty! In these are true friendship rooted. The Christian physician has an opportunity to be a friend. "Ian Maclaren" (Dr. John Watson) once declared that his story, "A Doctor of the Old School," had brought him many letters from all parts of the world. The burden of their message was, "How came you to know our doctor? He was just like that."

Luke, the slave lad, perhaps trained by a kind master to be a great physician, is a character to stir the imagination of the ambitious boy. Luke, the accurate writer of lofty purpose, brings a message of salvation to a needy world. Luke, the medical missionary, was a pioneer in a great field of service. Above all, the friendly, kindly Luke, who was always true, appeals to Christian hearts who know him through the words he wrote, and which they love, takes his place as one who drew the never-to-be-forgotten word-portrait of the Great Physician, whose teachings guided his own life, and whose principles were Luke's own. For Jesus Christ was the friend of Luke, as of all others who loved Him.

"I've found a friend; oh, such a friend!
He loved me e'er I knew Him;
He drew me with the cords of love,
And thus He bound me to Him.
And 'round my heart still closely twine,
Those ties which naught can sever,
For I am His, and He is mine,
Forever and forever."

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC.

September 16, 1923.

Topic: "How apply religion to manners?"—Prov. 1:8, 9; Luke 14:7-11.

Thoughts for the Meeting.

A little lad of five years old was taken one day to a wise teacher who was asked to begin his education. "How old is the boy?" was the teacher's question. "Five." "It is just five years too late," was his reply. The lad's training had been begun and well-carried on during that five years. If his father's instruction was wise, and his mother's law true and just to him and to others, the foundation of his manners and religion, as well as other education, had been well laid. Verse 8.

The teaching of the home, where Christ is the Ruler, is a great blessing and will greatly enrich the later life. Verse 9.

Others judge our homes, and even our fathers and mothers by our manners. It is only fair that we strive to live up to their best teaching. Verse 8.

Jesus went to social affairs, and always seemed at home in them. At the feast, He "marked" how they acted. If Jesus were to attend your next Christian Endeavor social and stand and see how things were going, would He approve the plans and program? This question is the best test of the right kind of a social. Verse 7.

It is more honor to be invited up higher, to be called from the lower position to the higher. It is better to have another praise you than to be continually reminding folks how good and great you are. "Let another man praise thee." Verse 8.

The Gospel approves the humble man rather than the proud and vain. "Blessed are the meek." This does not mean to ignore and fail to develop one's capacities, but rather to lose self in service to others, to forget self when the heart and mind are full of the needs of others. Verse 11.

"Manners must adorn knowledge and smooth its way through the world."—Chesterfield. Knowing how to live to the fullest must include religion, expressed in worship and service, which will direct the doings of every day in a courteous, kind manner.

"Manners are kindness in action." So-called good manners are so because, by following them, you are kinder to other folks, and make them both more comfortable and happier. Courtesy to the aged, thoughtfulness for comrades, kindness to servants, help for the weak are all good because they help everybody to enjoy life more.

"Good manners are made up of petty sacrifices."—Emerson. Sacrifice also enters into religion, for our Christian religion is possible because of the great sacrifice of Jesus Christ Himself. His rich blessings more than make up for the sacrifices which may come to our lives.

"Evil companionships corrupt good morals." "Evil communications corrupt good manners."—1 Cor. 15:33.

Plans for the Meeting.

Occasionally try a "leaderless meeting." This would be a good topic for such a meeting. The program will be very carefully planned by the prayer-meeting committee, with somebody responsible for every part, so it is really a "many-leader meeting." The program will be on the blackboard or a big chart before the meeting, and at the time for opening, the song leader of the society will lead in the first song, or some one chosen before will lead in a Scripture call to worship according to the plans for the meeting. During the week before, a card will be sent to each member, suggesting some part for him to take in the meeting, and inviting him to be present early.

The following outline for a program for this meeting is suggested, and other special features, as special music or talks may be easily added, according to the time allowed for the meeting:

Call to worship—Psalm 100, in concert.

Hymn—"Come, Thou Almighty King."

Prayer—Some one appointed in advance, closing with Lord's Prayer.

Scripture lesson for the evening—Read by one, or two, one reading the verses from Proverbs, and the other from Luke.

Hymn—"Is Your Life a Channel of Blessing?" or "More Like the Master."

Three-minute talks—What spirit lies behind good manners? How do manners indicate unselfishness? Good manners of others that have impressed and helped me, and why? (Give this to three members.)

Hymn—"What a Friend we Have in Jesus!"

What part does the home have in applying religion to manners? What part does the school have in training in good manners? What part does the Church have in linking up religion with manners?

Hymn—"You May Have the Joy Bells" (two verses).

Brief thoughts by all members and visitors.

Season of sentence prayers for God's help in shaping our own lives, and influencing and training others for the right.

Closing hymn—"Blest Be the Tie That Binds."

Mizpah benediction.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR FOR GIRLS.

[The following was prepared and delivered by Alberta Atkinson, an Elon College junior, at the North Carolina Convention, at Catawba Springs, in July.]

Girls are accused of talking more than boys. That is because girls have more things worth saying than boys. Women are said to talk more than men, and that is because they have better things to say than men. Christian Endeavor brought to girls and women the opportunity to take a public part in Church service. It may be said that Christian Endeavor means the opportunity for girls to express themselves on topics of righteousness, duty and service now, as well as on topics of social gossip of so little worth. But expressing herself has not been without other and better fruits, both to herself and to Christian Endeavor.

In the first place, many of us girls have learned how to pray. Christian Endeavor gave us the opportunity, and we entered in. If it had done nothing else than this, it would have been worth all that it has cost. Time was when women, and girls in particular, did not think it worth their while to try to pray to God publicly. But Christian Endeavor came, and if we endeavor to be Christian—that is to say, if we are Christian Endeavorers—then we must pray, must learn how to express in words and through supplication the anxiety, the joy or the burden of our own hearts. There are thousands of Christian Endeavorers today who are better in their own lives, more willing and anxious to do the will and work of God because they learned through Christian Endeavor to pray in public. Robert E. Speer says that the greatest need of the Christian world today is prayer, and that the greatest contribution that we can make to Christian service is the right sort of prayer. Many Endeavorers, even among the girls, have often repeated the words of those who devoutly came to Christ while here on earth and said, "Lord, teach us how to pray." In turn, many of us have heard through Christian Endeavor the words of our Saviour saying, "Our Father, who art in heaven, hallowed be Thy name." And thousands have said this, and are now saying, "Thy kingdom come, Thy will be done." And having said this, they are willing and anxious to do what they can to help the kingdom to come. This at least is what Christian Endeavor has done for some girls, and is doing for thousands.

In the second place, we have not only the heart to pray, but through our societies have learned to go forth and endeavor to do the Christian deed in His name. James tells us that "pure religion and undefiled before God and the Father is this, to visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction and to keep himself unspotted from the world." Christian Endeavor has sent many a girl on a friendly visit to the fatherless and the widow, carrying not only joy and sunshine, but often flowers and food and clothes as well, and such deeds have helped to keep us unspotted from the world. It is said, not in boasting, but in pardonable pride, that Christian Endeavorers seek, or should seek the relief of human suffering and distress, of the sick and the needy, for this is such work as our Saviour did, and our society teaches to do it. And in doing these things, Christian Endeavor means something to us, even something of joy, happiness and the more abundant life.

In the third place, Christian Endeavor has made an invaluable contribution to girl-life in that it has led us to the Bible and to search the Scripture, "for in them do ye think ye have eternal life." If we live up to our Christian Endeavor pledge, we seek daily to read something from the pages of this the best and most worthwhile book ever written. More Bibles are printed and demanded today than ever before, and Christian Endeavor has helped to make this true. I am not exaggerating in saying that one of the greatest contributions that Christian Endeavor has given to girls is the vow to read daily from the Book.

Only eternity can tell what Christian Endeavor means to the girls in bringing them daily in contact with the Bible and causing them to read some verses from its sweet and solemn pages every day.

VALLEY LETTER.

The Virginia Valley Central Conference met August 14-16, at Timber Ridge, Hampshire County, W. Va. The session was well attended throughout. More people than usual went and stayed through the entire session. Of late years, a very noticeable bad habit has grown up among us, that of going to Conference only one day, usually getting there an hour or two after the morning session opened and leaving an hour or more before the afternoon session closed. The experience was then usually spoken of as "having been to Conference," whereas it was more automobile trip than it was Conference." Timber Ridge, being somewhat off to one side from the main body of our Churches, did not offer much inducement along this line, and hence people went and stayed to the close. Let us do fully as well next year, even though the session will be held at antioch, close to a number of our other Churches.

We were greatly helped during the recent session by Dr. W. H. Denison, Dr. J. O. Atkinson, Prof. P. J. Kernodle, Charles D. Johnston, and Prof. A. L. Hook as visiting brethren. Miss Pattie Coghill, field secretary of young people's and women's work in the Southern Christian Convention, was also introduced to the Conference, and is now visiting Churches in the Conference in the interest of her work.

Rev. Wm. M. Clem, who was licensed as a probationer at last Conference, was ordained at this session. Bro. Clem expects to spend two years in Yale yet, as a further preparation for his work in the ministry.

Bro. John W. Henderson, a railroad man and member of the East Liberty Church, was recommended for licensure. He will be licensed in the near future by his pastor, Rev. R. P. Crumpler. Indications are that Bro. Henderson will make a useful man in the ministry.

Rev. D. B. Seal was admitted to full membership in the Conference, coming to us from the Regular Baptist Church. Bro. Seal has done excellent work during the past year among some of our Churches in East Rockingham, Green, and Albemarle Counties.

A committee was appointed to consider the advisability of establishing a Christian college somewhere within the bounds of the Conference. The committee is composed of W. C. Wampler, W. M. Clem, James Bradford, Nelson F. Richards, A. W. Andes, J. F. Morgan, and R. P. Crumpler.

The following officers were elected for the ensuing year: President, Dr. W. T. Walters; vice-president, Rev. J. F. Morgan; secretary, Rev. A. W. Andes; assistant secretary, Rev. R. P. Crumpler; treasurer, Samuel Earman. Officers for the woman's board: President, Mrs. B. R. Richards; honorary president, Mrs. W. T. Walters; vice-president, Miss Ora Scott; secretary, Mrs. B. F. Frank; treasurer, Mrs. R. A. Larrick. Superintendents: Young people's work, Mrs. A. W. Andes; literature and mite boxes, Miss Ella Pickering; cradle roll, Mrs. R. P. Crumpler; women's work, Mrs. N. M. Hasler.

The apportionments for this year stand almost the same as last year, only a few minor changes being made.

The committee on resolutions presented, among other things, the following resolution: "That the Virginia Valley Central Conference hereby expresses itself as heartily believing in the full enforcement of the eighteenth amendment to the Constitution and the Volstead act. Representing more than 2,000 members, we are opposed to any weakening of said act. We call upon those who represent us to stand squarely upon this issue and not be influenced by the wet propaganda now being used. We pledge co-operation to all officers who faithfully perform their duty in law enforcement."

The following Churches paid all Conference apportionments in full, and are enrolled as banner Churches: Bethlehem, Christian Chapel, Concord, Dry Run, East Liberty, High Point, Island Ford, Joppa, Mayland, Newport, Palmyra, Timber Mountain, Whistler's Chapel, Winchester, Wood's Chapel. The Church paying the largest amount per member on Conference apportionments is Bethlehem—$1.30 each. Next on this line is Winchester—86 cents each. The average for the entire Conference for apportionments is 54 cents each. That almost represents our answer as a Conference to the great command: "Go, ye, into all the world and preach the Gospel." Think of it, 54 cents each in a whole year! This for the Conference apportionments or, generally speaking, the mission funds of the Conference.

When contributions for all purposes are considered, Winchester takes the lead, with $17.59 per member, and Mt. Olivet (G) comes in with $10.74 per member; Antioch, $6.30 per member, and Bethlehem, $5.85 per member. The average for the entire Conference is $4.94 per member.

The Conference will meet next year on Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday before the third Sunday in August.

MARRIED.

A marriage of much interest to their many friends was that of Miss Myrtle Watts and Mr. William Howard Crowder at the Rose Hill Christian Church parsonage on Saturday evening, August 11th at 7 o'clock. The ceremony was performed by Rev. R. A. Whitten, pastor of the Church, in the presence of a few intimate friends of the couple.

Mrs. Crowder is a consecrated member of the Rose Hill Christian Church, and at present has charge of the beginners' department of our Sunday School.

Mr. Crowder is a splendid young business man, connected with the Central of Georgia Railway Company in Columbus.

After a bridal tour of several days, they will be at home to their friends at 1305 Twentieth Street, Columbus, Ga.

Mr. E. Carl Brady and Miss Ora Viola Forkner, both of Bennett, N. C., were united in matrimony at the residence of Mr. R. W. York, August 25, 1923, at 7 o'clock P. M. Ceremony by the writer; prayer by Rev. J. Lee Johnson.

Happiness, longevity and prosperity be theirs.

TOKYO IN RUINS.

Tokyo, proud capital of ancient Japan, lies in ruins, the smoking piles of debris and heaps of silent dead giving tragic indication of the woe worked in the citadel of a nation's pride and power. Yokohama is destroyed; hundreds of villages are one with Ninevah and Tyre. The fourth strongest people of the world have lost their vaunted place in the sun; great business houses are no more; entire families have been wiped off the face of the earth; cable lines across the Pacific are filled with news of the greatest catastrophe we have known. It is probable that within a few hours more damage has been done to life and property in Japan than was done along the western front during the late war in a whole month.

The second largest tree in the world, a giant California sequoia, was recently renamed as a memorial to President Harding.

This tree, 32 feet through and 280 feet tall, is 5,000 years old, and still a youngster. There'd be a great national howl if a lumber company cut it down, and yet we watch without protest the destruction of our forest wealth which was millions of years in preparation, getting the soil ready for the trees. A treeless America is ahead unless we replant on a big scale.

173 SPECIAL PEACH TRAINS OPERATED BY THE SOUTHERN

All were run from Atlanta, 106 going to Potomac Yards, Va., and 67 to Cincinnati, the Southern having handled altogether 5,700 cars of this highly perishable fruit with practically 100 per cent efficiency.

CLEMENTS.

Funeral services of Irene P. Clements, daughter of the late Brooker and Sister Eustace Clements, and the only surviving member of the family, were conducted at Mt. Carmel Church, Walters, Va., August 16, 1923. Irene was fifteen years of age and had been in declining health for several months. She was the granddaughter of Mrs. Nannie Clements, of Antioch Church, and Mrs. Irene A. Duck, of Mt. Carmel; both of these have been active in the work of their respective Churches and both survive her. We cannot understand why the young are called away just in the morning-time of their lives, but we believe that in God's wise providence, He doeth all things well, and the value of our lives cannot be measured in days. Services were conducted by the writer, in the absence of the pastor.

THE SUN'S OBSERVATORY

A Marvel in Palesttine.—

The Marconi Wireless Company is now starting negotiations for establishing in Palestine a powerful wireless telegraph station. This wireless station will be able to send out telegrams to all parts of the world. Should this be realized, it would greatly improve the position of Palestine as a commercial center.

The Murder Record.—

Insurance investigators say that 10,000 persons are murdered in the United States every year. This record, they add, shows an attitude of lawlessness and disregard for human life without parallel in history.

Many causes may contribute to this record, but one thing is certain, namely: that we need to teach our children the sanctity of law and of human life. Murder indicates that there is something wrong with our children's emotional life. It is selfishness and hatred in the very highest degree. It can only be uprooted by a revival of spiritual religion.

Our schools cannot cure the evil. Influences far more tender must do the work. It is real religion our children need, not merely education. In one word, they need the ideals of Christ implanted in their hearts and made a part of their lives. And that is the task of the Church and of fathers and mothers the country over.—C. E. World.

Getting a Living.—

The Dearborn Independent discusses this practical subject from an unusual angle, namely: that of unnecessary expenditure of power. People would not be made so tired by the effort at securing a living if they did not expend so much useless energy. It says: "When you measure the human energy expended and analyze the purposes for which it is used, you discover that about 1 per cent of all effort is expended for the production of food. * * * More mental energy is wasted in fear concerning our living than is actually used in securing a living."

If this be the scientific statement of percentages, it would be the wise thing to stop any "leaks" through which energy might drip away, increasing by so much the effort we must put into our living. Just as the problem in mechanics is to minimize losses through friction and the like, so in life we might well save the power that goes into fear and worry and anxiety and other waste.—Presbyterian Banner.

A Newspaper Standard of Ethics.—

The American Society of Newspaper Editors recently adopted certain standards of ethics that deserve hearty commendation. Eighty-two per cent of all the metropolitan journals in all the cities of this country with 100,000 or more population, were represented in the convention that adopted the following ethical standards:

(1) Responsibility.—A journalist who uses his power for any selfish or unworthy purpose is faithless to a high trust.

(2) Freedom of the Press.—It is the unquestioned right to discuss whatever is not explicitly forbidden by law, including the wisdom of any restrictive statute.

(3) Independence.—Partisanship or comment which knowingly departs from the truth does violence to the best spirit of American journalism.

(4) Sincerity, Truthfulness, Accurateness.—By every consideration of good faith, a newspaper is constrained to be truthful. Headlines should be fully warranted by the contents of the articles which they surmount.

(5) Impartiality.—Sound practice makes clear distinction between news reports and expressions of opinion. News reports should be free from opinion or bias of any kind.

(6) Fair Play.—A newspaper should not publish unofficial charges affecting reputation or the moral character. A newspaper should not invade private rights or feelings without sure warrant of public right as distinguished from public curiosity. It is the duty of a newspaper to make prompt and complete correction of its own serious mistakes of fact or opinion, whatever their origin.

(7) Decency.—A newspaper cannot escape conviction of insincerity if, while professing high moral purpose, it supplies incentives to base conduct such as are to be found in details of crime and vice, publication of which is not demonstrably for the general good.—Methodist Protestant.

Love for the Old Home.—

The editor of the Presbyterian Banner recently made a visit for the last time to the old home of his childhood. It was his last visit, because the home had passed into other hands and the last member of his father's family had died; henceforth it would not be home. He says:

"Last week we gathered at the old homestead for the last time. It was for the funeral services of its last occupant. It was built in 1822, when our grandfather, on our mother's side, built it and took his bride to it. The direct offspring of that union, born in that home and married in it, lived in it until July, 1923, having survived all her father's family and all her own. There were other brothers and sisters, but they wandered from the old threshold and set up their own homes; but this one daughter remained behind, cared for the grandparents until they passed on, welcomed back her brothers and sisters until they, in their turn, passed on, and then kept the old homestead open to their children and their children's children unto the first generation. Our eyes turned to that old home as to a kind of a mecca—a holy place. We never crossed its threshold but what we held converse, through the pictures on the wall, the old door-frames and furniture, and, too, through the reminiscent talk of our little old auntie—with the revered souls of an earlier day. We shall miss the atmosphere of this old home—an atmosphere which was generated by its very age and especially by the spirit of its last and beloved occupant, who so profoundly revered all the past with which the home had been associated, and taught us reverence for it also, and for all, whether in persons or things, that has the touch of age upon it."

Mr. Bryan's Critics and their Guesses.—

The Methodist Protestant says: William Jennings Bryan was recently termed "an exceedingly dangerous character in religious thought" by the Rev. Edmund D. Soper, professor of the history of religion at Northwestern University, in an address before a Methodist camp-meeting. That was because Mr. Bryan has said that man must choose between the Bible and evolution. Dr. Henry Van Dyke, in a sermon in New York, upheld evolution as a part of divine truth, and referred to Mr. Bryan as being among those "who talk much and read little." Dr. S. Parkes Cadman, in his address at the commencement of our own Western Maryland College, also derided Mr. Bryan because of his opposition to the doctrine of evolution, and like Dr. Van Dyke, attempted to convey the impression that the great commoner was a veritable ignoramus as far as scientific knowledge is concerned. Criticising Mr. Bryan seems to have become a very popular pastime with a certain class of preachers and educators. It seems rather absurd, however, to refer to one who is as well read as Mr. Bryan as a man "who talks much, but reads little," and the general public will not be greatly impressed by the unworthy effort to discredit the intelligence and discount the learning of one of the greatest characters of American history. And in the meantime Mr. Bryan goes serenely on, challenging the preposterous theories of the Darwinian doctrine, and waiting in vain for a satisfactory reply to his assertions. As he so forcefully says: "There is no antagonism between religion and real science. Science is classified knowledge, therefore nothing is scientific unless it is true. No truth can hurt the Bible, no truth can hurt Christianity. Our objection is to unsupported guesses put forth by scientists in the name of science. The guess to which we most object is the guess that a man is a descendant of the brutes. We object to this guess because it is unproved and demoralizing. It leads man to look downward for interpretations of himself instead of looking up for inspiration."

NOTES-PERSONALS

The opening services of the First Christian Church of Richmond, Va., will be held on September 30th. Announcement regarding the opening will be made in next issue.

Rev. John G. Truitt, since his sickness this summer, is not certain that he will go abroad for study this fall. If he does not go abroad for study, he will study yet further in this country before accepting a pastorate.

Rev. H. S. Hardcastle has entered upon his work as pastor of the Suffolk Christian Church, succeeding Dr. Staley, who remains as pastor emeritus of that Church. Bro. Hardcastle is well qualified from the educational standpoint, and we hope to hear of a great work wrought through him in that field.

Rev. J. U. Newman, Ph. D., D. D., is the only man in the faculty of Elon College who has been in the faculty continuously from the organization of the college. That is a name worth having, and then he has done his work so well as to have won for himself and the college many friends. He is perhaps the best-versed man in the Greek language, and also the Hebrew, of any one man in the Southern Christian Convention.

President W. A. Harper, L L. D., of Elon College, is one of the readiest men in our connection —we mean ready for work—and being ready, he does the work, and does it so well and so quickly as to honestly earn his distinction among our brethren. We saw the proof of these statements for a few days before the recent opening of Elon College. It seemed that the work needed to be could hardly be guessed at—and yet he was the generalissimo, having in charge the work in general and in detail in hand. He could put more men to work and keep more quiet than any other man on the field. He not only knows how to do work himself, but he knows how to have it done by others.

Prof. J. A. Dickey, of Cornell University, has been a busy man during his vacation period. He served the United States government in a tour of inspection of the various camps in the Southern States, finishing this work on September 1st. Then he had to get his vacation and get ready to leave for Cornell before the 15th. He is one of our most promising men, and we believe the day is not far distant when the Christian Church will find some important work for him to do. The fact that he is now a teacher in Cornell University, in the State of New York, shows that he is a man of much capability. He is an untiring worker, with fine prospects before him. Prof. Dickey is a graduate of Elon College and of the University of North Carolina.

Rev. A. H. Sheppard, of Columbus, Ga., has undertaken, for THE CHRISTIAN SUN, a canvass of the Georgia and Alabama Conference territory. We commend his most worthy efforts to the hearty support of our people in the two States, and wish he may be very successful. It is a great undertaking, and we are looking for rich results, not merely to the publisher, but to the people of these two States as well. Wherever the Church paper is taken and read, we may count on a decided increase in the interest of the people in our work. This is so because the regular reading of the Church paper awakens interest on the part of its readers in the work of the Church. By all means, brethren, give Bro. Sheppard a helping hand, for in helping THE CHRISTIAN SUN, he is helping the work of the Christian Church in both Georgia and Alabama.

Prof. O. W. Johnson, of Virginia, is one of the new members of the faculty of Elon College, and begins his work with the beginning of the present session. He succeeds Dr. W. C. Wicker as professor of education. He has been teaching for several years, but last year, in order to fit himself for wider usefulness, he took a special course in the University of Virginia. We understand he comes to his new position in Elon's faculty with a strong recommendation by President Alderman, of the University of Virginia. We wish him great success in his new field. He is a son of Deacon J. C. Johnson, of Isle of Wight County, Va., and a brother of Rev. I. W. Johnson, D. D., of Suffolk, Va.

It did not seem natural in the opening of Elon College this fall not to have Rev. W. C. Wicker taking his usual place in the college faculty. He was one of the strongest men in the faculty, but felt impelled to devote his time to other work. He had been in the college for many years, and had done a fine work as a teacher. He was one of the few men who kept on preparing himself each year for his work of the next year by attending and taking work in the summer school at Columbia University. As an evidence of his fitness for his work as a teacher, for the last few years he was one of the men chosen to give instruction in the summer school of that university. He thus went from the student's chair to the professor's chair and acquitted himself well.

We understand that Rev. H. Russell Clem, pastor of the First Church of Greensboro, N. C., is soon to retire from that pastorate. Bro. Clem is a Virginian by birth, and though he spent several years in Ohio, he is still a Southern man and has been very active in the work of the Church. He built a very handsome house for our Springfield brethren in Ohio, while he was pastor of that Church. If your Church is likely to need a pastor, you may do well to have a committee appointed to visit the First Church at Greensboro and hear him preach Sunday morning and at night, not allowing your presence to be known till later, for then you will get to hear him as he is. We say this not only with reference to Bro. Clem, but with reference to our ministers generally. If you wish to have him preach, why go and hear him when that is practical, for you will come much nearer to getting at the character of his preaching than if you have him come and preach a trial sermon in your own Church. A hint ought to be sufficient for wise people.

At this writing we have not heard of the result of the surgical operation for Dr. Staley, but we hope to have good news from his bedside before this issue of THE CHRISTIAN SUN goes to press, and if so we will report it at once, that his many friends may have news from him. Many prayers have been and are yet being offered for him.

Later: We spent a short while in Dr. Staley's room, in the Lawrence Hospital at Winston-Salem, on Sunday afternoon, September 9th, but found him asleep, and on that account we could not talk with him, but Miss Annie Staley, the doctor's daughter, said he had improved during the last few days. However, the surgical operation was put off for several days, possibly till September 12th, and of course that is the moment of danger in this case. Let our friends continue to pray for him.

Dr. Staley has had a temporary operation, and is resting nicely. The major operation will not be performed until the last of this week or the first of next week. We are hopeful of his recovery. [The above message was received by telephone from Dr. Staley's physician in Winston-Salem at 10 o'clock Wednesday morning, as the last form of THE SUN goes to press.—MANAGING EDITOR.]

WINCHESTER LETTER.

Our Church here at Winchester has been very fortunate in recent weeks in having a number of distinguished visitors. These were Dr. and Mrs. W. T. Walters, of Richmond, Va.; Dr. W. H. Denison, of Dayton, Ohio, our "forward movement" superintendent; Prof. A. L. Hook, dean of Elon College, and Miss Pattie Coghill, our field secretary for young people's work in our Southern Christian Convention.

All these friends brought messages of wonderful help and inspiration to our people. Dr. Walters preached for us, and all enjoyed his message and were delighted to have the founder of the Church here and its first pastor with them again. Mrs. Walters led a most interesting Endeavor meeting for our young folks, and Miss Pattie Coghill delighted the Young People's Missionary Society with a fine and most helpful address. Dr. Denison brought us two great messages on Sunday, August 19th, that were immensely helpful and a great inspiration to all who heard them. We were also delighted with an illustrated lecture on "Christian Education" by Prof. Hook. Dean Hook is a Winchester boy, and was visiting his mother at the time. It was indeed a great pleasure to have him speak in our Church and to welcome him back to his old home again, and we hope he will visit us often.

Our work here is opening up in a splendid way after the warm vacation days, and we believe all departments of our Church will take on new life as we enter on the fall season. We are delighted to have two of the very finest young people of our Church here in Elon College this year—they are Miss Frances Hook and Mr. Robert Hook. We are sure that both are going to make good and will reflect honor upon their Church and home community.

BRO. MacCLENNY AND BRO. JOYNER.

DEAR DR. BARRETT:

In reply to Bro. Jason Joyner's criticism of my paper on the "History of the Churches in the Eastern Virginia Christian Conference," published in your edition of October 26, 1922, I beg to advise that I now have before me the manuscript from which this was printed, and the printer followed it exactly, as the paper mentioned will show. I said as follows: "Johnson's Grove was organized by Rev. Thomas W. Joyner, and admitted in 1868, and he was the pastor for many years. It has had several pastors since."

In regard to Mt. Carmel Church, I beg to advise that I quoted under this Church from Kernodle's Lives of Christian Ministers, under Mills Burwell Barrett, on page 283, which is as follows: "In 1871, Mt. Carmel was received into the Conference at Berkley, Va., and Rev. M. B. Barrett, who had been instrumental in its organization, became its pastor." From the text, it appears that Prof. Kernodle had before him the "Annual" for that year.

However, it is possible that Rev. Thomas W. Joyner was the man who started the movement for the Church there, as Bro. Joyner suggested, and we are always glad to get hold of first-hand information, for none of us are infallible.

W. E. MACCLENNY.

A Weekly Presentation of Truth for the Christian Life.

THE NEED OF THE HOLY SPIRIT IN THE BELIEVER'S LIFE AND WORK.

"Have ye received the Holy Ghost since ye believed?"—Acts 19:2.

The man who attempts to shoot without powder is doomed to a dismal failure. He may have a gun and shot, and all that in perfect order, but without powder, execution will fail. Everything else may be in order, but without powder and its power properly exerted, nothing can be accomplished. It is that way in the life and work of the believer. Without the power of the Holy Spirit, the Christian is helpless and, of course, fruitless.

When Paul met with the disciples at Ephesus, he was greatly disappointed to find them so completely without power—spiritual power. In his disappointment, he came at once to the main point of his thought by asking them: "Have ye received the Holy Ghost since ye believed?" It is true that our modernist friends claim that this question is not quite correct. They say that text should read: "Did ye receive the Holy Ghost when ye believed?" We cannot accept that translation, but if we did, the difference is very small. Suppose these Ephesians had answered: "We did not"; then they must receive this gift afterwards, if at all, and of course that would be receiving the Holy Ghost since they believed, and so if we accept this later translation, it does not destroy the sense of the one we have in the Authorized Version. So, for all practical purposes, the Authorized Version stands essentially correct, as I think.

The one great thought with Paul was to make sure that the Ephesian Christians had received the Holy Spirit, for without the enduement of the Spirit their lifework would be barren and fruitless for good; so he comes right to the point and makes it practically impossible to dodge the issue any longer. They must face the truth and decide whether they had had any such experience as receiving the Holy Spirit, and they admitted they had not even so much as heard whether there be any Holy Ghost or not. It must have been then, as now, many of the teachers of the Scriptures had badly neglected a most important duty, for they had not even taught the Ephesian Christians that there was such a person as the Holy Spirit at all. How unfaithful these teachers and preachers must have been?

With the Ephesian believers, as soon as they knew that they had not even heard that there was such a thing for them as the Holy Spirit, the first thing was to seek and receive the Holy Spirit. (See Acts 19:1-7.) That was the sensible thing to do, and just what we all ought to do in case we have not received this precious gift of God, for the Holy Spirit is God manifested in the life of the believer. The believer's power is not his own—it is the gift of God to enrich the believer's life and to make his labors fruitful. Thousands of our present-day Church members seem to lack this gift of the Holy Spirit, if we may judge by the lack of power in service. How many, alas! how many of our Church members of today have no power in doing the Lord's work? Why is it thus? Oh, beyond all doubt, if they had the gift of the Spirit they would immediately become fruitful and find the way to larger usefulness. The one thing all such believers need is to face honestly and earnestly the same question which Paul pressed upon the Ephesians to answer.

Let every believer face this question, and truly try to answer it:

Have I ever received the gift of the Holy Ghost? Did I receive it when I believed or have I received it since?"

Every unfruitful Christian needs to give much time, thought and prayer to answering that question. It is amazing how slow the professing people of God have been in seeking to make sure that they have received the Holy Spirit as the one essential of usefulness in the Christian life and service. If you are going to be a Christian at all, why not seek to be a Christian right, equipped with power from on high to do the work God calls you to do? Without the gift of the Holy Spirit, you can do no more in the service of your Lord in winning this world to Christ than could the gunner do in shooting his gun without powder. The gift of the Holy Spirit is just as essential for the believer as is powder for the gun that is to do effective work in its line.

We hear much of nominal Christians. Who are they? Oh, they are the men and women who belong to the Church; at least their name is on the Church roll, but you cannot induce them to take any active part in doing the work of the Lord. That is because they have not received the Holy Ghost. There is no clearer truth brought out in the Scriptures than that the believer must receive the gift of the Holy Spirit if he would be useful. We do not now recall ever having known a man or woman who had received consciously the gift of the Holy Spirit whose usefulness in the Lord's vineyard was not greatly increased by the gift, no matter what was his degree of intelligence. Then, do you ask: Why does not the Lord bestow this gift upon all believers? That is a good question, and it must be answered. If God should give the Holy Spirit to all of the profession Church people, it would be much like the proverbial act of "pouring water on a duck's back"—it would all be lost. Now, the Lord gives the Holy Spirit, as we understand it, only to men and women, as a rule, who have diligently and in faith sought for the gift. And there is a reason for this, viz: until one greatly desires the gift, he will not be prepared to receive it; and till he is prepared to receive it—till his heart has been made ready—he cannot get the gift, as he has nowhere to keep it. It was said of Josiah, the king of God's ancient people, that he prepared his heart before the Lord. The heart of the average believer must be prepared to receive the gift of the Holy Spirit, or he cannot receive this marvelous gift from God. We cannot receive that for which we have no capacity. If you should offer an idiot the best education it is possible to give, he could not receive it; not because he does not need it, but because he has no capacity to receive it. So, in a different sense, the believer cannot receive any gift of God for which he is not prepared, and because of that fact, the Lord does not bestow upon these deficient ones the great gift of His Spirit. That is why I think the disciples just before Pentecost were told to tarry at Jerusalem till they were endued with power from on high—through a study of the truth and much prayer, they were to prepare their hearts for the reception of the Holy Spirit. When the disciples heard this command, they immediately set out to get ready, and in a few days they were ready, and they received this gift of the Holy Spirit in such power that the day of Pentecost quickly followed when 3,000 souls were added to the Lord. In Acts 8:14-17, we are told that the disciples believed and received the Spirit. Believing must precede receiving.

Jesus expressly promised the gift of His Spirit to them that believe on Him. (See John 7:38-39.) Read what he there says for yourself. He went further, and said: "And I will pray the Father, and He shall give you another Comforter, that shall abide with you forever." Then, in 1 John 3:24, He tells us how we may know of such a gift, when He says: "And hereby we know that He abideth in us, by the Spirit which He has given us." You see, when we have prepared our hearts and have received the Spirit by faith, the Spirit tells us that He has come to abide with us.

Do you ask: What is this gift? Well, to make it plain, let us say that it is God giving Himself to the believer. If the sun can give itself to the flower and give the flower life and beauty, do you not think the Son of Righteousness can do as much for us if we will prepare our hearts to receive Him?

On one occasion, as I was starting from home to go to Church, I saw a beautiful flowering plant, one of great fragrance. It had been neglected and was withered, as if its life was gone. It appealed to my pity. I stopped long enough to give it a plenty of water, and when I returned from Church, the plant was all aglow with life and beauty and fragrance. It is so with the Christian—filled with the Spirit, he lives and blooms and fruits to the glory of God in Christ.

ELON'S THIRTY-THIRD OPENING.

The many friends of Elon College always look to each successive opening with increasing interest. They wonder if the college will have as many students this year as it had last year. The opening for 1923 was no exception to the rule. The fact that Elon met with the sorest calamity in its history in January last, rather increased the interest its friends had in this opening. The disorganization of its working force by the disasterous fire in the early part of the year and the consequent inconvenience of the scholars, to say nothing of the faculty, made the work more difficult, and yet through it all not a single person deserted his or her post, every one standing by the work nobly, even heroically. Of course, the rebuilding of the administration building and the construction of four other new buildings have necessarily required so much of the time of the president that he could not give the time to looking after students as he has done in other years, and yet, we are glad to report that the opening this year is better than last year—that is, the number matriculating at the opening was larger than it was last year. Of course, a great many are expected to come in later, so that we are likely to have as many as the present accommodations can take care of. The new buildings are not ready, but the first and second floors were so near ready that Dr. Harper moved into the president's office on the last day of August, and then by September 5th a part of the second floor was temporarily ready for the opening service, where a large congregation assembled on the morning of September 5th for the opening exercises. The administration building, it is supposed, will be ready in forty-five days, at the latest, for permanent occupation. The outlook is most gratifying as to a large attendance.

VIRGINIA CHRISTIAN CONFERENCE.

The annual business meetings of our Churches will soon be held, and at them the delegates to the annual Conference will be elected. It will greatly help the entertainment committee of the Holland Church if you will send us, as soon as you can, the names of all delegates desiring entertainment overnight. Be sure, too, to send with the names any other information necessary for our guidance in the allotment of homes.

J. PRESSLEY BARRETT, Editor,
Elon College, N. C.

WHAT ARE YOUR RELATIONS AND DUTY TO THESE FACTS?

We are having so many serious questions to consider nowadays that it is almost bewildering to make an effort to discuss even the most important of these questions. Again, it seems as if one must almost make himself a sort of a public censor of things in general to undertake to tell the people who read after him what is right in this and what is wrong in that, and yet where moral questions are concerned, what else can one do than to do his best to serve the best interests of his readers, even if some good people do think that he is assuming too much authority in doing so. We have been led to this expression by an article in the Herald of Gospel Liberty in a recent issue. For once we are in hearty agreement with both of the writers quoted. The Rev. S. Parks Cadman, D. D., says a few very pointed and much-needed things as to the public press in this country. As quoted in the Christian Century, Dr. Cadman says:

"Letters come to me from New Zealand and the ends of the earth crying for a journalism that exalts the power of God. In my city we have the Brooklyn Daily Eagle that is doing untold good in this line. One-half of what you read in the United States today is not news, but propaganda. I despise the weak-kneed attitude of the press on public and moral questions when the purse is at stake. In Germany, not one in ten knows what placed their great nation in chains. I have obtained every possible bit of information, and the blame seems to be upon a reptilian press that lies to the public. It is more anxious to defend the Kaiser and his cohorts than to tell the truth. Give us a press in America that does not cater to the vulgar instincts; one that does not deal in foam and froth and is not a picture sheet for the movie theaters. The Manchester Guardian in England does not bow its head to any influence, and is a second Bible to thousands in the British empire. I question whether any minister, be he a Spurgeon, Campbell, Beecher, or MacLaren, has the regal authority of a great editor. Journalism is the mighty fourth estate, and cannot be ignored by the Christian ministry."

In commenting upon this statement, Dr. Kerr, of the Herald of Gospel Liberty, says, and well says:

"If this be true, as undoubtedly it is, why is it that Christian preachers are so very slow to agitate for a cleaner and more reliable press; and why is it that pastors of Churches are so chary about using this fact as a basis for insisting upon the extreme importance of having at least one high-class religious periodical in every Christian home? The Herald is very honest when it voices its conviction that the relation of the press to public opinion, and the utter unsavoriness and unreliability of many periodicals, makes it a most pressing duty of every pastor to teach his Christian homes to take at least one religious periodical which attempts to give a sane and careful Christian interpretation of present-day conditions and duties."

For once we accept these utterances as our own, and gladly say "Amen" to what these brethren have said so well, and when so much needed. Let us say "Amen" a second time.

PREACHER, IS THIS YOUR WAY OF PREACHING?

You may have your way of preaching the Gospel, provided your way is an effective way for good. If it is not effective for good, then you had better drop your way and try to learn a better way. The late Rev. Charles G. Finney, possibly the greatest evangelist of Protestantism since the days of Paul, tells the preachers "How to Preach so as to Convert Nobody." The points he makes are certainly worth the attention of every man who ranks as a preacher of the Gospel. Hear Mr. Finney as follows:

"1. Let your supreme motive be popularity, rather than salvation.

"2. Study to please your congregation and to make a reputation, rather than to please God.

"3. Take up popular, passing, and sensational themes to draw the crowd, and avoid the essential doctrines of salvation.

"4. Denounce sin in the abstract, but pass lightly over sins that prevail in your congregation.

"5. If asked, 'Is it wrong to dance, play cards, and attend the theater?' answer very pleasantly: 'O, that is a matter for private judgment. It is not for me to say you shall or shall not.'

"6. Preach on the loveliness of virtue and the glory of heaven, but not on the sinfulness of sin and the terrors of hell.

"7. Reprove the sins of the absent, but make those who are present pleased with themselves, so that they will enjoy the sermon and not go away with their feelings hurt.

"8. Make the impression on worldly Church members that God is too good to send any one to hell, even if there is any hell.

"9. Preach the universal Fatherhood of God and brotherhood of man so as to show that no second birth is really needed.

"10. Do not rebuke the worldliness of the Church, but fall in with the amusement policy. Instead of meeting for prayer, let the people 'sit down to eat and drink and rise up to play.'

"11. Avoid seriousness, alarm, and earnest efforts to pull sinners out of the fire, and the old-fashioned idea that the Church is a rescue mission."—The Bible Champion.

Now, do not make the mistake of supposing that Mr. Finney is telling you how to preach so as to win men to Christ, but remember that what he is telling you is the way to preach so as not to win people to Christ. What every true preacher of the Gospel most wishes to know is how to preach the Gospel so as to win men and women to Christ. One way to find out that is to learn how to preach so as not to win the people to Christ, and when you know that, you will be at least prepared to avoid the ways of failure in the preaching of the Gospel. Then, turning your efforts in the opposite direction as the surer way to win, you may help your fellowmen. May God help us preachers to do our best to learn how to preach so as to win the people to whom we preach to Christ and to a closer walk with God.

PREACHER, IS THIS YOUR WAY OF PRAYING?

It is important for the preacher to preach the truth in the best way possible for him, but is it not even more important that he should pray aright? If the preacher is a poor prayer, then he cannot preach truly well, no matter how much he may know. The truth is, the most of us preachers do too little praying—far too little—and that weakens our hold upon God, from whom all of our real power must come; and not only so, but it weakens our hold upon and influence over men. If the preacher is to have power over men, he must have power with God. What is the greatest weakness in your preaching, brother? To confess the truth, is not your greatest weakness as a preacher of the Gospel the fact that you spend so little time with God in true and earnest prayer? No doubt, when we get up high enough in the divine life to look back over all the way we have come, we shall see how great opportunities we lose because we did not have power in prayer; and we did not have power in prayer not because we might have not have had it, but because we did not train ourselves in prayer under the leadership of the Son of God. How sad is such a failure!

The Watchman and Examiner puts the matter to preachers in this way:

A minister of experience, himself a teacher of preachers for many years, once remarked in our hearing that the average minister can preach a great deal better than he can pray. Years of observation have confirmed the truthfulness of that remark. Often we are charmed by the sermon of a minister. His thinking is straightforward and logical, his diction is admirable, his sentences orderly and well arranged. But when he comes to his prayer, he seems to "fall down" woefully. He halts and stammers as though speaking in a language with which he is not entirely familiar. His sentences are crudely put together—they lack sequence and progression. It seems as though he had no clear idea of what he really wants to talk to the Lord about, and is simply uttering whatever comes into his mind on the instant. The sermon is the expression of the careful and diligent thinking of a cultured mind; the prayer is the more or less crude utterance of a young convert just beginning to learn the language of prayer. Why is this? Does the average minister spend as much thought on his pulpit prayers as he does upon his sermons? Is the sermon of greater consequence than the prayer? Is it more important that the preacher shall know what he is going to say to the people about God than it is that he shall know what he is going to say to God about and for the people? This is not a plea for "written" prayers. It is simply a suggestion of the need of more prepared praying.

What Say You as to the Best Sermon?

There can be humanly no "best" or "greatest" sermons which will satisfy any universal standard. In any Church there remains the possibility that for any given hearer any preacher may next Sunday preach the greatest sermon that man ever heard or will hear. The study of other men's sermons ought to help each man in preaching his own "best" sermon; if it should hinder or discourage him, he has missed the meaning of greatness in sermons. Any editor has the right to list great sermons, but never to imply that there might not be for other men greater ones. He knows that in the only sight which is final, the greatest and best sermon on any Sunday may be preached by some simple-hearted minister in an obscure pulpit, a sermon that sets the bells of heaven ringing.—Continent.

WHY WE SO OFTEN FAIL.

There is little or no success when the worker is separated from the source of power. If the band break, the saw will not do its work; if the water power be turned off, the wheel will not turn; cut the wire and the lights will go out; turn off the electric current, and the machinery will stop. We must have power in the secular life if we would accomplish the task in hand. It is just as true in the spiritual life that we must have power if we would do our work. It must be the power of the hand, or of the foot, or of the mind, or the work cannot be done. It is just as true in the spiritual life. A minister must have power from on high if he would do the work which has been handed to him. Without power, a man, or beast, or machinery is utterly powerless. If you are to work, then you must have power. Not only so, but you must have the right kind of power—the power that will enable you to accomplish the task in hand?

We are going to give you here some of the views of great leaders who had power and who did achieve great things in their day and generation. If you can learn just one lesson from the thoughts they present, then it will not be in vain that you gave yourself to the study of this matter. Just as these other men had power to do their work, so you must have power to do your work. It may be that your work may require more power, or possibly less, but you must have the power your work requires, or your work will go undone and your life will be largely a failure, not because God did not give you a work to do, and not because He did not offer you the power with which to do your work, but it will be because you did not seize and use the power that was at your command.

The Rev. H. A. Brown, Winston-Salem, N. C., writing to the Biblical Recorder, gives the following thoughts, which are likely to be helpful to all who will wisely and truly use them in meeting the needs of their life-work. The first thing for any worker to do in beginning is to qualify himself or herself for the task in hand, and having qualified oneself, then he may go to work in earnest. Bro. Brown says:

Paul said: "I am crucified with Christ." We hear a great deal about the crucifixion of Christ. We preach Christ crucified. It ought to be the one great theme of evangelical preaching. We see paintings of the crucifixion in many Churches; we see pictures of it in many homes, in books and Sunday School papers. The preachers sometimes give us graphic descriptions of the crucifixion of Christ, in minute detail, and it is well. But there is another crucifixion of which we do not hear so much, and that is the crucifixion of ourselves. If we are real Christians, we are crucified with Him. Our crucifixion is a process. We are dying to the world, the flesh, the carnal desires that mar our spirituality, the pride of life, and the ambition that would dethrone Christ and exalt ourselves. If we are crucified with Him, we shall also be exalted with Him. If we suffer with Him, we shall also reign with Him.

"Must Jesus bear the cross alone,
And all the world go free?
No; there is a cross for every one,
And there is a cross for me."

William Carey said: "Expect great things from God, and undertake great things for Him." He was in early life a shoemaker and an humble minister of the Gospel. As he sat on his shoe bench, he had a map of the world stretched out before him. His heart was stirred within him as he thought of the nations in heathen darkness. He acquired a knowledge of foreign languages, went as a missionary to India, translated the Scriptures into many languages and dialects. Through his efforts, millions of human beings may have the privilege of reading the Bible in their own tongue. He is justly regarded as one of the prominent leaders in the great modern missionary movement.

How much we all might do for God and humanity if we would carry out William Carey's suggestion! Many a man has been an utter failure in life because he never expected anything and never undertook anything really worth while. We fail because we do not make our plans large. We do not get much because we do not expect much or undertake much. It is easier to do a big thing than a little thing, because a big task challenges our faith and effort. Mountains of difficulties vanish before men who have faith and courage. It remains yet to be seen how much we can do if we expect great things from God and undertake great things for Him.

Dr. John A. Broadus said: "The question is not whether the heathen will be lost without the Gospel, but whether he will be saved if we do not send them the Gospel." If God has commanded us to send the Gospel to the nations of the earth, how are we to raise new issues and suggest inexplicable difficulties? It is God's prerogative to command; ours to obey. Jesus said why do ye call me Lord, Lord, and do not the things I say? Ours is not to ask the reason why; ours is not to make reply—ours is to do and die.

A careful census will show that those who are the most interested in giving the Gospel to all the world may be depended on to do their full duty to those who are near-by. The good Samaritan did not ask the nationality of the stranger into whose bleeding wounds he poured the healing oil. It was enough for him to know that the stranger was wounded and in need, while he had the ability and the willingness to help him. The light which shines brightly the farthest away will shine the more brightly for those who are at home.

Mr. Spurgeon said: "Rome was not built in a day, nor much else, unless it be a dog kennel." Things which cost no pains are slender gains. Where there has been little sweat, there will be little sweet. There is no abiding success without a determined and continuous effort. The Bible teaches, "In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread." No farmer may hope to fill his cribs with corn who spends long hours in the summer under the shade of the trees while the grass grows unmolested in his fields. No great writer has written books that molded character and left deep impressions on passing generations who did not often grow pale under the midnight oil.

Many of us are in too big a hurry to finish our job. We forget that Benjamin Franklin said: "By diligence and patience, the mouse ate through the cable." We are like children who can't wait for the fruit to get ripe on the trees, but must pluck it off and eat it while it is green, and then suffer pain and aches as a reward for our lack of patience.

ASKING A STRANGE QUESTION.

It is said that any one can ask questions, and that may be true; but it is not true that just any one can ask sensible questions—questions which rightly demand an answer. As an instance of this sort of questioning, the Literary Digest asks:

"Can Christianity Live Without a Creed?"

We suspect that the trouble in asking that question is the fact that a just discrimination between human creeds and the Bible as a creed is not kept in mind. To one who, like this writer, has been reared and trained to have little respect for human creeds, but to make the Bible the creed of the Christian life, the asking of such a question seems little short of the ridiculous. Can Christianity live without a creed? If you mean can Christianity live without a human creed, we should unhesitatingly answer: Most certainly it can and will. If you mean can Christianity live without a divine and God-given creed (the Bible), then we answer just as positively: No, it cannot live without the Bible as its creed. In the Bible we have the revelation of the true Christian life. Take the Bible away from us, and soon we should not only have no creed, but no Christian life. On the other hand, if you take from us human creeds entirely, leaving us in possession of the Bible as the true and everlasting creed of the Church of Christ, the Church will live more freely and truly than now. The Bible is the creed of the Christian and of the Church of Christ, and to give it up would mean the slow death of the Church. We can live without human creeds, but not without the creed as given of God in the Bible.

We are wondering what is the trouble with the Literary Digest. It seems to have fallen on an interrogation point. It asks another question, which, it seems, must answer itself to any intelligent mind. It is this:

"Do they (the creeds) formulate and hold all the truth, and is belief in them (the creeds) essential to the salvation which humanity instinctively seeks?" If the reference is to human creeds, we should unhesitatingly say: No, they do not hold all the truth, nor are they essential to the salvation which humanity so truly seeks. If the reference were to the Bible, as the creed of the Church of Christ, then we should say, with equal certainty: Yes, the Bible, as the creed of the Church of Christ, holds all the truth bearing upon the salvation of the soul and the nourishing and building up of the body of Christ.

The trouble—at least, the main trouble—of the creeds' question comes to us in the fact that we do not distinguish between the pseudo-creeds of Christianity and the real, the genuine, creed of Christianity. The many are at a discount in the market of the Christian world; but the one, the real and genuine creed (the Bible), is above par value and without a discount of any kind throughout all Christendom.

So the answer to the question asked by the Literary Digest must depend largely upon what is meant by the creeds. If it be human creeds (as most likely it is), then the Church will live and be more fruitful without it than with it, provided, in giving up the human creeds of the Churches, the Christian people of the world will seize, hold, believe and live the teachings of the true creed of Christendom—the Bible, the revealed will of God.

The difficulty, as Prof. Cadbury suggests, cannot be removed by any reformulation of the creeds, for such a reformulation would still leave as an incubus upon the Church of Christ the curse which human creeds have laid upon it. The remedy must be more radical; human creeds must be abandoned and the creed—the Bible—must be given a chance to shape the opinions and faith of the people of God, as not since the days of Constantine. If the present upheaval in theology could result in a displacement of man-made creeds and the substitution of the Bible as the God-made creed of the Church, then, no doubt, a great blessing would result even from the present shapeless mass of creedal thought. The divinely given creed is a human necessity in the salvation of the world, but the man-made creeds of Christendom can be easily abandoned, and with great advantage to the cause of Christ.

It looks like the people of God in Kentucky are in a great and a most important fight for righteousness. A correspondent of one of the papers in Kentucky, writing of the situations in that State, says: "This is written Monday morning, August 6th, and on the face of the returns the Kentucky Jockey Club have nominated their man, but the fight is just begun. A fair, clean election and the forces for righteousness would have triumphed. Be not dismayed. To arms! Let this be the slogan of the host that love righteousness and hate iniquity. The aftermath of this primary is to be dreadful for those who, by tactics the most reprehensible, have seemingly had their way. There is fine fighting ahead, and a great victory awaits us. Legalized race-track gambling is doomed, and the end is in sight. Some of us are just learning how to fight for the right."

CONTRIBUTIONS

ELON LETTER.

Elon begins her thirty-fourth fall term on September 5th. The prospect is that we shall have an excellent session. Faithful and efficient service has been rendered on the part of the office force. Their work should be rewarded with a splendid opening.

There are a few changes and additions to the faculty and administrative force, though the great majority of those who served Elon last year will serve her again. It takes a continuing personnel to make a really great college. In this respect, Elon is fortunate. She is fortunate, too, in the class of added officers of instruction and administration listed below.

Prof. H. Babcock, M. A., becomes head of the new department of English language. Dr. Lawrence has for a long time needed an all-time professor to handle this work. Prof. Babcock is a born teacher, graduate and former instructor in Elon, graduate of the University of Virginia, and comes back to Alma Mater from William and Mary College.

Prof. O. W. Johnson, M. A., Elon and the University of Virginia, succeeds Dr. Wicker as head of the departments of education and philosophy. He has had twenty years' experience as a teacher, and is highly recommended by the University of Virginia for this position.

Miss Lydia A. Berkley, graduate of the music departments of Hiram, Oberlin, and the Cincinnati College of Fine Arts, becomes head of the piano and organ departments here. She has filled many college positions, and is eminently qualified for her work.

Miss May L. Stanley, graduate of Yale University and special student of violin in Berlin and Austria, who has had several years' experience in college teaching and is excellently qualified for her work. She becomes head of the violin department and assistant in piano.

Miss Deloris Morrow, A. B., Elon, and special student of Columbia, becomes head of the domestic science and physical culture departments.

Senor Manuel Rodriguez, of our Porto Rican Church, becomes instructor in his native tongue (Spanish), succeeding Victor M. Rivera, who returns to Porto Rico as a missionary to his own people.

Mrs. Mary B. Runge becomes resident nurse and matron. She is a former student, knows Elon, and loves it.

Miss Louise Savage becomes dean of women and head librarian. Dr. Helfenstein's work in Latin and expression grew to such proportions last year, with promise of still larger growth for this session, that she did not feel she could care for her teaching work and deanship at the same time. Dr. Helfenstein will also teach public speaking. Miss Savage accordingly becomes dean of women. She is a devout member of the Liberty Spring Christian Church, and loves young people. She has had several years' experience as dean of the Fort Loudon Seminary, Winchester, Va. She comes to Elon aflame with enthusiasm for her work, and determined to meet every requirement. She is fully qualified to do so. Miss Savage was trained in Randolph-Macon and the University of Virginia.

Prof. Paul S. Kennett becomes professor of social science in addition to his regular former work in history.

Dr. N. G. Newman is to give a course in the history, principles, and polity of the Christian Church. All ministerial students will be required to take this course before graduation. Any others who desire may elect it.

Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Dollar become the managers of the Men's Co-operative Club.

NAMES JESUS GAVE TO HIS DISCIPLES.

A name describes a person's character. What sort of name has he? A good name? A bad name? A name is a sort of family history in a word.

A name not only indicates what a person is, as: Isa. 9:6, "For unto us a child is born, unto us a son is given * * * and his name shall be called Wonderful, Counselor, Mighty God, Everlasting Father, Prince of Peace"; but it is also indicative of what he will do, as: Matt. 1:21, "And thou shalt call His name Jesus; for it is He that shall save His people from their sins."

Jesus called His disciples different names, and a study of these names shows what He wished them to be and do.

Servant.—"If any man serve Me, let him follow Me; and where I am, there shall also my servant be: if any man serve Me, him will the Father honor" (John 12:26). Already Jesus has set the example of service, being the suffering Servant of all time. Jesus wanted His disciples to be leaders by the servant route and right. He never once taught them bigotry. That they had a great temptation to self-elevation by virtue of the fact that they had been the special associates of the Son of God is obvious, but Jesus, both by example and precept, guarded them against any such error. "If any man would be first, he shall be last of all, and servant of all" (Mark 9:35). "For the Son of man also came not to be ministered unto, but to minister, and to give His life a ransom for many" (Mark 10:45. They saw Him die on the cross as a final fruition of this most glorious utterance. So in after years, with bowed heads and burning hearts, they ascribed themselves "slaves of Jesus Christ." Oh, what a privilege! what a position! what an honor to be a servant of Jesus Christ! This honor comes by obedience.

Friends.—"No longer do I call you servants; for the servant knoweth not what his lord doeth: but I have called you friends; for all things that I have heard of My Father I have made known unto you" (John 15:15). Here an advancement has been made in the greatness of the name Jesus has applied to His disciples. In the Old Testament only two are called the friends of God—Abraham and Moses. But here Jesus has called all His disciples, indiscriminately, His friends. "A friend is one who knows all about you and stll loves you." Jesus knows all about us indeed, and yet how He loves us! While we were yet enemies, He gave His life for us! Have you ever been alone with Jesus, and in spite of all your past sins of denial and neglect, in spite of all your doubts and fears, heard Him call you His friend? This honor comes by obedience. "Ye are my friends if ye do the things which I command you" (John 15:14).

Brethren.—"Go unto My brethren and say to them, 'I ascend unto My Father and your Father, and My God and your God'" (John 20:17). After Jesus' death on the cross, He had the right to add this still more gracious name to those which He called His disciples. Have you ever faced a great crisis? Have you languished on a bed of affliction? Have you ever been sneered at on account of your orthodoxy? And heard the resurrected Lord speak to your troubled soul and call you "brother." Then, somehow, some way, in spite of all your tests, you have obeyed. This honor comes by obedience! "For whosoever shall do the will of God, the same is My brother, and sister, and mother."

So whether we are Jesus' slave, friend, or brother, we attain these high and gracious places by obedience. Jesus Himself obeyed the Father. "If ye keep My commandments ye shall abide in My love; even as I have kept My Father's commandments and abide in His love" (John 15:10). If we strive to keep His commandments, He will not allow us to fail, because He loves us so. "Even as the Father hath loved Me, I also have loved you: abide ye in My love" (John 15:9). "These things I command you, that you love one another" (John 15:17). Oh! Jesus, help us to truly obey you in order that we may have the names you have chosen for us; yea, the names which were purchased by Thee on the cross for us, and Thy name shall be above every name, blessed forevermore. Amen.

JOHN G. TRUITT.

THREE INTERESTING RELIGIOUS BOOKS.

BY WM. THORNTON WHITSETT.

IN THE BREAKING OF THE BREAD is the title of an interesting religious book written by Rev. James I. Vance, for nearly twenty years pastor of the First Presbyterian Church of Nashville, Tenn. The book is from the presses of the Fleming H. Revell Company, New York. Dr. Vance is well known as a platform speaker, as well as one of the leading Southern pulpit orators; he is a brother of Rev. Joseph A. Vance, who for the past ten years has been pastor of the First Presbyterian Church of Detroit, Mich. Both have written a number of books on moral and religious topics, and both rank with the first ministers of our day as clear thinkers who are able to put their thoughts into printed pages. Dr. J. I. Vance has taken much interest in Oglethorpe University, and once taught homiletics in Vanderbilt University.

The book named is a series of addresses prepared for the services in connection with the Holy Communion, and the addresses are designed to lead the mind to appropriate meditations as preparatory to this service. The topics discussed are "The Holy Supper," "Mystical Friendship," "Cross Bearing," "The Human Christ," "The Divine Christ," "The Upper Room," "Inside the Cup," "Suffering and Glory," "Memory and Hope," etc. As a suggestive book for other ministers, and for use by those who wish to give themselves to meditation before entering upon the celebration of the passion and death of Jesus, the book will be found to be very helpful. The style is clear, and the thoughts are presented in logical, attractive manner.

A CHILD'S RAMBLE THROUGH THE BIBLE is another Fleming H. Revell Company book, issued by their New York house, that will interest all who try to teach the Bible to children. It is written by Rev. Robert C. Falconer, pastor of St. Paul's Congregational Church, of Nutley, N. J., after he had made quite a notable success in making short addresses before his junior congregation at St. Paul's. In fact, he took his original addresses, and after revision and certain changing has embodied them as the subject matter of this book. There are nearly forty of these short addresses, and each is so simply told and so well conceived that it is a certainty that they will hold the attention of any intelligent child. Each is based upon a text, and each sticks close to the text, and insures close interest and attention. Some of the interesting topics are "Noah's Ark," "Joseph the Dreamer," "Moses in the Bullrushes," "The Fall of Jericho," "Gideon's Army," "The Man with the Big Body and the Small Soul,"

'The Boy who Lived in a Church," "The Giant-Killer," "Fighting and Building," "Esther," "A Man or a Mule," "Walking with a Wobble," "Daniel in the Lion's Den," etc.

By-Paths to Forgotten Folks, by Coe Hayne, comes from the Judson Press, Philadelphia, and is the story of real life as found in certain home-mission fields in the Baptist Church. The book is divided into five sections, and contains 200 pages of very interesting matter. Beginning with the Sunset Indian mission work, it tells the story of the last of the Yosemites, the waifs of the Sierras, and other stories of Indian mission work. This is followed by a history of the work in Arizona and among the Navajos. The work on mountain and prairie, in Nicaragua, and in the Imperial Valley complete a book that carries much information gathered from actual contact with types of Western life. The work illustrated represents the labors of the Northern Baptist Convention through its missionary boards to help the Indians of the Northwest, and the Southwest, the remote settlers of distant regions, the children of Alaska, the Hindus of the California valleys, and the foreign-speaking people that throng our Eastern industrial centers. It makes an appealing story, rich in human interest. There are more than a dozen pictures taken on the spot, and giving unusual glimpses into the life and habits of many of the regions described in the book.

MOSES vs. DARWIN.

(In Three Parts—Part III.)

By William Jennings Bryan.

"I sent my son to college a Christian, and he came back an atheist."

Most Ridiculous.

I am telling you what the professors teach your children. Do you know that they actually believe the eye came by development; that God did not make man as he is, but, according to Darwin's hypothesis, everything we see came from things invisible and by slow and gradual change. This is the explanation of how the eye came to be: There was a time when no animal had an eye, and at that time a little animal without eyes discovered a piece of pigment or freckle on the skin, and when the rays of the sun were traveling over the body and came to this piece of pigment they converged there more than elsewhere, and they made it hotter there, irritated the skin more than elsewhere and brought out a nerve, and out of the nerve came an eye.

A man by the name of Fosdick, a preacher in New York City, and he also teaches in a theological seminary, wrote a little book on the meaning of faith. He says that evolutionists tell you that if a man has eyes it is because the light waves beat upon the skin and the eyes came out; if he has ears it is because the sound waves were there first and the ears came out to hear; that everything a man has, has come out in response to environment. Think of it, friends, if the light waves beat upon the skin, why do not eyes come out all over? And then men can believe that and teach it when they cannot believe the miracles of the Bible. Two of his students showed me what they had written down in his class, and what did he say? "Miracles, scientifically improbable, historically unreliable, practically undesirable, and therefore unbelievable." He cannot believe in the miracles of the Bible, but he can believe that the light waves tickled the skin and an eye came out.

In a Sunday School convention last June at Kansas City, my name was up for one of the speakers, but was withdrawn, and the reason given was that they wanted only experts. I have been teaching Sunday School since I was a boy, and my weekly talk on the Bible lesson is read by more people than any talk in the world; I am just stating this to show that I might be considered somewhat of an expert, yet this was the reason given for withdrawing my name. They had an "expert" who had a chart, showing man's progress from a monkey.

The Danger Point.

But the chief objection to this belief is that it is destructive. I did not say that every one who believes Darwinism and takes it seriously loses his religious life, but I do say that the tendency is to undermine faith in God, in the Bible and in Christ. When I tell you I believe in quarantining against smallpox, do not say I said everybody who takes smallpox dies of it. We quarantine against, not because everybody dies, but because some do. I am opposed to Darwinism not only because it is untrue, not only because it is absurd, but my principle objection is because it is dangerous.

In the first place, it killed Darwin spiritually, which I can show by his own testimony. He began life as a Christian. His father wanted him to become a minister, started him out to study for the ministry, and he was not pleased when he turned aside to study science. When Darwin was a boy he believed all that was Christian. If you doubt it, read his own letters written just befor he died. He says: "When I went South (that is, when he was young) on board the "Beagle," I was laughed at by the officer and called orthodox because I quoted the Bible as an unanswerable authority on some point of morality;" but in a letter later he denies that there ever has been any revelation; he discredited the Bible as the Word of God by the inspiration of God, and with it he discarded Christ. In that same letter, written just before he died, he says that it was since he wrote the "Origin of Species" that he gradually weakened, and says: "The mystery of the beginning of all things is insoluble by us; and I for one must be content to remain agnostic." He says: "Can the mind of man, which has, as I fully believe, been developed from a mind as low as that possessed by the lowest animals, be trusted when it draws such grand conclusions?" He brings man down to the brute beast and then judges man by brute standards and shuts the door to heaven. Now, if there is any atheist who wants to quote Darwin he can do it, but let no minister quote Darwin unless he tells his congregation what Darwinism did to Darwin. Isn't that fair? I tell you the spiritual mortality is greater among the believers in Darwin than physical mortality is among those who have smallpox.

James H. Leuba, teaching psychology at Bryn Mawr College, writing seven years ago, said that belief in immortality and belief in a personal God and a personal Christ is dying out in the educated circles in the United States, and to prove it he finds the names of 5,500 scientists in a book which, he says, contains the names of practically all the scientists; he writes to them and gets their answers, and on their answers to him he states that over half of them tell him that they do not believe in a personal God and a personal immortality. Then he takes out nine representative colleges and universities and writes to the students themselves, and on their answers he says that 15 per cent of the freshmen, 30 per cent of the juniors, and 45 per cent of the graduates tell him they have discarded the principles of Christianity. And the reason they do it is because they have come under the influence of cultured men. That is what Leuba says.

It Don't Help a Fellow in Peril.

But you don't have to go to him for evidence. You can just go to the parents who send their children to college. They will say: "I sent my boy and girl to college Christians, and they came back atheists." I was in the town of Wilmette a year ago, speaking in a union meeting, and a few weeks after I had a letter from the man who invited me, enclosing a clipping, and it said that a boy who had taken up with Darwinism and was very much impressed by what Mr. Bryan had said, was drowned, and the man gave me the further information that two boys were in a boat which capsized; one was drowned and the other escaped. When the boy who was drowned was struggling in the water, he said to the other: "If I ever get out of this I am through with evolution." It doesn't help a man in a time like that. I believed that the professor that robbed that boy of his hope of immortality and planted in him the doctrine of the brute, will have the blood of his soul on him when he comes to the bar of God. And yet these men tell us they have a right to teach this doctrine and to demand pay for it from Christian parents! It has been hard to get people to understand what is going on.

I believe in freedom of conscience. If a man wants to be an agnostic he has a right to be, just as much right as any man has to be a Christian in this land. That is the law, and I will help to enforce it as the law. We give them every right we ask for ourselves, but is the time coming in this country when the atheist and the agnostic have higher rights than the Christian? The Christians build their own colleges to teach Christianity—the Methodists, Baptists, Lutherans, etc.; they go down into their own pockets for the money to build them, and they put above the door the kind of instruction given so that those who send their children there will know what the child is being taught. All we ask is that the atheist and the agnostic shall do the same. Let them go down into their pockets and build atheistic colleges and hire atheistic teachers to teach atheism to atheistic children. But there are no atheistic colleges. Why should there be if the atheists and the agnostics can save their money and draw public salareis for propagating their doctrines?

If there ever was a time when we cannot afford to allow the faith of people in God and in the Bible to be destroyed, it is now. We have come out of a war, the bloodiest war that the world ever saw. We look back and find that thirty million human lives were lost, three hundred millions of dollars in property were destroyed, and the debts of the world are three times as great. We find that the world has been bearing the devil's burden and she cannot bear it any longer. To whom shall she turn? There is only one. That is the one reared in the carpenter shop, whose "yoke is easy and whose burden is light." And remember it wasn't ignorant men who brought the world to ruin. It was college graduates who built the dreadnaughts and the superdreadnaughts, and it was the scientists who made the poisonous gases and the liquid fire. It was worldly-wise men who made the war so hellish that the world was about to commit suicide.

Evolution would rob Christ of the glory of the virgin birth; it would rob Him of the majesty of His death and of the triumph of His resurrection. That kind of a God cannot save the world. Today we need the Christ of whom the Bible tells, the Christ whose blood has colored the stream of time, the Christ whose philosophy fits into every human need; that is the Christ of whom the Bible tells.

I am glad to plead with the world to get back to God. I believe in a real God, and when the world comes back to God it will be looking for the Word of God, and it will find it in the Bible, the revealed will of God. There it will find the story of the Christ, the only hope, whose teachings can solve all the problems that vex our hearts and perplex the world. I am for the Bible against all those who oppose it.

MISSIONS

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Field Secretary.

A CALL FOR HELP IN THE HOUR OF DISTRESS.

A cablegram from Japan advises that none of our missionaries lost their lives in the great catastrophe which has befallen that land recently through earthquake, tidal wave and fire. However, there is much damage to property and dire need on every hand among the people with whom our missionaries are working in Tokyo and Yokahama, where we have many Christians and extensive work. According to reports through the daily press, which are yet meager, this is the greatest destruction of life and property from natural cause of which there is any record. America is called upon to help this stricken and distressed people. This call should meet with quick, liberal and universal response. If SUN readers will send their money to the undersigned, acknowledgment of the same will be given in THE SUN and the entire amounts forwarded to our foreign mission secretary, Dayton, Ohio, who will immediately transmit the amounts to the most needy and deserving peoples and places. Even before this notice is written, Bro. W. H. Freeman, Star, N. C., sends $5.00, which we acknowledge with pleasure. Let all who feel that they can help a people in dire distress and great need send their contributions in as rapidly as possible to J. O. Atkinson, Mission Secretary Southern Christian Convention, Elon College, N. C.

J. O. ATKINSON, Mission Secretary.

IN THE MOUNTAINS OF VIRGINIA.

It was on the morning of August 31, 1923, at the beautiful town of Mount Airy, Northwestern North Carolina, that a young man in a Ford roadster from Carroll County, Va., called for me. I had arrived by train at Mount Airy the night before at 9 o'clock. Because I was a stranger in that town, I had taken a jitney for the Blue Ridge Hotel, but, finding this chief hostlery of the town overrun, lodging was found for me in the delightful home of Mr. W. E. Lindsay, a manufacturer of cotton goods.

My mission on this trip was, as substitute for Dr. J. O. Atkinson, to visit and address audiences at two Christian Churches—Rocky Ford and Elk Spur—some fifteen to eighteen miles to the northwest, in the Blue Ridge Mountains of Virginia. My chauffeur, I found to be an artist at the job of driving over a perilous mountain road. Too, he was a splendid companion. I had often heard the word "guy" applied in an uncomplimentary way. But my chauffeur was a most estimable Guy (Guinn), a bright, normal young man of a little less than twenty summers.

Our first stopping-place was Rocky Ford, where, through the agency of the Mission Board of the Southern Christian Convention, a Sunday School and a Church have been organized, and where as yet no house of worship other than an adjunct to one of the humble mountain dwellings, has been provided. A site for a Church building has been selected, however, and excavations made for the building. It is very difficult to find level land enough in one place in these parts on which to erect even a small house. This location is on the State highway, built by Virginia from the North Carolina line across the Blue Ridge through what is known as Fancy Gap. This highway winds up the mountain through picturesque gorges and around precipitous mountain spurs at a comfortable grade of perhaps five per cent. Notwithstanding dangerous precipices, often rising abruptly from the ribbon of roadway or descending almost perpendicularly from it for hundreds of feet to the dark depths of a shadow glen, there is a great deal of motor vehicle and other forms of travel on this highway, and there is likely to be much more in the coming years. The State of Virginia, I am told, is already constructing this into a splendid modern highway.

The hour for services at Rocky Ford was 10 o'clock. The small auditorium was filled to its capacity. Simple Gospel hymns were sung with a spirit of worship that was uplifting. In that small audience—and the entire audience was a choir—were two young men, apparently in their teens, who were able to play these hymns with surprising skill. It was soulful to hear a sweet-toned organ above the voices of the congregational choir, and both above the sound of mountain rills in a wild, sparcely settled mountain glen, perhaps a mile wide and almost as deep. The sincerity and heart-to-heart reverential touch of that worship I shall not forget.

On leaving Rocky Ford, Guy drove some five or six miles farther up the mountain to his home at his grandfather's—Mr. McMillain's. Here is where Mrs. Morey, the most estimable supervisor of the work of the Mission Board at these Churches, makes her home. A good dinner was ready for us. We were now on the crest of the Blue Ridge, and the wealth of scenery over the wild waste of land piled up by the hand of God was sublime. After a short, but most hospitable stay in the McMillan home, we went to the handsome Church and school building combined, only a few hundred yards away, for another service at 2 P. M.

It was at this point, now called Elk Spur, that Miss Iola Hedgepeth only three or four years ago began work as a teacher of a day school. Her beginning has grown into blessing of educational opportunity of scores of young people and older ones, too, in day school and Sunday School.

Three Churches have been organized. Miss Hedgepeth is now Mrs. Merideth, and resides in the immediate community. While domestic ties occupy her time now, yet there is still keen interest in the work she initiated. The services at Elk Spur were wholesome and sympathetic, as they had been at Rocky Ford. Here, the singing was good, under the leadership of Miss Meredith, who presided at the organ also. A large class of children, both boys and girls, showed excellent training in two songs well rendered. It was a pleasant surprise to find at the close of the service that in the audience there had worshiped with us two members of Dr. Kendall's Church, Springfield, Ohio, Misses Alice Marquart and Bessie Leavell. They were spending a vacation in the delightful climate of these parts. They were kind enough to express appreciation of the services, and Miss Marquart was very complimentary of our missionary family, the Barretts in Porto Rico, where she visited since the Barrett daughters came to Elon College. So much pleased with the other members of the family, she was anxious to know about these two daughters.

For fear that my account of this Carroll County trip shall prove too long for the space allowed for it and as rambling as the mountain road, I shall have to say that Mr. Strickland, a former teacher of this county and a most agreeable gentleman and pleasant traveling companion, together with his little daughter, Gladys, brought me back to Mount Airy by nightfall. I came away feeling that the Church should continue this field of work.

HISTORICAL SKETCH OF THE BETHLEHEM CHRISTIAN CHURCH, NANSEMOND COUNTY, VIRGINIA.

By Wilbur E. MacClenny.

[This paper was prepared by Mr. MacClenny and was read by him on the occasion of the dedication of the third house of worship built for that congregation since it was originally organized by the late Rev. W. B. Wellons, D. D., in October, 1847. Bro. MacClenny makes the story a most interesting one, or rather he writes the fine old story of Bethlehem in a way to add interest to its many substantial facts. We have read it with growing interest from beginning to the end, and we can but believe it will prove of real interest to many who have never known the old Church and its many splendid achievements.—Editor.]

Members of Bethlehem Christian Church, Friends and Visitors:

Your humble servant is delighted to be with you on this momentous day at this place, for it was here that he attended Sunday School and Church services in his youth. He well remembers coming here with his mother and father the day on which they cast their lots with the Christians at this place. Well does he remember coming here also as a small child and attending the service in the original Church which stood just north of the present building, and in the crowd while going out, after the service, he became lost from his father, and as is the case with all small children under similar circumstances he was almost frightened to death when he realized that he was lost.

Many are the hallowed and treasured memories and the pleasant reminiscences of your speaker that center around this Church and community, for this was the first Church to which he ever belonged. But with all these things in mind there is a feeling of sadness, for many whom he has known in the short space of his life have been called to that land from whose bourne no traveler returns; yet with this there is the bright and happy thought that many are not enjoying the splendors of that country where nothing impure can enter, where there are no partings, no sickness, suffering nor death, and where everything is in a state of perfection not known to mortals.

Out yonder in your cemetery, and in the different cemeteries of this section we find the small mounds which show to the living where many were laid, some being marked, and some not, but all are awaiting the great reveille or general resurrection. To some who are now gone on before, we believe this occasion would be one of the greatest pleasures that earth could afford, yet they are now resting from their labors, which were faithful unto death, and are no doubt rejoicing with you on this occasion in another sphere. Many others with whom your speaker was associated in young life, and who are still numbered among the living are scattered to the four winds of the earth, yet we hope that the sacred memories of this place will be to them in the turmoil, strife and storms of life as an anchor to the soul, both sure and steadfast, and that many of these will come from the East and the West at the final day and be able to sit down with Abraham, Isaac and Jacob in the kingdom of heaven, and that they will be able to look back to this spot, as did Jacob after his dream, and say this was the very gate of heaven to them.

Your speaker regrets that the limitations of his vocation prevent him from giving you at this time a paper worthy of the occasion, and wishes that this task had fallen to the lot of a master instead of to him. Yet as he has been asked to give a sketch of Bethlehem, he will endeavor to do his best, and it is hoped that this may serve to make each member more loyal to his Church and denomination.

It might be interesting to some to speak of a few incidents in the early history of this community, how it was transformed from a howling wilderness, inhabited only by the fox, the bear, deer and the Indians, to what it is today. Again, it might be interesting to speak of some of the early settlers and their struggles in subduing the earth, or how this section became, as it were, the seedbed for the families that went to other parts, and there furnished men who have held high station in practically every walk of life. Rev. Elisha Battle, the early Baptist, was from this section, and went from here to North Carolina. The Meade family, that has furnished so many famous men in the nation in military, civil and religious life, had their original home at 'Mount Pleasant," on the creek between Lake Kilby and Pitch Kettle Road, the land now being owned by Bro. Jos. T. Williams. But we cannot, for the want of time, go into all these things, and so we will only attempt to give a sketch of the community as it was found by the late Dr. William B. Wellons when he was a young and vigorous man, called to preach the Gospel of the blessed Saviour of men.

In 1846, he could, like John Wesley of old, be seen often traveling from place to place in this and the adjoining counties of Virginia and North Carolina. He rode in a sulky, which, from his diary, was often broken down, and carried his Bible and hymn-book, going hither and thither, preaching the Gospel, and his whole desire and prayer to God seemed to be to help poor fallen humanity. With no reflections upon any one, it must be said that he soon became the greatest leader the Christian Church produced before the War Between the States, if not the greatest up to the present. He had great personal magnetism, and seemed to draw men and women to him, and no matter where he was seen, his presence was felt, and the whole assembly was eager to follow him as a leader.

He traveled through this section of the county, and it is told of him that, as gentle as he was, he was actually afraid to pass this way at night. A contemporary writer of the times uses these words: "Previous to the organization of this Church, the community around here was very immoral and irreligious—indeed, noted for dissipation and vice. But soon, under Dr. Wellons' faithful ministrations, a great reformation was brought about."

From the old Church record, which we have seen, we get the words that have meant more to this community than any other proclamation ever penned. They are these: "The following are the names of members of the Church at Bethlehem, who agree to be known by no other name than Christian, and to have no other rule of faith and practice than the Holy Bible." Following this we find these names: John Copeland, Elisha Everett, Ann Eliza Everett, Angeline Holland, Louisa Kellam, Martha Ashburn, Mary E. Ayers—all of these are put down as joining on October 9, 1847, and on November 14, 1847, George Murphy and Charlotte Milteer joined. From this, we believe that October 9th, or the second Sunday in October, 1847, was the day that this Church was first organized, and the first seven mentioned were the charter members; and on the second Sunday in November the latter two members joined, and these were all that joined until the next year.

Among those who joined this Church later, we find the following males: John W. Turlington, Thomas J. Kilby, Richard Copeland, Joseph W. Ballard, Henry Lassiter, James Johnson, William Gwynn, Stephen Harrison, James Redd, James Norfleet, Jacob Willis, Michael King, William Eley, Jesse Ballard, John A. Norfleet, John G. King, John Gwynn, Sylvester Ashburn, William F Milteer, Etheldred Marvel, Francis Monell, Carr Holland, Wiley Rawles, Richard E. Aires, William Henry Eley, Thomas S. Kilby, Isaac P. Luke, James M. Pruden, Aaron Archer, William Turlington, Theddeus G. Williams, John R. Copeland, Allen Redd, James Holland, William Cooper, James King, George T. Faulk, Mills Pruden, Richard Bartlette, Harrison E. King, William T. Duke, Robert J. Bartlette, William Coleman, Richard H. Baker, James V. Luke, Elias Beale, Abram T. Norfleet, William Baker and Allen Powell.

Among the female members, we find the following: Jane Knight, Ann P. and Mary A. Knight, Delilah Redd, Mary A. Norfleet of N., Andrewetta Ballard, Elizabeth A. Dildy, Mary A. Lassiter, Rebecca Coleman, Ann Eliza King, Susanna Holland, Judith A. Copeland, Martha E. Norfleet Redd, Mary Copeland, Rebecca Monell, Rachael Norfleet, Mary L. N. Monell, Louisana Kilby, Martha King, Elizabeth Bartlette, Lydia D. Clay, Ann U. Kilby, Margarite A. Turlington, Edith E. Archer, Mary J. Williams, Harriett Faulk, Camilla Goodson-Council-Peel, Martha Hedgepeth, Elizabeth A. Bartlette, Median Powell, Cornelia Hodges, Elizabeth Kellam, Ann Kellam and Kisiah Johnson.

The exact date that the first house was erected has not been found, but some years ago we called upon an old ex-slave, Uncle Washington King, who joined this Church, by the record now extant, June 12, 1853, for some historical date relative to this section, and he gave me the following account of how the first Church was built at this spot. Said he: "As soon as Dr. Wellons, who came down from Southampton County, began to preach in this neighborhood, and proposed to organize a Church, "Silver-Haired" John Copeland (he was the father of Col. John R. Copeland, of the Farmers' Bank, of Nansemond, and grandfather of Mrs. M. C. Riddick, now living in suffolk), Mars, Mike King, Elisha Everett, Col. William Eley, Capt. Richard Copeland, Judge Thomas J. Kilby, John Turlington and many other prominent men of the community, came together, and with their own efforts and that of their servants, put the house right up." No doubt, Uncle Washington King did a good deal of the hewing for the new Church, as that was his trade. Each year after the Church was built, revivals were held, the first being held in 1848, and members were added to the membership. Tradition says the first house was dedicated by Rev. Mills Barrett. He also said that Dr. Wellons was the best preacher he ever heard. Rev. Isaac N. Walter, the great revivalist of Ohio, was here several years during the fifties. In 1849, two years after the Church was organized here, the Eastern Virginia Christian Conference met with the Church. This shows that the growth had been phenomenal for it to be able to entertain that body so soon. But we must remember that there was no Christian Church in Suffolk until much later, and all the members of the Christian Church in the town belonged to Bethlehem, and this added to its strength. It might be said that Bethlehem and Cypress Chapel are the mothers of the Suffolk Christian Church.

In 1849, while holding the second revival here, Dr. Wellons suffered a partial stroke of paralysis, and was taken out apparently dead, but he rallied and was able to attend the last day of the meeting In 1856, Rev. Samuel Copeland, a member of this Church and a brother of Capt. Richard Copeland, who lived where Bro. Jesse Joyner now lives, whom so many of the older members knew so well, was licensed to preach, but he passed away before the next Conference met.

FAMILY ALTAR

Conducted by H. E. Rountree, U. S. Navy.

"In Thee and in Thy seed shall the families of of the earth be blessed."—Gen. 28:14.

MONDAY.

Our Responsibility for the Kingdom.

"Those who labor for the kingdom sake shall receive manifold more in this time and in the world to come."—Luke 18:29, 30.

Humanity (and, therefore, you and I) is face to face with the responsibility for the coming or for the delay of the kingdom of God. If the kingdom is righteousness and we are the means of its progress, it behooves us to work at the job. What are you doing to effect right in everything? That only will bring the kingdom, and without it life is without hope and God in the world.

Prayer.

Our Father, may we begin the week aright. Give unto us the true idea of the kingdom, our part in it now, and full grace to do it? This we ask for Jesus' sake. Amen.

TUESDAY.

The Light of God.

"In Thy light (O God) shall we see the light." —Ps. 36:9.

Jesus says (please read consecutively the following passages: Jno. 6:12; Luke 8:16; John 1: 4, 9, 3:21; Eph. 5:14).

What is this light? It is the saving knowledge of the world. It is the way out of and deliverance from sin. It is a heavenly ministration that brings comfort in our sorrows and troubles. It is the understanding of infinite truth. It is the potentiality of purity. It is intelligent holiness that satisfies and is more to be desired than the unsatisfactory pursuits of life. It is that something all along that points to the right and brings joy and gladness.

By an understanding of astronomy, the seaman understands the starry heavens and knows how to pilot his ship. That is light, and saving light. By the science of mathematics, the architect knows how to build a house. By the plumline, the builder knows how to set it right. By the light along the way, the engineer knows how to hold his throttle. Through Christ and His teachings, and through following him, we know how to live right, become like Him, and reach God.

Prayer.

Heavenly Father, Thou hast provided everything in this world for the perfection of it and ourselves. Thou hast set comrades and friends beside us and Christ before us, as lamps to our feet. Make us certain of the victory because Christ is ahead of us, going forth conquering and to conquer. Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

"Work out your own salvation with fear and trembling."—Phil. 2:12.

Living a Christian is not eating peptonized food which makes no demand upon our mental mastication and digestion. We must think, we must study, and we must work hard to get it. When the Lord called us to follow Him, he did not promise us riches, fame and an easy, luxuriant life. Easy ways means invalidism. He does not do the work for us, nor even the thinking. There is not a single instance when one came to Him with problems that He solved them Himself; but He never left them empty-handed. He gave them the light, and then left them to work it out for themselves. For example, he said: "The kingdom is within you." And again it is explained, the coming of the kingdom is "up to you." There is absolutely no hope for one in this world or in the world to come until he takes Christ and works out salvation himself. There is no hope for the tree until it takes the earth and the atmosphere into its own life and then within itself it finds its own salvation. So it is with us.

Prayer.

Our Father, in the name of Jesus Christ, who hast taught us that we may have life and have it more abundantly through Him, purify and enlarge our vision, we pray Thee, that we may wholly and perfectly abandon ourselves to Thy will, Thy way and work out our own salvation. Forgive us, we pray Thee, and teach us how to find the full consummation of all true happiness. Amen.

THURSDAY.

Fearing God and Obtaining the Light.

"The fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom."—Ps. 111:10.

Please read also the following passages: Ps. 19:9; Prov. 3:13, 10:27, 14:27, 19:23, 23:17.

The fear of God is either filial or servile. Filial fear is a holy affection and gracious habits of life which are wrought in the soul by unswerving loyalty to God (Jer. 32:40), whereby one is inclined and enabled to obey all God's commandments—even the most difficult of them (Gen. 22: 12 and Eccl. 12:13). It is that something which whets our sensibilities to sin and engenders a hate for and a desire to avoid it.

Servile fear is that slavish sort which is the consequence of guilt. It is the judicial kind, which trembles at the majesty of heaven. It is that alarming something within that disturbs the peace of a sinner. Though this kind of fear may often lead one to the mercy and grace of God, it is the filial kind that is being spoken of in the text.

Prayer.

Dear Heavenly Father, give us this day a yearning for the first love—God our Father—and for an abundance of His light all along the way. And then help us to love men as Thou didst love them. Enable us, as we are passing along, to have the spirit of Thy compassion and be a minister of Jesus and of His light all along the way. Keep us from wounding any heart, or burdening any life, and when each day is done, if we have cheered any one, Thine be the praise and the glory. Amen.

FRIDAY.

Doing Our Best.

What is "best?" There are many ways in which one thinks he has done or may do his best. He who thinks he can, and spares nothing to achieve something better all the time, is near the accomplishment of doing his best.

Oliver Cromwell wrote, I am told, in the flyleaf of his Bible, "If I cease to become better, I will cease to be good." Christian character is a living thing, growing and constantly changing, and if it is not growing better it is growing worse. In order to grow better, there must be a deep feeling and belief that we must become better. Each day's inventory of ourselves should be: have I more self-control, more patience, more sympathy, more kindness than I have had? Am I more unselfish? Am I looking for truth more? and so on. It is not a question of degree, but one of improvement. The moment one becomes satisfied to grow no better or is indifferent to it, that moment the decay of his character sets in and he actually grows worse. As long as one is dissatisfied with himself, his desire to grow better is stimulated and he actually improves.

Prayer.

O God, we know Thou hast placed many possibilities with us, and each day brings us a thousand joyous opportunities. Help us to make the most of ourselves and everything else with which we have to do. Grant that our eyes may all the day long behold Thee, and that we may press on towards the mark of the highest calling in everything. Grant that each day we may draw from the treasure of Thy storehouse and be glad. In Christ's name we ask it. Amen.

SATURDAY.

The Man with a Margin.

"Abstain from all appearance of evil."—1 Thes. 5:22.

The man with a margin is one who has a line drawn between right and wrong and maintains a safe distance between him and the line where he would be in the wrong. We all know where the shore-line is that divides the land from the sea. We are apt to know the line between our State and the adjoining one. We do not always seem to know the line between right and wrong, and we need to know this as well. There is no safe place except a safe distance from that line so that no risk may be run in crossing it. The man who has not this margin lives too close to it. There are some who live so close to this line that, in the dark, they have time to step over and come back again without being seen. He is a man of no margin, and there will come a time when some one will suspect him of doing so and distrust will follow. This is the kind of man that is described in the parable of the house built upon the sand. It must fall. Here the Bible injunction applies: "Be sure your sins will find you out."

Prayer.

O Lamb of God, that taketh away the sins of the world, have mercy upon us and help us. Enable us to have mercy upon ourselves and live so that sin is far away from us. This we ask for Jesus' sake. Amen.

SUNDAY.

God's Rivers.

"He that believeth on Me, from within him shall flow rivers of living water."—Jno. 7:38.

Please read the following passages: Ps. 46:4; Ezk. 47:9; Isa. 32:21; Jer. 31:9; Ezk. 34:13.

A river denotes subsistance, plenty, constancy, refreshing, happiness, prosperity and good will. The Indian named the lake "Winnepesaukee," which means the smile of the great spirit, and I sometimes think that they knew more about water than we do.

The Scriptures very strongly represent God to us as a river, or as waters. A river is sovereign in its source and power, plentiful in its gifts and graces, abundant in its refreshing, eternal in its smile and benefits, complete (if not perfect) in its goodness. And God has said that his children shall be like a river, and like a tree planted by the river, like a river in a dry place, and that our righteousness shall be like the waves of the sea. Is there a more beautiful symbol for all the graces of God for man?

Every life is sovereign, out of which the issues of life pour forth or emanate like a river, and no one is a stagnant pool. Every one is good or bad, according to what is at the source of those issues. Some people's lives are sewers and vehicles of putrifaction. Others are as pure as the crystal fountain. If God is at the source—on the throne—"Out of the throne then proceeds a pure river of life, clear as crystal."

Prayer.

Dear Father, we commit ourselves to Thy keeping and ask Thee to give us the river whose abiding waters give us rest of mind and soul, and strength that is not selfish power. Stimulate our courage, bestow on us true ideals, inspire our lives, calm our souls, and may we daily eat of the fruit of Thy garden. In Jesus' name we ask it. Amen.

Christian Orphanage

WHAT WOULD YOU DO?

DEAR FRIENDS:

Fourteen applications in one day makes the superintendent wish he was worth a million dollars. We would build new buildings and give the little folks a home. We have had more than fifty applications in the last three months. Most of them pitiful indeed. Think of a widow with two or three little children, and cannot make enough to care for herself and children! Do you have sympathy for her?

A man came to see me a few days ago and begged me to take his four children. He lost his wife a year ago. He has done his best to care for the children. The people with whom they are living tell him he must take them away, as they cannot care for them longer. He is up against this proposition. He must get them in an orphanage or give them to a children's home society and let them be adopted to some one else, and then he will not know where they are placed.

Dear readers, suppose you were in his place, and you loved your little children as this man loves his. Would it not make you feel very kindly toward mankind if some provisions could be made to help you till you could get on your feet again and perhaps get your home re-established?

These are pictures that have been presented to us this week. Shall we turn them away? I dare say every one who reads this letter will say, lend them a helping hand, but we have one hundred children and our expense account is more than our income. Unless our income increases we cannot give them a home.

It is up to our Church and denomination and friends of the little children. I am doing my very best with the funds we have.

Will you increase your contributions and make them larger and help us to lend a helping hand to these children?

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON,
Superintendent.

FROM DR. LANKFORD.

I write this line to say that my vacation has ended in a great way. On my return from Georgia and Alabama my Church presented me a nice new 1924-model Buick sedan, five-passenger capacity. I have been on the ground, but my good folks have put me on wheels. Such evidence of appreciation of the service I am trying to render makes my heart swell with gratitude. How I desire to do my best for my people and for God!

I had a fine trip to the far South. The meeting at Antioch was a great feast of spiritual things. Doubtless, Bro. Hunt will write of this. The reunion of the family at my father's was the best day we have ever spent together. Out of five boys, three are now preachers. The oldest, W. W. Lankford, was recently ordained to the ministry in the Baptist Church. A younger brother, Shaffer D., has been licensed to preach in the Christian Church, and will enter Bethlehem College September 12th. He hopes to come to Elon later. This makes me very happy.

With every good wish, and praying God's blessing upon you, I am,

Yours in Christ,
G. O. LANKFORD.

Burlington, N. C.

THE GOOD WORK IN THE SOUTH.

Our revival began at Bethany, July 21st. Rev. J. D. Dollar assisted us in this meeting. On account of our appointment at North Highland, we did not get to Bethany until about noon Monday. We arrived in time to be in the close of a good spiritual service. The interest was good in the beginning and continued to grow until the meeting closed.

We are truly glad of the unity and sweet fellowship that exists in Bethany community. We had the co-operation of the Methodist and Baptist, which added very much to the services. Bro. Dollar did some splendid preaching, which was enjoyed very much by all who heard him.

There were six accessions to the Church, who confessed Jesus as their Saviour. The meeting closed Friday at noon, and everybody went home rejoicing, because Jesus of Nazareth had passed that way.

We received four members at Bethany the second Sunday in August, which is our regular appointment, and makes a total of ten additions for the year.

The dear Lord has wonderfully blessed us in our work this year. Brethren, pray for us.

A. H. SHEPPARD.

MRS. C. H. ROWLAND,

The truth is mighty to the pulling down of the strongholds of evil, but to do that you must have a man of character and of fearless bravery to handle the truth. Even a sword will not do its work without a swordsman to handle it, and no more can you expect truth to do its work till a man who is able to handle it is found. Truth by itself is helpless, but truth in the hands of a true man is mighty.

IN MEMORIAM.

Benjamin Franklin Ayscue was born October 20, 1842, and died June 8, 1923, at his home near Epsom, N. C., age 80 years 7 months and 19 days. He had been in declining health for several years, but only grew rapidly worse about twelve days before his death. He was married November 14, 1867, to Miss Bettie Ayscue, and unto this union God gave four loving children, namely: Margelia, Ollie, Laudia and Sallie. There is an old saying that we have to live with a person to know them best. The companion's wonderful, but sweet, testimony is, after more than fifty-five years spent with him: "If Frank has not gone to heaven, we need not try to get there."

He leaves to mourn his death a devoted Christian wife, four loving children, five grandchildren, one great-grandchild, three brothers, a sister and quite a number of relatives and friends. He was a veteran of the Civil War, having gone through the war and was present at Lee's surrender. Best of all, he was a faithful and loyal soldier of the cross. Bro. Ayscue united with Liberty Christian Church, Vance County, N. C., more than sixty years ago, and was deacon for about fifty-two years. He served on the graveyard committee for thirty-five years, always willing to give efficient service. For some time he was not able to attend Church very much, but whenever he felt like going, the loving children would carry him, helping him along, in order that he might be at service.

This writer has known him personally for more than twenty-five years, and never knew a better man, a more devoted Christian home. A home where all the children honored father and mother with the love, loyalty and devotion due them. They said after he was gone: "We know he is better off, but we are not, for a word from his was a priceless gift to us." They had not a doubt about him, and as he had asked them not to weep, they tried to carry out his wish in the the best way possible. There is no one that can say that they ever heard a word against him. He was loved by all, and his loving and wise counsel was accepted and appreciated by many. He trained his children in the nurture and admonition of the Lord, and his life of Christian service helped them to become Christian men and women.

The two oldest, Margelia and Ollie, never married or left the home, but was there with him to the end to comfort and cheer him and mother. Their loving care and help was more than words can express. Ludia married Mr. Leola Stainback, and Tollie, Miss Bertha Smith, making two more devoted children in the home. These lived near the old home, where Bro. Ayscue had lived for fifty-three years.

Funeral services were conducted from his Church Saturday, June 9, 1923, at 4 P. M., by Rev. C. E. Newman and J. G. Green, both former pastors, with Rev. J. E. Franks, his present pastor. The testimony of these three good men, who spoke the sentiments of a large number of friends and loved ones who gathered to pay the last tribute of respect, made us remember that a good name is rather to be chosen than great riches. While Bro. Ayscue is with us no more, his works will live on, and his wise counsel will be an inspiration to us to work for higher and nobler things. He will be greatly missed as a deacon, a faithful husband, a loving father, and one that was considered to be the father of our Church. May God's richest blessings comfort the bereaved ones, and especially may He give grace sufficient to sustain the dear companion, who is nearing the seventy-ninth mile-stone in life, is the prayer of the writer. May we realize that our loss is his eternal gain, and let his life be a signboard to follow, leading us on to a land of perfect day, where all sorrow will pass away.

Devotional Reading: Ps. 119:9-16.

A Youth Called and Trained to Serve.

Today much stress is being placed upon the opportunities before youth. More and more is said and written regarding preparing them for responsibilities which will be theirs. Laws are being passed to protect their physical well-being. Schools are being built, and teachers trained, to guide their mental development. Church gatherings which did not devote much time to young people not so very many years ago, are now thinking about them and their needs, and stressing Christian education as a very vital part of the program of the Church.

The apostle Paul must have realized much of this need long years ago, as he called young men to help him in the service of God, and when he both inspired their lives by his words and had a share in training them as ministers and workers. In our minds, Timothy is always asociated with his "spiritual father" Paul. Frequently he is mentioned by Luke in the account of Paul's travels. Again and again, Timothy is referred to with a word of commendation by Paul in his messages to the Churches. Two books of the Bible are devoted to Paul's personal letters to Timothy, giving counsel helpful to youth of all times. "Keep that which is committed to thy trust"; "Stir up the gift that is in thee"; "Endure hardness," was his advice to Timothy, timely to all, like him, who are eager to give their best. Paul realized that Timothy needed to trust God implicitly, to love Him, and then as a "true soldier of the Lord Jesus," serve Him by serving others.

This lesson comes as a challenge to those who wish to see the kingdom's work go forward. To such Christians, no greater opportunity is given than to influence a young life to serve God where and how he may be most needed. The friendly association of Paul and Timothy, as revealed in New Testament Scripture, shows effective ways by which this Christian influence and training may be accomplished.

"From a Child Thou Hast Known the Holy Scriptures."

Timothy had a faithful mother, and a devout grandmother (2 Tim. 1:5). From the time he was a little child, he had been faithfully taught from the Scriptures. Paul reminds him of this, and urges that he continue in those things which he had learned. Some one has declared that whatever is put into the very first of life can never be taken away. That teaching is a part of the very life, given at a time when the childish mind is impressionable and eager to learn. As with other of our Bible heroes, Timothy had the advantage of an early training that influenced his whole career. This is our most powerful weapon to use in developing Christian characters, and producing Christian leaders.

"Behold, a Certain Disciple was There" (Lystra).

When Paul found Timothy at Lystra, he found a faithful disciple. He saw his worth, and called him to go out with him in the work. They went through many cities, established Churches, and received new members. All along the way, Timothy shared the work of the journey, learning as he served. He came to take a share in having charge of the work, and in visiting the Churches founded. To the Philippians, Paul wrote: "I trust to send Timotheus shortly * * * for I have no man like-minded, who will naturally care for your state." Wherever Paul mentions Timothy, it is with pride. But Timothy's larger service was possible because a man like Paul trusted him, gave him wise counsel, and gave him work to do. Many a Christian worker will testify today that he is serving because some older Christian was wise enough to discover in him powers to stir into action. Most of us need encouragement at times, and the expressed confidence of one in whom we believe, helps much. Timothy seems to have been shy, for Paul urges him to "endure hardness." He may have been timid about going ahead with the work in strange fields, but Paul trusted him. His nature was that of the normal youth, eager to do something, ready to sacrifice for the worth-while, responsive to encouragement. His life is an incentive to those who are thinking of life-investment, for the same Heavenly Father who guided him stands ready today to lead His children and show them how to serve Him best, and where.

God needs "Timothys" today. He needs young people who will hear His call to discipleship. He needs young people who are willing to heed the command: "Study to show thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed." He needs young people who are seriously thinking of Paul's injunction to Timothy: "Neglect not the gift that is in thee," and are considering thoughtfully how that gift in their own life can be best used. It is the "God-planned life," of which James McConkey writes that Timothy found, and hosts of others are seeking. They need to see that God has a plan for every life, a plan which no other person can fulfill. Through the heritage of a Christian training in youth, through hearing the call to follow Jesus and be His disciple, through being faithful workers, eager to learn and love and serve, the "Timothys" of 1923 are coming forward gladly to take their places, inspired by faithful "Pauls" who have confidence in them and love for them.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

September 23, 1923.

Topic: "Gems from books we have read."—Prov. 25:11; 1 Tim. 4:13.

Thoughts for the Meeting.

Books make our lives richer. They introduce us to great men and women whom we could never see nor know. Their words bring to us beauty as that of "apples of gold in network of silver." Verse 11.

"Fitly spoken" words are food for the mind, which needs nourishment as well as the physical body. Verse 11.

The "word fitly spoken" brings us the message we need, coming as cheer in sadness, comfort in sorrow, joy in gladness. Books can be our helpful companions at all times. Verse 11.

Reading is a means of education which is at the disposal of all. All men cannot go to college, but some good book can be secured which will give some measure of knowledge. Carlyle declared: "The true university of these days is a collection of books." Verse 13.

"Books are legacies that a great genius leaves to mankind."—Addison. So Paul exhorts Timothy to read, knowing that through books he can be inspired by great men of genius. Verse 13.

"Books should, to one of these four ends, conduce
For wisdom, piety, delight or use."
—Sir John Denham.

"Some books are to be tasted, others to be swallowed, and some few to be chewed and digested."—Bacon.

"Reading is to the mind what exercise is to the body. As by the one health is preserved, strengthened and invigorated; by the other, virtue (which is the health of the mind) is kept alive, cherished and confirmed."—Addison.

"Books, we know,
Are a substantial world, both pure and good:
Round these, with tendrils strong as flesh and blood,
Our pastime and our happiness will grow."
—Wordsworth.

"That is a good book that is opened with expectation and closed with profit," says Alcott. Can you test your reading by this feeling of expectation, and realization of profit?

Is it fair to judge a man by the book he reads most? By the kind of books he likes best?

The Bible contains all forms of literature. A more careful reading of the Book, as we keep our Christian Endeavor pledge, will give the mind many gems of more value than precious jewels.

Plans for the Meeting.

Choose for the leader of this meeting the member who reads good books, one who is best able to direct a discussion. High school students taking advanced English courses will be interested in telling of books required in their courses, and telling of the ones which mean most to them. Ask the members in advance to come prepared to tell frankly the book which has helped them most and why.

Have the good literature committee, if your society has this committee, or a special committee appointed for this meeting, present a list of books which should especially appeal to and help Christian Endeavorers in your society. Perhaps they can secure a few copies of good books to start a Christian Endeavor library to encourage good reading. Look in the Journal of Christian Education for the list of books included in the reading courses for certificates and diplomas, and discuss this list in your meeting.

Send a special invitation to this meeting to all the school teachers and high school students in the community. Make them feel that you want them in the society as active members during the time they are living near you. A little card cut in the shape of an open book, with the subject and Scripture reference on, makes a fitting invitation to this meeting; or, better still, a topic card, with the topics for all winter printed on.

Questions for Discussion.—"The book I like best, and why." "How can books be our good friends?" "My favorite poem (with quotation), and why." "How can Christian Endeavorers help direct the reading of our junior boys and girls?"

Suggested Hymns.—"Faith of Our Fathers," "He Leadeth Me," "More Love to Thee," "A Charge to Keep," "Joy to the World."

JUNIOR CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR PRAYER-MEETING TOPIC

SEPTEMBER 23, 1923.

TOPIC: "My favorite hymn, and why I like it." —Ps. 66:1, 2, 4.

Juniors have hymns which they love. And boys and girls love the best hymns when we sing them in our services. In a camp of younger girls on the shore of one of our Great Lakes, I listened the other day to a group of girls singing their favorite hymns, and they were: "This is My Father's World," "Lead On, O King Eternal," and "Break Thou the Bread of Life." And a few days later I heard those same girls singing the same beautiful hymns as they went about their daily work and play, and I wished so very much that every Junior Christian Endeavorer could know those great hymns. Let us begin to learn one of the great hymns of the Church in this meeting, and learn it so we can sing it wherever we may be. What hymn do you like best, Junior Endeavorer, and why do you like it? Come ready to tell at the junior meeting!

RELIGIOUS EDUCATION DOINGS.

Rev. H. M. Gray, the loyal pastor of the Lanett, Ala., Christian Church, reports the recent organization in his Church of three Christian Endeavor Societies—junior, intermediate and senior. All societies are doing fine work. This Church has many fine young people who are being well trained through these three societies.

The Christian Endeavor Herald is a new paper, giving the C. E. news of the Winchester, Va., Christian Church. It is issued each week by the society's information committee—R. A. Larrick and J. A. Spaid. Notes on the topics, announcements and Church news appear in an attractive way on its pages. This society has a large Christian Endeavor Expert Class, taught by the pastor, Rev. J. F. Morgan.

One of the best Junior Christian Endeavor Societies in the North Carolina Conference is in the Palm Street Church, Greensboro, where Miss Lettie Scott is the happy superintendent of forty active juniors. Most of them are present every Sunday night at the junior meeting.

THE YOUNG PEOPLE'S WORK IN THE VIRGINIA VALLEY.

I have just returned from a visit to the Valley of Virginia Central Conference and to a number of the Churches of that Conference, which I was privileged to visit as your new field secretary. I was very much pleased with the entire trip and encouraged and thankful for the interest and enthusiasm for missions which I found there. It seems to me that there are good reasons for hopes of great things in missionary endeavor in that Conference, and I was glad to note the progress which is being made in both interest and endeavor.

In the first place, the Conference itself was filled with missionary thought, the program providing for a number of inspirational addresses on that subject, a meeting of the woman's board, and an evening devoted entirely to the work of the women and young people. In the thirteen Churches which I visited, I found ten of them giving one Sunday's offering each month to missions and one to the orphanage, and several of these with a missionairy superintendent furnishing a five-minute talk on mission Sunday. In a great number of these Churches there are missionary organizations either for the women, the young people, or both.

We had a wonderful trip up there on a car with Prof. and Mrs. A. L. Hook. It was just the time when the mountains are the loveliest, the grass green and the weather beautiful. The Valley people are indeed wonderfully blessed by Mother Nature, and should be able to gather from the surroundings an inspiration to do much for the Master.

My first meeting was with the Timber Ridge young people the evening after the Conference closed. This splendid group of young people were eager to organize and begin work. The organization was completed with the following enthusiastic and capable officers: president, Marvin Seldon; vice-president, Lester Seldon; secretary, Lacie Brill; assistant secretary, Bessie Wathey; treasurer, Walton Brill.

The following Sunday morning, during the regular Sunday School class period, I met with the ladies of the Woman's Society of the Winchester Church. They have been organized for some time and are continuing to do a great and good work. They are planning a mission study class this winter under the leadership of the president, Mrs. J. F. Morgan.

On Monday evening the Young People's Society met at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Russell Cather. They have as members of that society one of the finest groups of young people I have ever met. During the evening they reorganized, with the following officers: president, Madeline Muse; vice-president, Grayson Sheetz; secretary, Russell Cather; treasurer, Irvine Cather. While in Winchester, I was very royally entertained at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Harry Seabright.

At Leaksville, one of Rev. R. P. Crumpler's Churches, there is a woman's missionary society doing splendid work, with a good membership, under the leadership of the president, Mrs. Jenkins.

My next visit was among the Churches of Rev. and Mrs. A. W. Andes' pastorate. They were especially good to work with, because of their faithful devotion to their work, which is a very hard work because the Churches are scattered. Mr. Andes is interested in missionary work and is encouraging it in his Churches, and Mrs. Andes is especially interested in young people's work and is faithfully performing her duty as superintendent of young people's work for the mission board.

At Bethlehem, there is a growing missionary society, listed as a young people's society, doing a good work for the children and older people, under the leadership of Mr. R. C. Myers. At Concord there is also a young people's society, which endeavors to give missionary inspiration and endeavor to the young and old. This is a rather good plan, as it more or less makes the entire Sunday School interested. There is no missionary society at Whistler's Chapel, but they have a good Christian Endeavor Society there, which is endeavoring to do both kinds of work.

The next three days I was privileged to visit three of Rev. W. O. Hook's Churches, namely: Antioch, Linville and New Hope. They are all putting on missionary programs and doing a very good work. Each one gives one Sunday's offering each month to missions and one to the orphanage. Miss Vertle Showalter is president of the Antioch society; Miss Ora Scott, at Linville, and Mrs. Jerry Bryant, at New Hope.

Saturday night and Sunday were spent in Powell's Fort, with Wood's Chapel, Palmyra, Joppa and Dry Run. At each of these Churches the appointments were the regular preaching services, and we had large congregations and much interest manifested. Dry Run has a very pretty new Church building and fixed nicely on the inside. Dry Run has a young people's society, which at the present is unorganized, but they promised to reorganize as soon as they can conveniently get the group together.

The women from various Churches throughout the Valley Conference are eager for a woman's missionary conference, or some kind of rally, to be held annually for the promotion of the work. This will be a great thing for the women and young people there, and we want to work together toward this end.

PATTIE COGHILL.

FROM BRO. VEAZEY.

I have thought for some time that I would report my work of the summer, but have neglected till now. We began our revival at Forest Home the fifth Sunday in July. Rev. J. H. Hughes did most of the preaching. We had a good meeting, with three additions to the Church.

We held our Sunday School institute at New Harmony the first Sunday in August, which was a success in more than one way. I helped the pastor, Rev. C. W. Carter, in the revival the week following.

We began our revival at Christiana the third Sunday in August, and continued till Thursday at noon. The Church was greatly revived. Rev. A. C. Huckaby preached one time. I had to do the remainder of the preaching. We did not receive any members; however, the Church is in better working condition.

Last Sunday, September 2nd, Rev. J. H. Hughes and myself spent the day in Alexander city, where we have a number of members, but no organization. However, we think the opportunity is great if we could only place a man in the field. This is a manufacturing town and is growing rapidly.

We are very thankful for what the Lord has done for us. GUY H. VEAZEY.

FROM DR. J. W. WELLONS.

DR. BARRETT:

I want to say through THE CHRISTIAN SUN that I have spent the summer at the Masonic and Eastern Star Home, in Greensboro, N. C., as the chaplain of the home. I have enjoyed the summer very much with the dear brothers and sisters in this institution in trying to make myself as useful as I could to the dear old afflicted members of the home.

I wish to say that the officials of the home, and also the guests of the home, have made my stay here very pleasant indeed; and their care of me and their treatment toward me has been all that I could ask for.

I leave here the 4th of September for Elon College, to spend the session in connection with the college work and any other work I can do in my capacity. My address will be Elon College, N. C., where I will be glad to hear from any friends who may wish to correspond with me.

J. W. WELLONS.

Greensboro, N. C.

ANTIOCH.

We held our home-coming day at Antioch last third Sunday, and it was a success. Everybody present seemed to enjoy themselves fine. Rev. J. F. Barrett, D. D., was with us and did the preaching, and it was fine. Everybody loves to have Dr. Barrett to come home. Hope he will come often to see us.

Our revival meeting will commence at Antioch next third Sunday (September 16th). We desire the help of all who can come. We are praying for a good meeting, and we are looking forward for a gracious revival of the Church, and we hope many sons and daughters may be born into the kingdom of our Lord.

Rev. Elisha Bradshaw will be with us and do the preaching.

H. H. BUTLER, Pastor.

INTERPRETATION OF THE BIBLE—No. 3.

By Rev. Julius C. McCaslin, Pastor
Methodist Protestant Church, Anderson, Ind.

Right and Wrong Reasoning.

There are two systems of argument concerning the interpretation of the Bible. The natural man tries to reason with a carnal mind from man to God. The spiritual man accepts the Bible as the final, authentic, inspired revelation from God to man. He obeys the divine injunction to "earnestly contend for the faith once for all delivered to the saints." Consequently, the arguments with the infidels of this age who scoff at the Bible as the very Word of God.

There are two classes of conclusions relative to the interpretation of the Bible. The conclusions of the natural man and the conclusions of the spiritual man are sure to be quite different. Such was to be expected, considering the personality of the interpreters and their methods of interpretation.

The natural man concludes that the fundamentals of Christianity are only questionable matters of interpretation, speculation and difference of opinion. We find his conclusions clearly stated in another quotation from Dr. Pitzer: "The wise men of this world, filled with philosophy falsely so-called, ask, first, that we give up the miracles of the Old Testament; then the imprecatory psalms; then the "immoral parts" of the Scriptures; then, the "vindictive and bloody laws of Moses;" then Moses himself; then, all the prophets; then, the miracles of the New Testament; then, the Apocalypse; then, the doctrine of eternal retribution; then, the Holy Ghost; then, inspiration; then, Jesus Christ; then, God Himself—this is the modest demand of the unbelieving wisdom of our day and generation; this is substituting "knowledge of nature for faith in God; this is progress; this is advanced thought—and so the race is left, its 'grave without a resurrection,' its 'universe without a God.'" These are the apostate conclusions of the "modern mind."

The spiritual man concludes that the fundamentals of Christianity are so closely stated in the Bible, with the authority of Jehovah, that they are far beyond the province or power of finite wisdom, interpretation, speculation and opinion to change or destroy. As he interprets the Bible he is led by the Holy Spirit to the conclusion that the following are the fundamentals of Christianity: the trinity of the Godhead, composed of God the Father, God the Son, and God the Holy Ghost. The virgin birth and deity of Jesus Christ: that He is very God, by whom and for whom all things were created. The Bible is the Word of God, the supernatural revelation of Jehovah, verbally inspired by the Holy Ghost and infallible in authority. The substitutionary atonement of Jesus Christ who gave His life a ransom for many and died for our sins according to the Scriptures. The physical resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead according to the Scriptures and the resurrection of the bodies of the dead in Christ when He comes again. The personality and deity of the Holy Spirit who convicts of sin, moves to repentance, regenerates the heart, indwells the believer, imparts power for service and gives grace for a life of victory over Satan and sin. The absolute necessity of the new birth by the power of the Holy Ghost for all who enter the kingdom of God. The true Church is the body and bride of Jesus Christ, and is composed of regenerated, consecrated, spirit-filled people. The actual separation of believers in Christian fellowship from infidels and idolaters according to 2 Cor. 6:14-18. The second personal, visible, pre-millennial and imminent coming of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ to establish His kingdom on earth. The everlasting existence of the Spirit, the life everlasting of believers, and a heaven of celestial bliss for the children of God. The reality and personality of Satan, the reality and pollution of sin, and the conscious endless punishment of the impenitent. The depravity of the carnal nature, the filthiness of self-righteousness, salvation by the grace of God, cleansing from sin by the blood of Jesus Christ, not by works or a second chance after death, lest any man should boast. The maintenance of good works, consistent walk and conversation in view of the coming judgments and strict obedience to the great commission which our Lord has given to His Church to evangelize the whole world. These are the Spirit-taught conclusions of the spiritual man.

The results of the interpretation of the Bible and the conclusions of the natural man are appalling. Satan has his forces well organized. Modern infidels very shrewdly fight the fundamentalists instead of the fundamentals of Christianity. Through political pulls, these agnostic critics and carnal interpreters of the Bible have captured the official positions, educational institutions and literary productions of many of the larger denominations. Rank infidels occupy many of the most influential pulpits in America. From these strategic positions, they direct the revolt against Christ, creed and the Bible. While making strong pleas for regularity, loyalty and cooperation in denominational work, these higher critics are striving by tyrannical and political methods to force their views and interpretations of the Bible upon the whole Church. Men who stand true to God and the Bible are being forced out of the pulpits of many large Churches. Positions of influence are closed to men who believe in the fundamentals of Christianity. Consequently, Jesus Christ is the Rock upon which the true Church stands. He is also the Rock upon which the professed Church is split. Between the natural and spiritual interpreter of the Bible, a great gulf is fixed. No bridge of compromise between the interpretations of modern scholarship and the interpretations of the Holy Spirit can be built, nor is such a bridge desired. The Church is in the midst of a terrible crisis. The apostasy is incurable. The falling away from the faith has come to stay. God pity any man who wants to compromise with the devil and betray the Lord who bought him to those who scorn His blood with the foul kiss of popularity. Now is the time for all who interpret the Bible as the Word of God and believe in the fundamentals of Christianity to put on the whole armor of God, stand firmly together in the fellowship of Christ's sufferings and "earnestly contend for the faith once for all delivered to the saints." Let us faithfully and boldly interpret and expound the Word of God as directed and unctionized by the Holy Ghost. [The end.]

3,000 THE CHRISTIAN SUN. 9,000

There are between 8,000 and 10,000 families represented in the Southern Christian Convention, which means if a copy of The Christian Sun is placed in each family, a possible subscription list of 9,000 copies. There are now circulated approximately 3,000 copies, or about one-third of our Church families are reached. Hence, there should be added to the list 6,000 new subscribers in order to have the Church paper placed in every family.

Now, the great personal effort required to do this must be rewarded. To compensate this labor, if premiums are given, it will take 20 automobiles, or 40 radio machines, or 50 to 60 talking machines, or 90 to 100 typewriters, or 200 to 300 watches, etc. Don't you think you will have a good opportunity to secure one of these prizes?

But you need not confine your solicitations to your Church alone. You have friends in other denominations who will gladly assist you by giving a subscription. GRAY.

Whereas, the certain, though mysterious, hand of death has entered our midst and taken from our Church and Sunday School our beloved friend and co-worker, John D. Gray; and,

Whereas, his passing away, while yet in the prime of life and active service, seems mysterious and beyond our power to comprehend, yet we have faith in an all wise and benevolent Father, "who moves in mysterious ways His wonders to perform"; therefore, be it resolved:

First, That in the falling asleep of Deacon John D. Gray, this Church has lost one of its most loyal members, one who was ever faithful to its every call for service, regular in attendance, loyal in devotion and liberal in support of the institution which he loved.

Second, That our Sunday School has lost one of its most punctual teachers, one who was conscientious in his instruction, one who, by precept and example, infused into the minds and hearts of his class of splendid young men "the Fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man."

Third, That a copy of these resolutions be spread upon the records of this Church, a copy upon the minutes of our Sunday School, that a copy be sent to the bereaved family, to whom we extend our most heartfelt sympathy, and that a copy be published in The Christian Sun.

HART.

Mrs. Havana Atwood Hart was born March 9, 1891, and died August 14, 1923, at her home in Hoke County, N. C., her age being 62 years 5 months and 5 days. She was a member of a family of six children, only two of whom survive her—a brother and sister.

She was married to J. H. Hart October 3, 1889. To this matrimony were born six children, three of whom preceded her to the spirit land.

Sister Hart professed faith in Christ early in life, and united with Mt. Pleasant Church in 1888, shortly after it was organized. There are surviving her a husband, three children, seven grandchildren, a brother and sister, a number of relatives and a host of friends.

She loved her Church, was highly esteemed by her friends and neighbors, and a real mother in the home. She will be missed. She had been in declining health for about ten years. Her body was laid to rest in her Church Cemetery. A memorial of her life was conducted by the writer, her pastor, September 2, 1923.

May the Lord comfort the bereaved.

L. L. WYRICK.

WRIGHT.

Mrs. Sarah Lucinda Wright was born October 7, 1856, and died June 12, 1923, at her home in Hoke County, N. C., her age being 67 years 8 months and 5 days. She was a member of a family of six children, a brother and two sisters living. She was married April 27, 1882, to James T. Wright, who died some several years ago. To this union were born ten children, seven living and three dead.

Sister Wright professed faith in Christ early in life. She was among some of the first persons to join Mt. Pleasant Christian Church in its beginnings, where she remained loyal and faithful until the end came.

She was highly esteemed in her neighborhood. Her home was open to ministers of hers and other Churches. She was very patient during her illness. She was buried in the family cemetery. Peace be to her soul.

L. L. WYRICK.

PERKINSON.

On the 19th day of August, Bro. Vines Ruffin Perkinson departed this life in answer to the call of Him who knows and doeth all things well. He was a devout member of Youngsville Christian Church, having joined that Church forty-five years ago.

A widow and five children mourn his loss, but may they be comforted by the thought that their loss is heaven's gain.

Funeral services were conducted by Rev. T. S. Coble, pastor of Youngsville Methodist Church, with interment at the family burial ground, near Youngsville.

Another Wonder in Palestine.—

The Palestine Weekly says that the giant grapevines, with their enormous yield, of which we read in the Bible, have their modern counterpart, for such vines even now exist, having branches thirty-five to fifty feet in length, with clusters of grapes weighing twenty to thirty pounds, growing two or three on the same branch. According to that, the old pictures in the Sunday School books of the spies returning after their survey of Canaan, with huge bunches of grapes, each suspended from a pole carried on the shoulders of two men, were not far wrong. Verily, it is a goodly land that the Lord gave to His people!

Decreased Production; Increased Cost.—

The July crop report of the Department of Agriculture forecasts this year's corn crop at 2,877,000,000 bushels, or 14,000,000 bushels less than last year's crop, and this season's potato production at 382,000,000 bushels, as compared with last year's record production of 451,185,000 bushels. On the other hand, reports to the Department of Labor from all sections of the country show that the retail cost of food is steadily increasing. Prices for June were higher than for May, as well as from 1 to 7 per cent higher than for the same month last year. These two reports, studied together, constitute a clear case of cause and effect. Decreased production very naturally results in increased cost of foodstuffs. There are doubtless other contributing causes, but we can hardly expect food prices to decline very materially when production continues to decrease.

"Sow the fields, and plant vineyards, which may yield fruits of increase."—Psalm 107:37.—Methodist Protestant.

Pensioning Old Ministers.—

According to the statement of Dr. Hingely, the chairman of the Interdenominational Secretaries' Conference, in charge of the Church pension fund, the following endowments and subscriptions for endowments have been provided by the denominations mentioned for the support of ministers who can no longer preach:

Northern Baptist, $9,000,000; Southern Baptist, $975,000; Congregational, $5,750,000; Disciples, $175,000; Lutheran, Augustana, $337,000; Lutheran, Missouri Synod, $2,500,000; Lutheran, Norwegian, $500,000; Lutheran, United, $150,000; Methodist, Canadian, $2,500,000; Methodist Episcopal Church, $17,500,000; Methodist Episcopal Church, South, $2,000,000; Presbyterian Church, Northern, $8,105,000; Presbyterian Church, Southern, $1,400,000; Presbyterian, United, $327,000; Protestant Episcopal, $13,520,000; Reformed Church in the United States, $191,000; Reformed Church in America (Dutch), $395,000; United Brethren, $100,000—making a total of $65,423,000.

Watering the Desert of Sahara.—

The suggestion has been made by prominent engineers that large tracts of the Sahara Desert may be made fertile by artesian borings similar to those employed in the arid parts of Australia. Pointing out that the sinking of such wells had made Australia one of the greatest pasture countries in the world, Goston Imbeaux, chief engineer of the public works department of the French government, says that similar methods would cause a number of fertile oases to spring up in the Sahara, providing pasture for sheep. He also stated that large reserves of water undoubtedly exist under the great sand wastes of Africa, and that if the French authorities would undertake to sink shafts to these subterranean wells, the future success of the projected trans-Sahara railroad would be assured, as the line would be furnished with the necessary water at regular intervals. Scientific methods of irrigation have transformed other arid regions into fertile gardens, yielding abundant returns of grain or fruit, and there is no reason to doubt the possibility of accomplishing the same thing in the great desert of Sahara. At least it is worth the effort.

"In the wilderness shall water break out, and streams in the desert."—Isa. 35:6.—Exchange.

How Shall We Settle It?—

Dr. Malcolm J. MacLeod, pastor of the Church of St. Nicholas, spoke out recently on a subject which is nearer the hearts of clergymen much more often than it is discussed in the pulpit—the underpaid preacher. In the United States the preacher receives smaller reward for his services than the members of any other profession; smaller in many casaes than the wages of common laborers in his parish, and never commensurate, even in the richest communities, with the position he holds.

The reasons for this situation are various and disputable. It may be, as Dr. MacLeod hints, that the Church members want their pastor to hold a somewhat subordinate and parasitic place in the social realm. The more secure a man's financial standing, the more independent he is likely to be in his criticism of contemporary customs and morals. Or it may be that the Churches pay little because preachers aren't worth so much as others on the market.

Whatever the cause, the effects are patent. Because of his small salary, the minister has a constant fight on his hands to maintain appearances and at the same time keep clear of debt, to educate his family and buy needed books without mortgaging himself for more than he will ever be able to meet.

"How can any mortal interpret the laws of civic betterment," Dr. MacLeod asks, "not to speak of the laws of the kingdom of God, if he cannot favorably look his fellow-man in the face? How can a woman be a leader in the missionary society if her husband owes the butcher and the baker, [boilerplate: College Library] down in front listening to her?" Here is a reform which can begin only within the Church.—N. Y. World.

What America has Done for Europe.—

Figures speak louder than words in the matter of the so-called American isolation. It might be thought, from what is sometimes said, that, since the war, America has been standing off selfishly, and, with its great gold reserve and other prosperity, has been watching, more or less indifferently, torn and distracted Europe.

We still hear the inquiry, Why does she not do something? Just as if, because she has not done certain particular things very much in the public mind, she had not done anything. This is not to say that her attitude has been, in every respect, impeccable. The most philanthropical are not beyond criticism, but, so far as giving actual relief is concerned, which, after all, is the practical test of unselfishness and sympathy, the record of America in the more than four years since the armistice, does not savor of "isolation" at all.

The cold facts are, as given by the New York Herald in great detail, that America has given to Europe, since November 11, 1918, eleven billions of dollars, half of it by the administration, raised by taxation, the other half by free-will contributions. In other words, there has been a per capita gift from every man, woman and child of $100.00.

This amount is entirely distinct from the cost of the war, which was seven billions in loans and fifty billions for our own effort.

These eleven billions, given since the war for relief and for the support of tottering governments, are summarized as follows:

Government credits since armistice	$ 2,500,000,000
Interest remitted since armistice	4,000,000,000
Spent by government and private agencies in relief work	2,250,000,000
Private loans to Europe	1,000,000,000
Spent by American travelers in Europe	1,250,000,000
Total	$11,000,000,000

After the reduction of the national debt, which now stands at $22,000,000,000, if we had used as further reduction the amount above, given to Europe, our debt would now be $11,000,000,000; and if from this amount were subtracted our loans to Europe, some part of which will never be repaid, our present bonded debt would be little more than $2,000,000,000.

There never has been the equal of such philanthrophy in the history of the world.—Presbyterian Banner.

NOTES-PERSONALS

Winter days are not far away. Now is a good time to get ready for the cold winds of winter—and that is true of the soul as it is of the body.

Elon College is a busy place. The workmen are driving ahead on the four buildings already under construction, and then the busy young men and young women, almost 300 strong, are very busy getting on the study harness for much and real work. It looks good for Elon.

Jesus said, when on earth: "I am the Vine, ye are the branches." He did not say that He was a part of the vine, but He was all of it. So we might say that the root is the vine, the stem is the vine, and the branches are the vines—He is all the vine, and we are the branches. He gives us the life, and then we are to bear the fruit for Him. It is not ours to try to take the place of the vine. We are rather to give ourselves to the work of the branches—we are to bear the fruit.

We keep talking missions, and that is right; but where are the fruits of our talk? Where there is so much talk, there ought to be some fruit—we ought to be doing more real missionary work; we ought to be reaching new fields and building up new Churches—but we cannot do all this by simple talk. Let us get down to real effort and see if something cannot be done to make the acquisition of new territory possible. It is high time we were acting.

A talented young minister recently, in a letter to the editor of this paper, said: "God is so good to me. With my parents, He gave me a home, poor in this world's goods, but rich in true religion. With Mr. and Mrs. ———, I have a home of culture and comfort, and also true Christianity. Both of these homes are family-altar homes, and what one began for me, the other is completing. I have written at length to you as a father and good friend. I have never seen you much, but I have always loved you for your loyalty to Christ."

We understand that Rev. W. D. Harward, D. D., has tendered his resignation as pastor of the Elm Street Church in Portsmouth, Va. We regret that Dr. Harward feels it necessary to retire from that field, but this will make another chance for some of our many needy fields to secure another pastor, for Dr. Harward is a strong preacher and a man of flawless character. He may be addressed at 1508 Elm Avenue, Portsmouth, Va. His retirement from this field will call for another man to occupy the place he now holds. We are anxious to have the Elm Street well cared for in its work.

Bro. L. E. Newsome, Lucama, N. C., only a short distance from Wilson, is expecting soon to see an independent Church organized near Lucama, and while it will be independent and interdenominational, it will embrace many of the features which are prominent in the Christian Church. We wish these dear people may abundantly do God's will and that the cause of Christ may greatly prosper. Bro. Newsome and his wife visited our Chautauqua in August and made many friends among our people. He is a layman, but a most useful man in the Lord's work. We wish him and his associates great blessing in doing the work before them.

The Greensboro Daily News tells how a Carolina College has met disaster face to face. It says: "Disaster in Carolina proves a blessing more often than a handicap. The harder Carolina institutions are hit, the higher they bounce. If a good, going industry is burned out, it comes back with a bigger and better plant. Elon College, one of the State's best schools, had a fire in January. Five buildings are nearing completion. The aggregate cost is $300,000. The case is typical of the 'made in Carolina' spirit. Carolinians interested in any activity rally around when it is threatened. The college has opened, and soon will occupy all the new buildings, completely."

Rev. J. O. Atkinson, D. D., is pushing his work for the Men and Millions call. Our brethren are beginning to get back into shape, so they can begin to make payments on their pledges. We urge them to do all they can in this line of work, for the enterprises of the Christian Church are needing all the help we can give them. As an encouragement to our readers, we wish to let them know something of what their sacrifices for this fund has meant. The money paid in so far has given much real support to some of our enterprises which it really looks like they could not have lived but for the help which has come to them from Men and Millions. It has been a most timely contribution to our cause.

The recent earthquake disaster in Japan grows more appalling, if that be possible, than it was at first. We are sending to THE SUN today for publication a sort of interview with Dr. Jno. R. Mott as to the true character and damage done in Japan by the earthquake. It is very interesting, and we hope that our readers may find it both interesting and instructive. Rev. W. P. Minton, according to the Herald of Gospel Liberty, thinks that, while our missionaries in Japan are safe, that our property has been destroyed or badly damaged. We hope later news may be yet even more favorable. We rejoice that none of our missionaries were called upon to lose their lives in the great disaster. They will, undoubtedly, need financial relief as early as possible. Let us not leave them helpless in this time of sore need.

I have read several articles along the lines of better laws for the preservation of the institution of marriage, and I find myself asking myself: "Why does not the Christian Church become interested and get busy on the job of trying to have better laws?" Especially does it seem strange that such a course lacks a following, since our women have the same privilege as do the men in this matter? No two standards of moral laws for me, if you please—one for men and one for women! Sometimes editorials bear repeating. You know, we have to have line upon line and precept upon precept, here a little and there a little, till we reach a high standard that shall be for both the men and the women. Why should men have laws for them which are less exacting than the laws for women? I mean laws for the control and direction in the same matters of human conduct.—Mrs. Jason I. Joyner, Sedley, Va. We give unqualified endorsement to the thought of this sister; we do not need any two sets of laws—one for the women and one for the men. No, we need one standard for both men and women.

RICHMOND CHURCH TO OPEN SEPT. 30TH.

The First Christian Church, of Richmond, Va., will have its formal opening September 30th. The Richmond work has been under the auspices of the Mission Board of the Southern Christian Convention and has been made a special by the Woman's Home and Foreign Mission Board of the Southern Christian Convention. A number of prominent speakers are to take part in the services. In addition to those from our own Church, there will be those from other denominations in Richmond. A large crowd is expected to attend the opening exercises. Numbers from different sections of North Carolina and Virginia are planning to come, and the two mission boards named above are to be largely represented, and many Richmonders outside of our Church have expressed their intention of being present.

The First Christian Church building is one of the most beautiful in the city, and represents a value of approximately $100,000.

A cordial invitation is extended the members and friends of the Christian Church to attend the opening services.

THE OPENING OF THE FIRST SESSION OF BETHLEHEM COLLEGE.

The opening of Bethlehem College, Wadley, Ala., was to take place yesterday, according to schedule. We have no particulars of the opening thus far, but we hope to have good news from that source by the time our next issue goes to press. We regard the undertaking of Bethlehem College by our brethren in Georgia and Alabama as a big forward step for the Christian Church in that part of our territory. We wish it the highest possible success, and shall await reports of its progress with real interest. Every lover of the Christian Church ought to be interested in the success of this institution, for its success will not only mean good to the cause in Georgia and Alabama, but it will add to the vigor of the whole body. Let us do our best for it.

AN AWFUL EARTHQUAKE IN JAPAN.

On Saturday, September 1, 1923, Japan was visited by one of the severest earthquakes in the history of the world, so far as we are informed. It is supposed that as many as 250,000 people lost their lives, and damage to property was immense. So far, we do not know that any of our missionaries or any of our mission properties were destroyed. We are hoping that all escaped, but we may as well prepare for alarming news very soon. It is not probable, though possible, that in such destruction we escaped entirely unhurt. We hope soon to have news from our missionaries.

VIRGINIA CHRISTIAN CONFERENCE.

The annual business meetings of our Churches will soon be held, and at them the delegates to the annual Conference will be elected. It will greatly help the entertainment committee of the Holland Church if you will send us, as soon as you can, the names of all delegates desiring entertainment overnight. Be sure, too, to send with the names any other information necessary for our guidance in the allotment of homes.

THE BELIEVER'S MOST PROFITABLE SERVICE.

"Epapras, who is one of you, a servant of Christ, saluteth you, always laboring fervently for you in prayers, that ye may stand perfect and complete in all the will of God."—Col. 4:12.

Who is Epaphras? First of all, he was a servant of Christ. He had been a preacher of righteousness, and he was on the occasion of the text, only at that time he had quit public preaching, not that he might go at something else to make more money, but he had quit temporarily, because he was a prisoner and was not allowed to go on the highways to preach the Gospel—a prisoner for preaching the truth. But his ministry, as a believer, did not cease because he was in prison. If possible, he is now more than ever in active service—he is engaged in the ministry of intercession, praying. Our text says that he was laboring fervently for his brethren in prayers, that they might stand perfect and complete in all the will of God.

Do you wish to know who Epaphras was, and what he was doing for the people of God?

Epaphras was a member of the Church at Colosse, and he was also a servant of Christ, a minister of the Gospel, though without a pastorate at this time. As such, he was laboring fervently in prayer that the Church at Colosse might stand perfect and complete in all the will of God. Why was he praying for the Church at Colosse? It was that the Colossian Christians might stand perfect and complete in all the will of God. It was not prayer for a special friend, but for the Church, the whole Church. And what did he so much wish for the Church at Colosse? He desired to see the whole Church come to be clear and definite in Christian experience. If there is any one thing that constitutes the pressing need of the Church of Christ today, it is a definite and living experience in the Christian life. How many seem to be Church members, but give out little or no real and vital experience! If the present membership of the Churches had a definite Christian experience, the present Church could win the world to Christ, perhaps in a single generation. Did you ever think about the saving of the world for Christ? Did you ever think that if the Christians now living do not bring the world to Christ for salvation in this generation, they never will? When the people now living are dead, they can do nothing further in winning the world to Christ, and therefore what they do not do while living they will not do at all.

The labor of Epaphras was for the good of the whole Church. He was definitely praying, not merely that they might become Christians, but that they might become mature Christians. Mature Christians is the need of the Church today, for mature Christians are the only ones who can win the world to Christ, not merely in name, but in fact as well. Then he was praying that the Church at Colosse might live in peace and grow in grace. If there is one thing to be definitely avoided in the Church it is a Church fuss. If Christians do not reach a maturity which will enable them to live in peace and to grow in grace, then they are far off from a real and living Christian experience. But this is not all that Epaphras was praying for. He was also praying that these Colossian Christians might become fruitful in life and service. What a marvelous scene would the Church present if its entire membership could be brought to great fruitfulness. It would astonish the world to see such a sight. But Epaphras is not through with his praying, for I think he took in one other point, and that was that the Church at Colosse might be kept in the midst of all trials, temptations, afflictions and persecutions which might come to them—that they might be kept in the truth. This is the need of tens of thousands of today. Perhaps there was never a day when the truth was so thoroughly and continuously assailed as in this early part of the twentieth century. Nothing can take the place of the truth. The great truths of God are His diamonds, and He wears them continuously. He gives these truths to us and He wishes us to wear them in the life and service. The truth of the divine life is the one essential in the life of the people of God.

Truth is the very basis and essence of Christian experience, for without the truth you cannot become fruitful. Now, Epaphras was praying for the whole Church; he desired to see them all become fruit-bearers in Christ. To this end, he was very fully with them. Being a true yokefellow, he gave his brethren and sisters, first, his fullest sympathy. He gave them his love, and then with it all he gave them real love for God and His people, and being truly in love one with and for one another, they found it a delightful thing to co-operate in the work of the Lord. Paul tells us elsewhere that the people of God were knit together in love, and being knit together in love, they could pull together and pull mightily for the spread of the Gospel and for the strengthening of the Church of Christ on earth. A certain man had two horses. They had long been worked together. One day, as he drove up to his farm, he saw the hired man seeminly engaged in burying something. As the owner drew nigh he saw that one of the horses was dead. While they were burying the dead animal, his mate, the other horse, came and stood by the grave, looking in on the dead body of his mate, and the owner said: "I believe Dick loved Billy." Then said the man who had handled the pair of horses for years: "Of course, Dick loved Billy, for they had pulled together for twenty years." Oh! if Christians could only pull together, how they would learn to love one another and what great things they would accomplish in the Master's vineyard. Let us seek to be knit together in love in God's service.

Epaphras was not much known in the early Church, except about Colosse. He is mentioned only a very few times in the New Testament. He was a local man in a way, but the little said of him shows the high estimate in which he was held in the Church. He was a minister, but he was also one of them—one of the Colossian Church members, but he was a man of prayer, a servant of Christ and always laboring fervently for his people in prayers, and the one thing which burdened his thought was that the members of the Colosse Church might be able to stand and be perfect and complete in all the will of God. Suppose we had a whole membership of any given Church who were such people as Epaphras was, and the world could not resist such lives. Even one Epaphras in every Church would revolutionize the work of Christianity and show forth the glory of the Lord in a marvelous manner. Would you like to be an Epaphras, dear reader? Then study his character and obey the voice of God. Real prayer is the most profitable work of the believer. Do not neglect it.

BRO. McCLENNY IS NOT MISTAKEN.

DEAR EDITOR:

In reply to the article of Bro. Jason I. Joyner in THE SUN of August 23rd, I wish to reply to mistake No. 2, and say that Bro. McClenny was right in saying that Rev. M. B. Barrett was the first pastor of Mt. Carmel Christian Church of the Eastern Virginia Conference.

I am giving below a copy of the first two meetings of the Church as recorded in the Church book, which I think will explain that Bro. McClenny was right:

"Conference proceedings of Mt. Carmel Church, August 26, 1871.—Conference met, with Rev. W. B. Wellons in the chair. After some preliminary remarks by the chairman, twenty-six persons who were members of others churches united themselves together and formed a Church at this place; then after short religious exercises, conference proceeded to business. On motion, Irvin W. Duck and Geo. M. D. Watkins were chosen deacons. On motion, Thomas M. Murray was elected secretary, also treasurer and collector. On motion, Mills Britt was elected sexton. On motion, Conference adjourned. W. B. Wellons, chairman; Jessie T. Whitley, acting secretary."

Second meeting:

"Mt. Carmel Church, October 14, 1871.—Conference met; Deacon I. W. Duck in the chair. After a few remarks by the chairman, Conference proceeded to the election of a pastor for the term of one year; the vote was taken, and after being counted, Rev. M. B. Barrett was declared elected. On motion, Bro. I. W. Duck was appointed a committee to wait on Bro. Barrett and inform him of his election. On motion, B. T. Carr and Virgil E. White were appointed with the deacons as a standing committee. On motion, Bros. I. W. Duck and T. M. Murray were elected delegates to the next session of the Eastern Virginia Conference to ask admission to membership in that body, with B. T. Carr and Matthew Carr as alternates.

On motion, J. E. McLane, I. W. Duck, C. W. Bailey, Odum Bradshaw and Virgil E. White were appointed a committee of asasessment.

On motion, the Church decided to hold its quarterly meetings, embracing the first Sabbath in December, March, June and September. On motion, Conference adjourned. T. M. Murray, secretary; I. W. Duck, chairman."

The records show that at the next regular Conference, which was on December 2, 1871, Rev. M. B. Barrett was present and chairman of the meeting.

I think that from the minutes of these two meetings that I was right in saying that Bro. Barrett was the first pastor of Mt. Carmel Christian Church. I will state that I cannot find any record of the Sunday School that was carried on at this place before the Church was organized, but I found out from the older people of our Church today, who were members of Sunday School at that time, that the Rev. Thomas W. Joyner did make some address at the Sunday School before the Church was organized, but there is no record of Bro. Joyner ever being there after the Church was organized.

OTIS V. JOYNER.

Walters, Va.

[After all, it may be that both of our brethren, Jason I. Joyner and Otis V. Joyner are right. The editor of this paper well remembers the Sunday School organized and conducted by Maj. I. W. Duck. It was held at Paradise Grove, if I remember correctly. At least, it was held on the public road from Windsor, Va., to Blackwater Bridge. This was before the Mt. Carmel Church was organized, and it is most likely that what Bro. Jason I. Joyner says took place before the organization of the Church and while the Sunday School was at Paradise Grove. If this be correct, as we thing it is, then both of these brethren may be right, or nearly so.—EDITOR.]

LET US HAVE THE FACTS IN THE CASE.

We live in an age of contention, and it seems very difficult to get along without misunderstandings. We are persuaded that this is the work of the enemy of souls. If God's people should be able to see the truth in its right light, and so be able to stand together for these great truths, the wicked one would soon feel that he was about to be out of a job; but as long as we can be kept misunderstanding one another, just so long will the enemy be found fully enlisted in the undertaking of new schemes for the destruction of the Lord's work, or at least for the confusion of the workers. It is time we should make an honest effort to put an end to this sort of work, and for the reason that it hinders us and makes us seem to be all at sea as to what we are doing.

We have in mind the contention so often in evidence among us—between one side of the brotherhood and the other. Take as an example the contention as to whether the world is getting better or worse from a moral and spiritual standpoint, and that is the cause of much discussion and of many divisions among brethren. That just suits the devil, but it plays a sad havoc with the work of the Lord among men. There is no need for such a mixture of ideas, if we might all get our wits together and see the truth just as the facts will reveal the truth under the blessings of the Holy Spirit—the great illuminator of the people of God. If one brother thinks the world is getting better, we call him an optimist; if another thinks the world getting worse, we call him a pessimist. And what is meant by an optimist? The optimist is one who sees things as they ought to be, and the pessimist is one who sees things as they are, and so thinks that all is going to the bad. But does he really so think? We doubt it. Now, we are persuaded that both of these brethren can do better than act this way toward one another and toward the cause we love. Let us see what are the facts in the case.

We think the whole trouble arises in the fact that we do not get a true view of the situation as a whole. We do not mean the whole of any one country, but we mean we do not get a true view of the whole of the history of the Church of Christ from the beginning of that Church till the present. We get a partial view, and that divides us. Let us take in the full view, as far as we may, from the day of Pentecost till today, and let us see who is right when we get such a view of the whole Church. We need not stop at Pentecost. It were better to go back to the beginning of the history of the people of God, and, as far as possible, get a full view of the situation from the time of Adam till the present time.

The optimist declares that the world is getting better.

The pessimist affirms that it is getting worse and worse.

Now, what is the safe thing, to believe in the presence of two such decidedly opposing views? Can it be possible that the optimist is blind to facts? That seems unreasonable. But is it any less possible that the pessimist is also blind to the facts in the case? Now, for an impartial facing of these facts with the one purpose to make the situation plain.

The trouble with the optimist and the pessimist may be found in the fact that both men are taking a very limited view of the facts involved. But is it possible that two men of such opposing views can be led into opposite errors by the same mistake. That, we confess, seems a bit unreasonable; but that it is true, we believe, can be shown beyond question.

The optimist views that section of the world in which his own life moves and he sees, as, he thinks, a fact, and that fact is the world is getting better; but his view is limited to the small space in time in which he lives, and his observation is narrowed down to the horizon of his own vision. The pessimist is surrounded by the same limitations, and he is said to declare that the devil has got the world in his own hands. The optimist ridicules the pessimist by declaring that his view would give the devil charge of the earth, so ruling God out. And the pessimist declares that the optimist is shutting his eyes to the facts. Can this complex situation be explained justly and truthfully? A broader view of the situation will explain the difficulty, we believe, and at the same time set both sides measurably right.

Now, keep in mind that these two men are judging their viewpoints by the little world in which they move and by what they have seen. This is a mistaken policy, and will inevitably lead both astray. That the drift of humanity, whether up or down, goes in periods, we think, is true. From the beginning till now there have been undulating waves in human society. Yesterday things were better. Today things are not so hopeful. Any opinion formed upon these two facts will be speedily confusing unless we take into consideration the fact that the drift in human affairs has been that way from the beginning. It is, therefore, not a question of what was the moral and spiritual condition of the world yesterday or of what it may be today. When you affirmed that the world was getting better yesterday that made an affirmation of only one little speck in human society and that is limited to only one little life, but that cannot be a standard by which to judge the whole world. It is a mistake to decide that the world is getting better or worse by what is taking place in one lifetime. That we had the worst war in the world's history is an awful fact, but that does not prove that the world is gradually growing worse. On the other hand, the fact that the United States had a time of great prosperity and marvelous development from the close of the Civil War in 1865 till the breaking out of the World War in 1914, is not evidence that everything is getting better. It so happened that in one little spot on the earth's surface here were many evidences of great progress, but that is far from evidence that the world, as a world, was getting better in all that time. Then, the opposite is just as true. The fact that from 1914 to 1919 we had one of the most terrible wars in all history, proves only what was taking place at that time, but those five years were only a spot on the face of time.

Another fact must be taken into consideration, viz: this up-and-down tendency has been going on from the days of Adam till this day. From Adam till the flood there was great prosperity. From the beginning of the flood through its entire course there was a backward tendency. During the times of the oppression of the Israelites, including the forty years' wandering in the wilderness, there was a time of depression, and there was seemingly no hope for any great things to come to pass. In the reign of Solomon as King of Israel, there was a time of great prosperity, but this was succeeded by the conflicts of human passion in the day of Jeremiah, and that has been the course of human progress all through the ages. So to say that the world is getting better or worse, basing the assumption on what has taken place in any one age, or in any one part of the world, is a great mistake. In one period, the optimist seems to have the best of it, but in the succeeding age the pessimist has the best of the argument; so it is more than folly to have a contention over these questions so long as the undulating waves of human progress continue as they have been from the beginning to this day—up and down!

Taking this view, no man can tell whether the world is getting better or worse. Only God can do that, and instead of wasting time and strength over such questions, it were far better to bend ourselves to the task of discharging our duties and wait till the end of the world, and then God will announce the facts in the case and His judgment will be correct; but poor, puny man cannot settle it, never can, and for the reason that his vision is so limited that he cannot judge of the world as a whole. It may be that in your county or in your State things are getting worse morally and spiritually, but that is as a drop in the bucket as compared to the world. We believe that there has been a drift in the affairs of our United States and some other parts of the world since the year 1914, but that is not the world, nor is it all of time. At best, it is but a small space of time, and what we see may be speedily overbalanced by what is taking place in some other parts of the world. So what one man can see will by no means settle the question as to whether the world is getting better or worse—we cannot decide this momentous question. God will do that at the right time and in the right way. We shall do well if we may leave this question to the Father of us all to decide it, for we cannot do it. We may settle the question so far as our limited vision may be able to grasp it, but that will in no way settle the matter for the world.

According to the Bible, in the last times there will come an apostacy from the Christian faith—there will be a falling away, but that of itself cannot settle the main question. It can and will settle the matter for that particular period, but not for all time and for all the world. The average optimist does not seemingly take into consideration these facts, and so he says the world is getting better. The average pessimist does the same thing, and he declares that the world is getting worse and worse. That may be true for the little world he lives, but he cannot affirm it is true of the great world God has made and put his people into. When the apostacay, just mentioned, sets in, then we shall have a time of terror, and when it ends, it will end with the glorious cause of Jesus in the ascendancy.

The average pessimist is classed as a man who believes that the Christian world is doomed and going to wreck as fast as it can for the time. Even he does not mean it is going to end in a loss to the Lord. Oh, no, for he believes in the final triumph of the cause of truth and righteousness; not in its present triumph, but in its final triumph over sin and Satan. The final triumph is yet to come, and it must come!

A DETERMINED BATTLE HAS BEEN WON.

For twenty or more years we have been trying to get our people to awake to the dangers which confront our faith as God's people. But for twenty years or more we have stood with but little encouragement in this direction. It is but natural, therefore, when we see eyes opening, as to this matter, that we should be glad and take courage for the future. The danger has not been a denominational matter, and yet practically all denominations are involved in the present situation.

In July of this year our Baptist brethren held a great meeting in Stockholm, Sweeden, and in that meeting came a test of the same matter. It was a spectacular effort for ascendancy of one side or the other. It was in some important respects the greatest battle that the world has seen over a fundamental view of Christianity, and it was a conflict between members of the same denomination—the Baptist World Brotherhood. The conflict was sharp, and somewhat protracted. It came in the election of the president of the Baptist World Alliance, resulting in electing a conservative from the southern part of the United States—Dr. E. Y. Mullins, president of the Southern Baptist Theological Seminary at Louisville, Ky.

Referring to this matter, Rev. Livingston Johnson, editor of the Biblical Recorder, who was present as a delegate from North Carolina in the Stockholm meeting, has this to say:

"We would just as well recognize the fact that the war is on between the conservatives and the liberals, and at Stockholm the conservatives won a signal victory. This is written in no spirit of boastfulness, but of profound gratitude. Instead of exultation, all lovers of the truth should rejoice and be filled with gratitude that the Baptists of the world have put themselves on record as believing in the great doctrines of grace as set forth in the report of the commission on statement prepared and sent out to the world, and it is cause for gratitude to God that in the election of Dr. Mullins, the most outstanding defender of the faith has been put at the head of the world conference of Baptists. Let us thank God and take courage."

It has taken a long time to bring out such a statement as that, although brethren in most of the denominations have been pushing such a confession far away from them, and perhaps wisely, for they are more than reluctant to admit that such an element is at work among them, seeking to pull down the influence of the Christian faith. It may be, though we confess we do not think so, that we have been unwise in persistently warning our people against the dangers arising among us from such a propaganda as that of evolution, new theology, materialism, etc. But at last a man serving a much larger people comes out and admits that the issue is squarely before us, and now the fight is on. It will not do to object to controversy now, as the very vitals of the Christian teaching are assailed, and with such vigor and persistency as to indicate there will be no let up till one side or the other is driven from the field. It is largely with the people of God to say who shall be driven from the battleground. It must be the one side or the other—the conservative or the liberalist.

If we stand still and allow the liberalites to drive the conservative and the truth he stands for from the field, then a dark day will seem to impend. If we bestir ourselves and do our part, trusting God to lead the way for us, then the liberalist will be driven from the field, and at once the Christian skies will clear and a glorious day will dawn in which the truth of God will go marching on to the ends of the earth. Bro. Johnson admits that war is on between the liberalist and the conservative among our Baptist brethren. He also declares that in their first great world-wide battle the conservatives won the victory. This is cheering, but we must not take it as assurance that we shall win in every battle that may come on this line, for we are dealing with men of real ability and with a determined purpose—they mean to drive conservative truth from the field and so give liberalism, or modernism, the right of way to the hearts and minds of the people. Let us remember that all the ability is not with them. We have more men who will stand for conservative truth than will likely stand with them, and then what is of far more importance, the Lord our God has not as yet forsaken His truth or left it to go down beneath the unhallowed feet of men and women who seemingly have no regard for the truth which has not changed from the beginning till now.

It was only a few weeks ago that Bishop Cannon, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, virtually admitted as much for the situation in the Methodist Church as Bro. Johnson has done for the Baptist. The Presbyterian Church is in the hottest part of the battle-line for the preservation of the fundamental truths of Christianity. Now here are three of the leading denominations of this country who recognize the fact that the battle is on between the liberalist and the conservative. They not only admit it, but they have gone into the battle in earnest and are doing valiant service for truth and righteousness. Will our own beloved brethren, who have been in doubt as to the wisdom of such a struggle for several years, now that the leading denominations of the common country admit the need for such a course, and have themselves plunged into the battle to save the Holy Bible from the despoiling of unholy hands, will you not now, brethren, lend a helping hand in the great effort which practically all Christendom is now laboring together to stay this black tide of unbelief? The day is rapidly coming when the line of demarcation will be sharply drawn between these two elements in the membership of the Churches, and every leading man will find it necessary to show his colors and take his stand with the liberalist or with the conservative as to the issues at stake. It is even possible that the day will come when the different denominations will, by this very issue, under the blessings of God, be driven into one fold, divided only by the line which separates the liberalist and the conservative. We have been intimating such a course for more than ten years, and today the facts seem to point that way.

ARE WE RELEGATING THE CHURCH TO THE BACKGROUND?

The world seems to be in a crisis, and at present no way out seems to be in sight. The truth is, there is a tendency to try everything except the one thing which can and will bring good results, if it can ever get a chance to be tried. It is true we have a chance now, but there is, so far as we can judge, but little disposition to try it in earnest.

The Rev. Frederick Lynch, D. D., editor of The Christian Work, has a few words along this line which are well worth our consideration. It looks as if Dr. Lynch is himself beginning to see light from another standpoint. We hope others may get to see as he does, and that we may speedily begin to look at the situation from a more practical standpoint. Dr. Lynch says:

"Perhaps the note which will be most missed by Christian people throughout the country is that of religion. Few of our baccalaureate sermons have much to say upon the distinctively religious life. Is it an indication that the trend in our Protestant Churches today is to consider service and devotion to high ideals as the sum and substance of religion? I have been reading two or three of the baccalaureate sermons preached in the Roman Catholic colleges, and the contrast is very striking. The Catholic sermons lay great stress on the inability to live a life of consecration to humanity and service to the world unless it is fed from contact with God and the divine sources of power. This note is almost absolutely lacking from the baccalaureate sermons in our Protestant institutions. Also, I note that there is hardly any reference to the Church in these various sermons I have been reading. Many lines of service are pointed out, but service through the Church is hardly mentioned. Is this an indication that our Protestantism is relegating the Church to the background and holding up all other channels of service as offering greater opportunity to the youth of today? I have just been reading the votes of one of the senior classes in one of our large American colleges. The answers to the questionnaire sent out to the members of the class are exceedingly interesting. If I thought that these answers to these senior questionnaires amounted to very much, I should be very much discouraged, but even a college senior is still considerable of a boy and his answers should not be taken too seriously; but in this particular questionnaire it is noticeable how few of the seniors have very much room in their lives for the Church, and have a great deal of room for other things. Sixty-two per cent of them have room for drinking; seventy-two per cent have room for smoking; over fifty per cent have room for gambling—but very few seem to care very much for the Church, and some ninety per cent expressed doubt as to various religious beliefs. I cannot help wondering whether our Protestant colleges are not—I will not say—over-emphasizing service as the chief aim of life, but under-emphasizing those divine sources, the loss of which would soon put an end to service and consecration in the lives of our youth. I do not wish to end this article in a pessimistic vein at all. Most of these baccalaureate sermons strike a very high idealistic note, and their continued emphasis upon freedom of thought and courage to undertake new and divine adventures is most hopeful and commendatory."

Dr. Lynch, do you not think that the real trouble with our preachers is the fact that they are preaching too much philosophy and too little religion, or rather too little of the real Gospel, which is the power of God unto salvation to them that believe it?

There can be no doubt, we think, that we are preaching too much service, while we are leaving out the service which is basal to all other Christian work. It was Jesus Himself who said: "This is the work of God, that ye believe on Him whom He hath sent." This is a working age, but the work is at the wrong end of the row. Jesus knows better than any of us just what He wishes at our hands, and He declares that the work of God on the part of His people is believing on Him whom God hath sent. That being true, it is practically certain that He did not mean that no other work was to be done in His vineyard, but believing on Jesus is the basal ideal for service. In other words, if a Christian truly believes on the Lord Jesus Christ in a high degree, therein he gets qualification for all other work which may be called for in the Christian life. In this day of human rushing, we forget, or we seem to forget, the fact that true service cannot be rendered the cause of Christ till first we believe in this high degree on the Son of God. It is believing in this high degree that prepares us for other service in the Christian life. Well does Dr. Lynch declare that we are over-emphasizing service as the chief aim of life, and that is a real mistake, for the first and great service of any life is believing on the Son of God, and that in itself is opening the doorway into the multiplied service of the Christian life. The beauty in the service thus rendered is the fact that he who is well prepared from this standpoint is the best prepared for all the service to which the Master may call us in this life.

We fear that too many of our preachers who are called to preach the baccalaureate sermons before the graduating classes of our day are trying to preach to please the scholarly folks on such occasions. Brethren, even the scholars need the Gospel of Jesus Christ. Our commission as preachers of the Gospel is to preach the Word. Never mind about what scholars may say, but let us preach the Word of God and commit results to Him. Let us not forget that the biggest service we can render is to believe on the Son whom God has sent into the world to save the world from sin and death.

AN EXCELLENT SPIRIT.

[The opening address delivered by President W. A. Harper, LL. D., on the occasion of the recent thirty-fourth opening of Elon College.]

Daniel: "An excellent spirit was in Him."

Spirit is eternal. We cannot see it, but we can feel it, know it, act in harmony with or opposition to it. Spiritual values are real values. All experience testifies to the verity of this statement.

Many of you have only recently come into this community. There is a spirit regnant here. Even the chance visitor cannot fail to become conscious of its presence. You have already sensed it and are rapidly becoming a part of it. This spirit has been resident here in embryo since 1889. During these thirty-four years it has developed and evolved until now, to those choice souls who have experienced the Elon spirit, it is a hallowed benediction. I came under the influence of this spirit in 1894. I have seen this spirit assailed from within by students and faculty members, and from without by those incapable of appreciating it, and I have seen these same assailants converted to ardent friends and devotees when time for reflection had come. I have seen the administraation building around which this spirit had its central seminary and dwelling-place, go up in smoke, and I have seen this same spirit, undaunted, set about the reconstruction of a more ample and benefitting home for itself. You could destroy every building on this campus, and the Elon spirit will phoenix-like arise from the smoldering ruins to incarnate itself more befittingly in other buildings better adapted to its needs. It is an excellent spirit, and it cannot perish.

For some years now I have had it in mind to undertake to interpret this spirit in an opening address. I have hesitated to do so, because the interpretation of a spirit is not only difficult, but sometimes dangerous. The beauty of the flower is in its wholeness of impression, and not in its parts. So the beauty of the Elon spirit is in its unity, and not in its ingredient principles. I can only hope and pray that the beauty of what you have already begun to experience may not be marred for you by the analysis to which we shall now subject it. I shall speak of only five constituent elements of it. There are others which you will yourselves add to the list, but these five, all will agree, stand out on the horizon of the Elon spirit like Pike's Peaks in the Rockies.

And first among these constituent elements of our college spirit I would place the atmosphere of the home which pervades our institution even as the aroma of the flowers pervades the air we breathe, borne in to us on the gentle zephyrs of the spring. Elon is a college with the home quality, and it takes this quality to ripen youth into manhood and womanhood ready to grapple with and solve the complex problems of life. As go the homes, so goes the nation. Manifestly, a college with the home atmosphere is a primary need in the life of any people. So many times young people from good homes lose themselves when they go off to college. They miss the cheering, saving atmosphere of home and fall almost unconsciously into habits undermining character. To move among those who know us intimately, appraise us charitably, and love us devoutly is the strongest character-making influence touching our lives in the fateful days of youth. Here we are all members of the same family. The professors stand in loco parentis to you and your fellow-students are your brothers and sisters in the college household. It becomes each of us to contribute all we can to the success and happiness of our home. "Mother Elon" the alumni affectionately style the college of which you are now a part. Love her as you would your mother. She will be to you all a mother can be, and through the encroaching years you will ever recur to the days spent in the atmosphere of your college with pleasant memories associated with ideals that have meant your life's success.

But a college is a place for study, a place to face the questions and problems and facts of life. The Elon spirit is in this regard permeated with the attitude of reverent scholarship, of reverent search for truth. No half-truths are taught here and none are safe here. All sham and pretence are sure to be exposed. Every realm of knowledge is subjected to most painstaking analysis, and only that which can stand the test stands. There is only one question we are unprepared to examine after this manner and that is the existence of God. Elon is a Christian college. Just as the chemist assumes his electron and the physicist his molecule, so we assume God as the synthesizing fact of the universe. We just cannot get along without God here, and we make that assumption and offer no excuse for it. The Bible assumes that God is, and labels him a fool who denies it. That is our position. It would be presumptuous to undertake to discuss a spiritual concept here today without taking for granted that the Father of spirits actually is. We do not object to your using every means you can conceive of to prove or disprove this assumption, but we are convinced that you will, if you are wise and honest, necessarily arrive at our axiomatic attitude, that all is vanity without God and that all is reality with Him. Elon takes her stand here, and, God helping her, can do no other. This assumption lies at the basis of all Christian colleges. It must lie there, else why maintain such colleges at all?

You can see now what we mean by saying that Elon is characterized by the reverent search for truth. We mean being firmly convinced that God is and that the spiritual life is a real life, we are willing to investigate any problem, question, theory, or fact and to render verdict respecting it in terms of our fundamental conception of God as the source and author and synthesizer of all truth. Elon is not afraid to teach geology. What is geology? Nothing more nor less than the effort to learn how God made the world. We are not afraid to teach biology. What is biology? Nothing more nor less than the effort to find how God made our bodies and how life goes on in them. We are not troubled about evolution nor about the higher critics. We examine their theories, but we cannot accept any mechanical origin for the world, because we know that God is our Father and we constantly find Him present as the creative and directive spirit in every science, in all philosophy, in all art and history. We are convinced that there is nothing to fear from science, and that there can be no conflict between science and religion. God is the author both of scientific and of religious truth, and God is not inconsistent with Himself. When science and religion seem to conflict, we hold fast to our fundamental concept and know it will come out all right. We do not know enough of any science, yet to be dogmatic about its conclusions, nor has God ceased yet to speak to His children new conceptions of His spiritual truth. Jesus told His disciples He had things to say to them that they could not bear and promised that the Holy Spirit would lead us into all truth—all truth, that is it—and trusting such a leader we cannot greatly err even momentarily, and ultimately we shall not err at all. With God, all is well; without Him, all is ill. So let me repeat that this college is permeated with the spirit of reverent scholarship, a scholarship that takes its point of departure from the settled conviction that God is our Father and that He is the author of all truth. Such scholarship has in each recurring age made the universe more and more the servant of the life of man, and such scholarship shall in the fullness of time make this world the kingdom of our God. Be earnest and faithful in the service of such scholarship during your college days. You will never regret it.

You have already seen the Elon spirit displaying itself in athletics. Wholesome sport and recreation are cardinal principles of the Elon spirit. The human body is the temple of the living God. As such, it demands every consideration at our hands. We dare not desecrate it. We are to use and develop it—yes, beautify it. But we are ever to keep in mind that it is a Christian temple. High sanction by this concept is given to sport and athletics. Every student here is required to engage in some form of physical exercise under trained direction and supervision. This is a Christian duty, and no Christian college can shirk this duty and please God. But our athletic teams are not ours in spirit when they resort to un-Christian methods to win victories. We rejoice in victories, as much so as any college. We want to win, but we want no victory at the expense of Christian character. The wholesome principles of co-operation and sacrifice, other names for Christian brotherhood, are the very heart of college athletics. As such, we welcome athletics to our college life and duly honor those who wear maroon and gold on the gridiron, the diamond, the court and the track. We make no apology for the high estimate we place on athletics here. But we do not oppose athletics to scholarship. We believe in and aim at the scholarly athlete, and are never happier than when Elon produces an athletic scholar.

Elon is a co-educational college. It could not be other and be a college with the home atmosphere, for sons and daughters, with fathers and mothers, make up our homes. Equal education without restriction or distinction growing out of sex is natural education, is Christian education. But since Elon is a co-educational college, the social question becomes an important item in the college life and spirit. This is natural, and right, and Christian. Young men cannot sin in the presence of a pure Christian young woman. That is why gentility, refinement, courtesy, fraternity loom large in the Elon atmosphere. To be sure, social restrictions are necessary to keep the social nature in proper relation and proportion to the other interests and concerns of the college life, but wholesome social intercourse is urgently desired and definitely planned for here. A cynic recently found fault with Elon as a courting school. Well, courting has to be done, and I do not know a better place to do it than in the delightful atmosphere of the Christian college, with proper supervision. There are other aims in social intercourse, however, than the directly and intimately personal one of courting. Learn to love the association of clean, pure, high-minded young people of the opposite sex as well as of your own sex, my young friends. Place this association on the high plane of Christian brotherhood. The world stands sorely in need of this spirit today. Let not classism and the clean spirit sully your social life. Be a brother and sister to all. Such is the basis on which the entire social fabric of your college is erected. It is a safe and sane basis for you to build the edifice of your character upon.

And this brings me to the final ingredient of our excellent Elon spirit about which I am to speak at this time—the ingredient of Christian character. When I say this I say all. The end and aim and purpose of education is the production of character and the only enduring, satisfying character is Christian character. Your college motto is, "Christian character first and always at Elon," and around the hope of realizing this splendid product in the lives of those who resort here for study, all the activities and life of this college are organized and on it focussed. If Elon fails here, lamentable will be her plight. She will have failed in her major purpose. It is the earnest, prayerful, expectant hope of this Christian faculty and of these Christian trustees that no student should leave these walls consecrated to God and the young life of the world without having definitely and personally dedicated himself or herself to the program of Jesus. Strong and courageous and consecrated Christian manhood is Mother Elon's aspiration for each of you. The world needs you and the service of your promising lives motivated in terms of Christian idealism.

An excellent spirit is this of our Elon, in the joyous presence of which you now find yourselves with a year of hopeful endeavor challenging you. Be brave and strong as Daniel was. He purposed in his heart not to defile himself. Make this same splendid resolution here and now, young friends, on the threshold of your college days. I congratulate you on coming under the beneficent influence of such an excellent spirit, and I congratulate Elon on the privilege which is hers to bring her spirit to bear upon your young lives radiant with hope and big with possibilities as they are for God and brother-man. Happily are you and the Elon spirit met. Happily may you dwell together, and unitedly may you rejoice over the good consequences of your mutual contact and association together. May God bless you and Elon in the days and months and years that lie ahead.

CONCORD.

Since there was any report from this place the Church has been painted on the outside nicely, and money is being raised to cover the house in a short while.

The revival meeting began at Concord July 22nd and closed July 26, 1923. On Sunday, at 11 o'clock, Rev. J. F. Isley, a former pastor, preached a very able sermon. The Church was very glad to have a visit from Bro. Isley, for he is held in very high esteem there.

Rev. G. C. Crutchfield was our helper. He is one of our promising young ministers. His messages were strong and very appropriate. His personality was very acceptable to the Church. He made many friends during the brief stay. May the Lord bless him in his labors of love elsewhere.

There were three conversions, three additions, and the Church was much revived. All honor and praise to our Heavenly Father for what was done!

MT. PLEASANT.

The work of the house here is moving along nicely. It was in shape to be used by the first Sunday in August. This addition was greatly needed and is a great help during special services. The work will be completed at a later time.

The revival meeting began here August 5, 1923, and closed Thursday night following. Attendance was very good, considering the excessive hot weather and busy season in housing tobacco with many.

Rev. T. J. Green, Ramseur, N. C., came on Sunday night and remained until the close of the meeting. Bro. Green did some plain preaching. His messages were practical and seasoned with the Holy Spirit. He made many friends. May the Lord bless his efforts elsewhere.

There were six reclamations and one conversion. The Church was revived. Although the meeting was as much as we expected in results, it was a good meeting. The word of God was surely sown.

The music was good, and the singing improved from service to service. We are greatly indebted to Miss Bertha Cameron, Vass, N. C., for rendering us good instrumental music.

We have been called back for another year to each of my Churches, and we know of no reason why we should not serve them again. Thanks to our Heavenly Father for all of His rich blessings.

WARREN G. HARDING.

By Howard W. Pope.

Of all the noble Presidents,
Who from us have been torn,
No greater has God ever sent
Than the one we now mourn.

He was by far the kindest man
The White House ever knew;
He hated to refuse a plan
Or person who seemed true.

He loved all men, both high and low,
And treated with respect
His barber, diplomat or foe—
Each knew what to expect.

He knew the perils we now face,
And bore them day and night;
He wore his life out keeping pace
With problems, never light.

He was a true American,
And loved this land the best;
He had a heart for every man
From North, South, East and West.

And now our noble President
Has laid his burden down,
Responding to a call God sent
To take instead a crown.

GENERAL COMMITTEE ON ARMY AND NAVY CHAPLAINS.

The general committee on army and navy chaplains, co-operating with the departments, asks your help in finding just the men needed. The men and officers of the navy should have the best ministers the Church can provide.

Navy chaplains should be well educated, having not only a college degree, but a full course in some theological seminary. It is also highly desirable that they should have experience in work for men and in athletics. The type of man required is virile, red-blooded, broad-minded and genuinely consecrated; tactful and a good mixer, but standing foursquare, and not easily led away by surroundings. He must be a real man, and a man's man. Such a man will appeal to officers and enlisted men alike. The navy desires and will accept only the finest and best-equipped men for chaplains.

The maximum age limit for chaplaincy in the navy is 31½ years. One enters with rank of junior lieutenant; after seven years' service, is promoted to lieutenant; after four years as lieutenant, or eleven in all, to lieutenant-commander; after which time promotion is according to record by selection. At present, the highest rank to be reached is captain, which corresponds to that of colonel in the army.

3,000 THE CHRISTIAN SUN. 9,000

There are between 8,000 and 10,000 families represented in the Southern Christian Convention, which means if a copy of The Christian Sun is placed in each family, a possible subscription list of 9,000 copies. There are now circulated approximately 3,000 copies, or about one-third of our Church families are reached. Hence, there should be added to the list 6,000 new subscribers in order to have the Church paper placed in every family.

Now, the great personal effort required to do this must be rewarded. To compensate this labor, if premiums are given, it will take 20 automobiles, or 40 radio machines, or 50 to 60 talking machines, or 90 to 100 typewriters, or 200 to 300 watches, etc. Don't you think you will have a good opportunity to secure one of these prizes?

But you need not confine your solicitations to your Church alone. You have friends in other denominations who will gladly assist you by giving a subscription. Make your appeal in a straightforward manner. True men and women are interested in the success of their friends and will lend a helping hand.

Premiums Given for New Subscriptions.

The subscription price of The Sun, recently reduced, is now $2.00 per year—two six-month subscriptions at $1.00 each count as one year. One person may take as many as he may wish for himself or for others. Those in arrears should pay up and assist the solicitor by taking an advanced subscription.

Schedule.

1. To one securing 350 Subscriptions, a Ford Touring Car will be given ($298.00 f. o. b. factory).
2. To one securing 150 Subscriptions, one Radio Equipment—Westinghouse R-6 Set, complete with batteries, tubes, phone and aerial equipment, the price of which is $150.00.
3. To one securing 100 Subscriptions will be given one Victrola ($75.00), or cash prize of $50.00.
4. To one securing 75 Subscriptions, one Remington Portable Typewriter, with standard keyboard and case ($60.00 f. o. b. Richmond).
5. To one securing 30 Subscriptions, one Gentleman's or one Lady's Wrist Watch will be given, guaranteed by Jahnke Bros., Jewelers, of Richmond, Va. ($30.00).
6. For 25 Subscriptions, one Gentleman's or Lady's Watch ($25.00), likewise guaranteed by Jahnke Bros.
7. To one securing 20 Subscriptions, one Standard or International Dictionary will be given.

To all authorized solicitors will be paid 10 per cent commission on all renewals, and 20 per cent on all new subscriptions. Those receiving prizes will not be entitled to commission.

Two renewal subscriptions will be counted as one in determining the winners of prizes.

Send in your name and address and receive the necessary report blanks and receipt books.

The contest will close on October 31, 1923. Remittances made on this campaign are to be net. Post-office money orders constitute a safe plan of remittance.

MISSIONS

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Field Secretary.

THE SITUATION IN JAPAN.

Dr. John R. Mott, who has just returned from Canada, was consulted with reference to the effect of the great disaster in Japan upon the work of the Young Men's Christian Association in that country. He replied that, after taking counsel with the present executive head of all the American Young Men's Christian Association work throughout Japan, Mr. G. S. Phelps, who is in New York on a special business errand, and also Mr. Galen M. Fisher, his predecessor in Japan during a period of over twenty years, apparently the Young Men's Christian Association in Japan has suffered incomparably the greatest loss in the history of its world-wide work.

There is good reason to believe that the American and Canadian Y. M. C. A. secretaries in Japan are all safe, since they, together with many other foreigners, were spending August and early September at conferences in hill-towns outside the zone of destruction. The secretaries and their families were located for the summer as follows: In Karuizawa, Mr. H. S. Sneyd, formerly of Edmonton, Alberta; Mrs. H. S. Sneyd, formerly of Toronto, two children; Mr. Franklin H. Brown, New Britain, Conn.; Mrs. Franklin H. Brown, Rochester, N. Y., one child; Mr. Guy C. Converse, Hillsdale, Mich.; Mrs. Guy C. Converse, Minneapolis, Minn.; Miss Elizabeth Taylor, Victoria, B. C. At Nojiri, Mr. Arthur Jorgensen, Lincoln, Neb.; Mrs. Arthur Jorgensen, Madison, Wis., four children; Mr. George D. Swan, Clinton, Wis.; Mrs. George D. Swan, Madison, Wis., two children; Mr. G. Ernest Trueman, Strathroy, Ontario, two children; Mr. R. L. Durgin, Newark, N. J.; Mrs. R. L. Durgin, Northfield, Mass. In Takayama, Mr. W. R. F. Stier, Sayerville, N. J.; Mrs. W. R. F. Stier, New York City; Mr. R. H. Stanley, Carthage, Ind.; Mrs. R. H. Stanley, Carthage, Ind; Mr. and Mrs. George S. Patterson, Toronto, Ont.; Dr. and Mrs. D. E. Yarnell, of the American Marine Y. M. C. A. at Yokohama, had returned to Yokohama from Shanghai when last heard from.

The cables already received from Tokyo and Yokohama indicate that the Y. M. C. A. suffered enormous losses, as virtually all of its modern buildings in the devastated area were totally destroyed. In the capital alone, there were five main buildings and several branches. All the main buildings were in the burned area. The imposing city Y. M. C. A. buildings in Yokahama faced the public park, where so many casualties have been reported. All the homes of the secretaries, including the modern apartment house finished only a few weeks ago, are undoubtedly total wrecks. The large brick and concrete association buildings at Kyoto, Osaka, and Kobe are probably not seriously damaged. The replacing of the buildings destroyed or damaged is conservateively estimated to require over a million dollars.

The central association building in Tokyo had withstood all previous earthquakes and fires. It was one of the most famous structures in the empire, having been the gathering-place of scores of national and international assemblages. The similar student building opposite the Imperial University had rapidly come to supply a similar center for the social and religious self-expression of Tokyo's student body.

The association gymnasium in Tokyo, a concrete structure, was the only one in the empire when it was opened in 1914. It has been one of the chief training centers for athletes participating in the Far Eastern Olympic games, and has been constantly visited by army officers, educators and social workers as a model.

The salaries of the dozen American and Canadian association secretaries in Japan and part of the cost of the buildings have come from America, but the Japanese manage the city and national organization and raise all their current budget, which amounted to $240,000 in 1922. The American and Canadian secretaries pioneered the association, but they have from the beginning left the executive power in the hands of Japanese. Among the Japanese secretaries and trustees are men of exceptional ability. The national general secretary, Mr. Soichi Saito, is now approaching New York, on his way back from several international gatherings in Europe, where he played a distinctive part. His closest American colleague, Mr. G. Sidney Phelps, chairman of the American association in Tokyo, is now in America on a business errand, and expects to hasten back to Japan immediately, in company with Mr. Saito, in order to take a hand in the urgent measures of relief and reconstruction. Great anxiety is felt for the safety of Mr. Saito's family, who lived in one of the districts of Tokyo reported destroyed.

When asked what the plans of the American Young Men's Christian Association movement are to help in the present emergency, Dr. Mott replied that it has been the settled policy of the organization to place itself back of all of the great emergency undertakings of the American Red Cross, and that he was fully confident that all of the associations throughout the country would, in this case in particular, place their entire leadership and organization at the disposal of the national and local Red Cross agencies and render every service in their power. In view of this policy, the international committee does not contemplate projecting a relief appeal of its own. Obviously, it will be necessary for it in due time to help the shattered Jaapanese associations to restore their facilities for service in the different cities.

QUIET TALKS ON SIMPLE ESSENTIALS.

BY S. D. GORDON.

Delivered Under the Auspices of Atlantic City Council of Churches.

(No. 5) THE GOD-MAN.

The blacksmith was right. Ignorance, blasphemous, he railed on the man trying to sell him a Bible. The man deftly left a copy behind as he slipped out. The blacksmith began reading. Caught, surprised, startled, he sprang up, crying: "There's a man in the book."

Yes, there is a Man in the Book. That's the outstanding thing. Look at him. Born in obscure poverty, cradled among cattle, his home in an unsavory village, among people intensely clannish, he had no touch with schools, never traveled far, had no book, except one, and wrote none, left no organization, and died a death of peculiar shame. Yet within three days after, He was seen alive, and within three centuries He changed the calendar of imperial Rome.

It is fascinating in these older leaves to get fleeting glimpses of an unusual Man. He talks with childless Abraham under the blue, and used the twingling stars to number Abraham's unborn heirs. He wrestled one dark night with crafty Jacob, and gives the strange soft touch which bends that rugged chieftan's will. He meets intrepid Joshua at Canaan's gateway, calmly gives orders, and is obeyed.

He talks with cautious Gideon and the nation's long captivity becomes overwhelming victory. Strong Samson's father is overawed to find the Man talking with him strangely no mere man. The Jewish statesman administering the world's empire of the Euphrates is dazed by a Man of fire in a blinding blaze of light.

At first it is simply a man, in outer appearance, in tone of voice, in garb, in the interest shown. Then, quietly, unmistakably, comes indescribable, overpowering evidence that He is not simply a man.

And there is something more that runs along with these fleeting glimpses. There is an unusual Man coming. These glimpses merely illustrate the meaning of that. That same childless exile of Ur is told that through his unborn son will come a man who will bless the race.

Sightless old Israel, on the Nile, sees a Man coming to lead the race. The foremost racial lawyer speaks of a Man coming to do for all what he does for the Hebrews. The royal poet sings sweetly of a Man coming to rule, and do it right, and be as a benediction to the earth, fragrant of the dew of the new morning.

Then—then, the Man is here! He is born in a way unknown before, and unrepeated since. He grows up in the simple Nazareth home. Thirty out of thirty-three years, ten-elevenths of his life, is spent in a whitewashed stone cottage and a carpenter shop.

Nazareth means a commonplace life, in its outer circumstance, lived truly for God. Look a moment: rising in the morning, the kindling, milking the cow likely, hanging the kettle over the fire maybe, down the street with a cheery "Good morning" to His fellow-craftsmen.

Then the carpenter shop, amid the odor of the pine shavings, hammering nails, gouging with a chisel, pushing a saw, polishing off the leg of a table for a crusty customer. Back at night, stretching weary muscles, the evening meal, talking over with the mother of the home the small, big, home problems, rent-day maybe, making both ends meet.

And then off sharing sleeping space on a pallet in a corner with a brother. And that not for a year—thirty of them. The Father's plan for the God-Man's life down here meant just that—living, simply living a truly human life, commonplace in its outer round.

Then there was the smaller part, measured in years. Feeding men's hunger, healing the maimed and lamed and diseased, robbing the grave of its victims, comforting sore hearts, talking over personal problems in the doorway, teaching by the roadside.

Is it any wonder the Galilean hills rang with praise of this Man, faces brightened at the mention of Him, homes echoed glad songs, little children came a-running, strong men and women came and listened and went with a peace within.

Then the opposition. Of course. The enmities aroused, the selfish ambitions blocked, old prejudices rudely jolted, cherished plans threatened. And then the climax. Ten times the leaders tried to do Him to death, and are held off with an unseen power they can't understand and can't resist. Then He allowed them to take Him and do their worst.

And He did it, He said, for us. There was some terrible need that it be done—that dying. So He died. And when the tomb had quite done its work, He quietly let himself up, up toward His true center of gravity. No tomb for Him when that one had done its work.

Truly he was the God-Man, and is, as human as though only human and nothing more; as really God as though only God and nothing else. Jesus was the Face of God looking into men's faces. He was the Voice of God talking into men's ears. He was God Himself in human shoes, hand-pegged, and in human clothes, home-spun, hand-stitched.

ELEMENTS OF TRUE GREATNESS.

As God in His greatness looks down on the world, it is not flattened to Him, as it is to us from an elevation, but there are greater and smaller men in His sight. No epithet is more misused and misapplied than that of "a great man." Every little man that makes a noise for a while gets the ribbon hung about his neck. Think of what sort of a set they are that are gathered in the world's Valhalla, and honored as the world's great men. There are two sandards of greatness—the world's false estimate of greatness and God's estimate.

We naturally appreciate greatness. Jesus Christ did not condemn His disciples for seeking it, but simply rebuked their false conceptions of it, and their wrong methods of seeking it.

If we measure man by the quantitative standard, he is one of the most insignificant objects in the universe. When we compare him with the magnificence of yonder sun, he is too little to think about. But when we measure him by the qualitative standard, he outweighs the whole universe of matter. I know what the sun is; I know its orbit and can calculate its movements and changes in the years to come; but it can have no such knowledge of men. The sun's existence is limited to the realm of matter, but there is open to me a universe of mind and spirit. I am endowed with eternal faculties which connect me with God's moral government, enabling me to distinguish between the true and the false, the right and the wrong.

The materialist says: "The only difference between man and other animals is a difference in degree. That the ape takes his place in our ancestral tree, and that the sheep becomes our distant cousin." If we accept this view of life, what answer can we give to the question, "How much is a man better than a sheep?" The flocks that fed on the pastures of Bethlehem got just as much physical happiness out of existence as the Shepherd David, who watched them. They could give all their attention to eating, drinking and sleeping, which is the materialist's chief end of life. According to the commercial view of life, we must admit that there are times when the sheep is the more valuable of the two, for sheep of rare breed have been sold for six thousand dollars, while men of common stock have been sold for a rusty musket or a piece of cotton cloth.

A few years ago a scientist attempted to put down in money values the worth of an average man. His conclusion was that he was worth about $7.50. Taking an account of the material body, the average man contains enough oxygen, hydrogen and nitrogen to make $2.45 worth of illuminating gas, and yet he may not be bright enough to throw light on any subject. He contains enough carbon to make 9,360 lead pencils, yet he may not have a thought worth noting by a single lead pencil. He contains enough phosphorous to make 800,000 matches, and yet he may be a poor stick, and therefore a very poor match for any girl. He contains about 60 lumps of sugar, and yet he may be sour-tempered. He contains enough iron to make a spike that will hold his own weight, and yet he may be a man of putty. He contains a lot of starch, and yet he may have no starch in him. This, however, is taking an account of the material man only, and not the fact that he is worth all he does and all he is capable of doing. Joseph brought about twelve dollars when his brothers sold him, but they did not know that, in selling the lad, they were selling the future saviour of many people. Every human being has a certain value which can be set down in dollars and cents. If your salary is $1,000 a year, this is the interest at 4 per cent on $25,000, and if you could turn yourself into capital this would be your commercial value. Whenever you increase your energy, intelligence, or effectiveness in your business, you capitalize yourself at a higher figure. When you pull down $4,000 a year from your services you can set down your personal valuation at $100,000.

True greatness is inherent. It is in man, not in the raiment he wears. Good clothes on some people remind you of pretty labels on empty bottles. Nor is true greatness in the property that one owns or in the office that he holds. There are judicial vagabonds, congressional tramps, senatorial boobies, ecclesiastical imbeciles, royal idiots and millionaire simpletons.

To possess money is not an element of greatness. The world's great torch-bearers, deliverers, and reformers have had neither the time nor the inclination to make money. I would not cry out against money-getting, but I would, like the Teacher of Galilee, give instruction in money-using. Earn all you can, but do not "can" all you earn. Men are not in this world to make money, but money is in this world to make men.

You cannot make a man great by giving him a great man's name. You can find John Wesleys among bootleggers; John Miltons among circus clowns; George Washingtons among chicken thieves; Thomas Jeffersons among society dudes, and Abraham Lincolns in chain-gangs. It is not the name that you give your boy, but the character that he builds for himself that determines his position in the world here and hereafter. Near the close of our Lord's ministry there was a strife among some of His disciples as to which of them should be accounted the greatest. Many an ignoramus today will be satisfied with his ignorance if some college will only confer on him the degree of D. D. or L.L. D. Many a man who never saw a battlefield or read a book on military tactics is satisfied so long as his neighbors and acquaintances salute him with the title of colonel or captain.

We know of no great men except those who have rendered great services to humanity. Men are measured by what they do, not by what they possess. "He shall be great in the sight of the Lord," spake the angel who foretold the birth of John the Baptist. The elements that entered into his greatness were: unwavering and immovable firmness and courage; clear elevation above worldly good; fiery enthusiasm for righteousness; and absolute humility of self-abnegation. The greatest man is the best servant of God and humanity. In time past, a man's greatness consisted in his ability to make men serve him, but in the golden age to come, a man's greatness will be measured by his ability and willingness to serve others. This century is furnishing magnificent opportunities for the display of those virtues that made Jesus Christ the greatest of mankind. If a pure Gospel is to be preached, if spiritual religion is to be preserved, if infidelity is to be smitten with the paralysis of death, if free-loveism and all its kindred evils are to be uprooted from the American soil, if despotism is to be overthrown, if the prohibition law is to be enforced—these reforms must be accomplished by men who possess the same virtues that made Jesus the Prince and Master among men. This age needs manhood. We need manhood to secure and maintain that righteousness which exalteth a nation.

The pyramids of Egypt will one day sink beneath the sands of the desert. The creations of genius which adorn the art galleries of the world will fade from the canvas in the still lapse of time. The proud structures of stone and steel, which kiss the clouds in their loftiness, shall be leveled to the ground. The words, "passing away" are written on all material things; but he who helps restore a soul to the image of God is doing an imperishable work—the fires and tempest of the earth cannot harm it, and it will outlast sun, moon and stars.

A PRAYER FOR A YOUNG PREACHER TO USE.

[Let the young preacher commit this prayer to memory and repeat it over and over till it gets to be his own prayer, and then as he goes here and yonder he can in silence pray it as the prayer of his heart. Other people may do the same, and great benefits will follow its sincere and frequent use.—Editor.]

Lord, let me do my little part
With courage and a willing heart.
Open my eyes, that I may see,
However dark the day may be;
However rough the road I fare,
The purpose of the cross I bear.
Lord, let me wake when morning breaks,
Undaunted by my old mistakes.
Let me arise as comes the sun,
Glad for the task that must be done,
Rejoicing I have strength to give
Some beauty to the life I live.
Lord, let me hear the kindlier things,
The morning song the robin sings,
The laughter of the children near,
Their merry whisperings in my ear,
My neighbor's greeting at the gate—
Let these shut out the speech of hate.
Lord, let me see the beauty here,
The sky above me bright and clear,
The smile upon a friendly face,
The charm of health and all its grace,
The roses blooming everywhere,
In spite of hurt and grief and care.
Lord, strengthen me, that I may keep
My faith, though bitterly I weep;
Grant me undaunted to remain
Through every storm of care and pain.
Lord, let me do my little part
With courage and a willing heart.

Dear Editor:

I have entered the campaign for The Christian Sun, a short time ago, but haven't had time to work very regularly; have only sent in $29, but I feel very greatly encouraged over the undertaking of getting our paper in the homes of the membership of our dear Church.

I am going to canvass the membership of the Georgia and Alabama Conferences personally, as much as possible. I have set the goal for 350 new subscribers in Georgia and Alabama. I am asking an interest in your prayers for me in this great undertaking, and any words that you speak for me through the columns of The Sun I assure you will be very much appreciated. I am praying that Jehovah may open up the hearts and pocketbooks of our Church members, and that we may succeed in getting more than 6,000 new subscribers by October 31st.

May the Lord richly bless you in the great work of editing such a great and good paper.

Wishing you the very best of health, I beg to remain, as ever, A. H. Sheppard.

FAMILY ALTAR

CONDUCTED BY H. E. ROUNTREE, U. S. NAVY.

"In Thee and in Thy seed shall the families of of the earth be blessed."—Gen. 28:14.

(Use this in your daily devotions.)

MONDAY.

THE DUTY OF GOOD WILL.

"And whosoever shall compel (Greek: "impress") thee to go one mile, go with him twain (two).—Mark 5:41.

These words are among the first utterances of Christ, setting forth one of the first principles of good will towards others.

Mark Twain was once asked by his friend to go with him for a walk. Twain declined, saying that he was too tired. The friend said: "If I can prove to you by the Bible that God commands you to go with me, will you do it?" Twain said that he would. Whereupon, the friend quoted the above text, and Twain took the walk.

Some think that duty is doing exactly that for which they are personally responsible, or what a just law requires, and no more. They calculate it to a nicety and pay the full toll, no more and no less.

In the Russo-Japanese war, a Japanese student at Auburn College, N. Y., went home immediately. When asked why he did, he said: "I have a letter from my father who has said: 'Any son of mine will be on hand, not when he is called for, but in advance of his duty.'" When this man was gone, his friends knew that, dead or alive, this man did his duty, and then some. This is the law of character. Christ said: "What do ye more than others."

PRAYER.

O eternal God, our everlasting Father, we praise Thee, we adore Thee, we worship Thee. Forgive us our selfishness and make us good stewards of Thy boundless compassion, who, in Jesus, went about doing good. May we be faithful, and not fall short of not only our duty, but of all that we may do for good. Through Jesus Christ our Lord, we ask it. Amen.

TUESDAY.

"GOING THEM ONCE MORE."

"What do ye more than others?"—Matt. 5:47.

These words are among the same utterances as those of the above lesson, and Jesus is talking about the spirit of retaliation, and of the attitude we should have toward our enemies. It is the same as referred to when He said that the old law was "an eye for an eye," etc., "but I say unto you, love one another." He knew that love settles all disputes and knows no limits. Love does not work with the clock. A mother nursing a sick child does not begin and stop with the clock. Other folks may do that way, but do you?

Andrew Carnegie once said: "There are three classes of men: those who do not do their duty and are taking short cuts; those who do their duty and stop there; and those who do more than their duty. No one can cheat the latter out of success."

PRAYER.

Dear Father, give us Thy thoughts, that we may be lead into the realm of love, success and glory. Search us and know our hearts, try us and know our thoughts; and see if there be any wicked way in us, or anything short of our best, and lead us into the way everlasting. Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

CHRIST THE REST-GIVER.

*"Come unto Me * * * and I will give you rest."*—Matt. 11:28.

The multitudes were burdened with labor, with making a living, with diseases, with searching for relief, rest and pleasure, and Christ knew that they were seeking it in the wrong ways, so thus he bids them "Come to Me."

The multitudes of today are in the same way, and they need the same thing that those of the apostolic age needed—that is, find it in the things that spring out of Jesus. There is very little satisfaction in the superficial things that bring pleasure but for a moment. Water is not to be found in a broken cistern. The appetite is not satisfied with ashes, and an unsatisfied appetite is God's retribution for those who trust to false and unholy things.

PRAYER.

Dear Father, Thou alone knowest what is good for us. Open Thou our lives to these things, that we may adore all that comes from Thee, and that Thy will may be done in us. Give us the wisdom to know what are the satisfying and transforming influences of life, and, instead of running into the meaningless things, may we turn to Him who is all wise and good, and all-satisfying—Jesus Christ. Amen.

THURSDAY.

THE END OF VAIN PURSUITS.

"Sin, when it is finished, bringeth forth death."—Jas. 1:15.

The modern speech version of the Scriptures says: "Desire conceives and breeds sin, while sin matures and gives birth to death."

The delusions of sin have been often illustrated, but in the following from "In the Heart of Africa," by Sir Samuel Baker, the illustration gains power: "In crossing the Nubian desert, a regiment of soldiers was restricted to a limited allowance of water, and they suffered from extreme thirst. In the distance they saw what appeared to be a lake, and they insisted upon their guide to take them there. They were told that it was not a lake, but in vain. In their sufferings for water, intensified by the sight of what appeared to be water, words led to blows, and the guide was overruled and abused, and the whole regiment turned from their track and rushed for the welcome waters. More thirsty and faint they grew, heavier and heavier their footsteps became, hotter and hotter their breath, and farther and farther from their right track they went on, until at last almost dead with famish, the lake that glistened in the sunshine and tempted them, vanished. It was only burning sand."

PRAYER.

Dear Father, as we cannot live without Thy care, as we cannot thrive without Thy presence; as there is no satisfaction in life only as lived in Christ; as there is no remission of sins but in Him who said, "Come"—help us to do the things that connect us with Thee, in whom is the happiness of the world, and when night comes may it still be light to our souls. Amen.

FRIDAY.

INCREASING LIFE.

"And he called ten servanats of His, and gave them ten pounds, and said unto them, trade ye herewith until I come."—Luke 19:13.

"Grow in grace and knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ."—2 Peter 3:18.

*"The Lord make you to increase and abound in love one toward another * * * that He may establish your hearts unblamable in holiness * * * at the coming of the Lord."*—1 Thess. 3:12, 13.

(Read also, please, the following: Jno. 1:4, 3:36; 1 Peter 2:1, 2; Eph. 4:15; 2 Cor. 9:10; Isa. 29:19; 1 Thess. 4:10.)

The parable of the talents was the last one our Lord gave. In this it comes rather like a benediction. He urged upon all that they must increase or the kingdom would not be served. Jerusalem had failed and was likened unto a barren fig tree, which, because it did not increase and bear fruit, must be cut down and be done away with. In this He taught that life belongs to God and not to ourselves. This He is teaching today, but, like as unto that day, it is our hardest lesson to learn that we belong to God and not to ourselves. But the message goes on, and we are still being urged to fit our lives to one another, abolish jealousies, envies, hatred, and respect one another's rights. Still we are being urged that the supreme purpose of life is adjustment and harmony? He urges that we should know that the things He taught were to enable us to enter into business with one another, trade and get gain, and at the same time get a character that will meet the approval of God.

PRAYER.

In the need of help, dear Lord, we come to Thee, asking that Thou wilt grant us visions of the true values of life, and diligence to strive for them. Remove from our minds and from our hearts the things which burden, and awaken within us the power to dare and to do right. This we ask for Jesus' sake. Amen.

SATURDAY.

SOME MORE LIFE.

"Let each one of us please his neighbor, for that which is good."—Rom. 15:2.

(Read Rom. 15:1-9.)

Cain and Abel could not live together because they could not respect one another's rights. It is the same as the parable of the talents. The Master's reckoning says that he who will have no faith, will not believe in gain, and has no care about the welfare of others, must be judged and lose what he hath.

If life were money, it would be different, for God would show us how to dig it up and have a plenty of it. But the values of life are not such at all; even the value of money is not in its purchasing power, but in its use as a stepping-stone to character.

PRAYER.

Dear Father, exalt Thyself in our thoughts, proclaim Thyself in our speech, and energize Thyself in our deeds, that the little world we live in may know that we have seen Thee and that we love and serve Thee. This we ask for Jesus' sake. Amen.

SUNDAY.

PROGRESSIVE FAITH.

"Have faith in God."—Mark 11:22.

(Read also, please, the following: Matt. 17:20; Hab. 2:4; 2 Peter 3:18; Rom. 4:16.)

Jesus said that our faith should be like a grain of mustard seed. The mustard seed grows into a tree. Does thy faith grow? Read Isa. 53:2; Hos. 14:5; Eph. 4:15.

What is faith? For the sake of a concrete understanding, I think we can say that faith is that function of the soul—the spiritual self—that receives the truths of the spirit world. Our bodies receive the truths of the material world through the sensations of touch; our minds receive the facts of the mental world through reason; and our souls receive the facts of the spiritual world through faith; therefore, we can say that what reason is to the mind, faith is to the soul. Faith is the reasoning function of the soul.

Dare to live a godly Christian life, and thy faith will function well, for to such God gives a consciousness of His being, a knowledge of His will, and a power to respond to the call of spiritual life.

PRAYER.

Dear Heavenly Father, give us a faith in Thee that will acquire all spiritual blessings possible to us here, and at last completed in Thy presence, when faith has lost its sight and thou hast said, "Thou hast been faithful over a few things * * * enter thou into the joys of Thy Lord." Impart to us this day Thy abundant fullness of faith, that out of its abundance we may impart it to others. This we ask for Jesus' sake. Amen.

Christian Orphanage

SCHOOL OPENS.

DEAR FRIENDS:

School opened on September 10th. It is books, and more books, pencils and tablets. Pen and ink without end. One hundred children in school! I have already spent more than two hundred dollars for books. Think of it! What if your family dug into your bank account that much? I expect you would call for help.

If books were the only expense we have, it would be different. Cold weather is in the near future; shoes, hose, clothes, wraps and many other things to make a hundred and five children warm. Then, too, we cannot help but think of the forty little fellows who are calling to us to give them a home and we have not been able to do it. A friend of mine came to see me a few days ago in behalf of a little girl whose father and mother are dead and she has no home, and when he told the story of how the little child had been sent from place to place for the last three years, it made my heart ache. It would make yours ache, too. The little girl, a beautiful child, was with him, and said to me: "Please give me a home; I have nowhere I can call home." When I looked on her beautiful, sweet face, just as innocent as a little lamb, how could I say, "No?" If such appeals could reach our Church folks in person, I believe our income would be more than $191.58 per week to care for 105 children. Friends, I appeal to you to open your hearts and have some sympathy for the little children who are helpless and cannot help it. It is no choice of theirs; just circumstances they can't help, and beyond their control.

"Defend the poor and fatherless; do justice to the afflicted and needy."—Psalms 82-3.

Have you defended the little children at the Christian Orphanage with a contribution during the last year? If not, won't you get your checkbook and write a check, made payable to the Christian Orphanage, and mail it to us at once? Do this and have the satisfaction of knowing you had a part in giving them protection.

AN OPEN LETTER.

TO THE CHRISTIAN SUN:

In a recent issue of THE SUN (August 30th), an item in the personal columns, relative to the new building of People's Church, Dover, Del., was worded in an unfortunate manner, as it might be interpreted in the wrong sense. The item in question stated that People's Church was building "a sort of a parish house," the possible inference being that it was but an excuse for the real thing.

The fact is, the new building is to be the most modern parish house, or Sunday School and social center building not only in the State, but as two of the leading national religious educational authorities of two other denominations commented after studying the plans for the building, "It is to be one of the most up-to-date buildings for religious education and social service in the entire country." Naturally, we do not want any one to think that it is to be but "a sort of a parish house."

Another statement made in the item referred to was that "People's Church is a wealthy congregation, and quite able to build such a house, but Mr. Eldridge R. Johnson, president of the Victor Talking Machine Company, has stepped up and given the neat sum of $70,000 to complete the enterprise."

The fact is that, so far as material things are concerned, People's Church is not a wealthy congregation; but, so far as love for the kingdom and loyalty to the progress of the Church are concerned, the congregation is rich indeed. It is not a wealthy congregation. If it had been, Mr. Johnson would not have been interested to such an extent in this new enterprise. Though the Church has but few wealthy members, it has a large number of tithers, and members who were willing to give to the point of sacrifice in order to make the new building possible.

When the campaign for the new building was launched, the first goal being $30,000, a few of the strongest givers did not think the Church could raise more than $10,000. But feeling the need of such a building, in order that the Church might more adequately express its interest in the community, the members responded in their pledges with such enthusiasm and sacrifice that the pastor felt justified in seeking co-operation from Mr. Johnson, a former Dover citizen. Mr. Johnson did not merely "step up and give $70,000," but, the project having been carefully laid before him, and after thorough investigation and consideration, it appealed to him so strongly that he made the magnificent offer that if the Church would raise $30,000 within sixty days that he would give an additional $30,000. The committee had $22,850 raised when the offer was received, and immediately a special effort was made to raise the balance of the amount needed to secure th additional thirty thousand dollars so as to erect a larger and more efficient building than originally contemplated. Within eight days, the committee had secured bona fide pledges totaling nearly $33,000.

These pledges meant real sacrifice on the part of many. Some of the members postponed certain remodeling work on their homes in order to make as large a pledge as possible. Others postponed buying an automobile. Others changed their vacation plans, and others made personal denials of various kinds.

It was because of the loyal and sacrificial response of the congregation in giving so worthily that Mr. Johnson made his generous offer. And because of the magnificent way in which the congregation met the condition of his offer in so brief a time, and because of his appreciation of the plans submitted for the building later, and his deep interest in the progressive program People's Church is seeking to put on in his boyhood city, that he made an additional gift of $40,000 in order that the building might be what the Church had hoped for and needs in the interest of a modern program of religious education.

The building is now under course of construction, and the total cost of the project will be a little over $115,000. Of this amount, nearly $110,000 has already been raised. The plans include an extensive remodeling of the present building, in addition to the erection of a beautiful memorial tower and parish house, or Sunday School and social center building.

The pastor and members of People's Church feel confident that God Himself has directed in the campaign, and in securing the generous gift from Mr. Johnson. And the pastor realizes that because the congregation did its best, God deemed the Church worthy to receive the timely help, and hence made it possible. The Church attempted a great project for God—greater than the Church by itself could accomplish—and God met them and honored them in it. Augustine was right when he declared: "You must attempt great things for God if you expect great things from God."

The different letters that I have received, and the different comments made relative to the item referred to as appearing in the August 30th issue of THE SUN have made me feel the need of writing these lines in explanation, by way of correction.

Coveting the prayers of THE SUN readers to the end that God may continue to bless People's Church and enable it to win many souls into the kingdom of our Lord, I remain,

Sincerely,
ROY C. HELFENSTEIN.

EXPLANATION.

As to the sense in which I used the term "a sort of a parish house," let me say: The phrase "a sort of a parish house" did not mean to say the building was ordinary, or a common affair. That thought was not in the mind of the writer. I had read an account of the institution in some paper, and, as I understood, it was to include more than the ordinary parish house idea, and I used the phrase "a sort of parish house" as including some other features in addition to the parish house idea, and in no sense as indicating that it was a common affair. I am unable to see how our brother got that thought into his mind, for the fact that it was to cost at least $100,000 shows that it could in no wise mean it was a common affair. Not recalling, from what I had read, the exact nomenclature as to the name of the institution, I used the phrase "a sort of parish house" to make room for the additional features which, I understood, were not exactly parish house features.

As for saying the Dover Church is wealthy, I really so understood, and did not dream of misrepresenting it in so doing; but if I was mistaken, it was an honest mistake, and being mistaken, as Dr. Helfenstein asserts, I beg pardon of both the Church and the pastor for saying they are wealthy when they were not. I did think the Church was wealthy, and believing it, on what I regarded as good grounds, I thought I was telling the truth.

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

September 30, 1923.

Subject: "Review—Great men and women of the New Testament.

Golden Text: "Therefore, let us also, seeing we are compressed about with so great a cloud of witnesses, lay aside every weight, and the sin which doth so easily beset us, and let us run with patience the race that is set before us."—Heb. 12:1.

Devotional Reading: Heb. 11:13-16, 39, 40.

Life Lessons from This Quarter.

"Breathe the air of the mountains, and their unapproachable summits will lift you to the level of themselves."

For three months our lessons have clearly portrayed how men and women, closely associated with Jesus Christ, become like Him. They come to have His love and zeal for the kingdom. They come to have His ideals to guide their own lives. Without Him, they might have been ordinary men and women, never heard of beyond their own neighborhoods. With Him, they have a place in this great New Testament "hall of fame," inspiring lives who live many centuries after they have gone.

It is always interesting to study the lives of men, to discover the influences which developed them, to search for the motives which impelled them to action. But the chief value of such study comes when, through it, our own lives are enriched, and when the past, as revealed in history and biography, is made to contribute helpfully to the present and to the future. Through these lessons, have we come to know the heroes and heroines well enough to make this contribution of life lessons in such a way that the lessons will affect daily living now? Through coming to know these fourteen of the most intimate friends and workers with Jesus, have we come to know Him better, and to desire for ourselves that intimate companionship with the Master, which made them great? If so, the value of this quarter's lessons can never be overestimated.

Life lessons come as examples to be followed, ideals to be developed. The review lesson offers another opportunity to apply to today the virtues and good qualities to these fourteen characters. Among them we find two who came before Him and lived close to Him, six who were among his most intimate friends and helpers, and six who helped as leaders to carry on His work after the ascension.

In the first group is John the Baptist, the fearless preacher, the advocate of temperance by his very habits of life, the foe of evil, and the humble forerunner of the one he desired to honor. Never thinking of self even, he gave his whole life to preparing the way for the Christ. And then there comes the mother of Jesus, Mary, whose name is synonymous with purity of womanhood, and with love and beauty, the most highly honored of women, who cared for the boy Jesus, and was deeply concerned in the work of the Man, and connected with the followers who carried on His work after His death.

In the second group are the three helpers—Peter, John and Matthew—and the three women who were loving friends—Mary Magdalene, Martha and Mary of Bethany. The great secret of their title to a place in this hall of heroes is found in Mark 3:14, they were "with him." Being with Jesus makes any life great. It made Peter, the rash fisherman, the great preacher of Pentecost. Impulsive, but enthusiastic Peter, a very human disciple, who made mistakes, as we make them, but came back in penitence to be a bigger man. John the "Beloved" was first in the affections of His Lord. Think of living a life which would entitle you to the place of a John with the Master, and yet He is eager to be that loving friend of all if He is only permitted to be so John's great message to us, as to the Ephesians when he was there in person, would doubtless be, "Little children, love one another." For love is the power which will most greatly enrich lives and bring men close to a loving Christ. Matthew was the man with a handicap. Despised, distrusted, he heard the call of Jesus, and left all and followed Him. In spite of his past life, Matthew became one of the most helpful disciples, leaving a great Gospel with his story of Jesus. In any community, men and women may be found whose entire lives have been changed and made more useful because they have heard that divine call and heeded its loving summons. Completing the second group of six, we have the three women friends—Mary Magdalene, the example of penitence and constancy, the loving woman who served as she was able, sorrowing at the crucifixion, rejoiced at the resurrection; Martha and Mary of the home in Bethany, which was the the refuge of Jesus, presenting problems of the home, showing how glad Jesus is to be an honored guest where He is welcomed. The Martha who overvalued service, activity for the guest, and the Mary who sat at His feet are contrasted in the lesson which brings the great truths that Christians need in their lives both worship and service. Worship to derive power; service to put into expression the impulses and ideals which come from true worship.

The last six characters are connected with the early Church and the missionary program of that Church, carrying out the great commission. Stephen is a combination of tenderness and heroism, lovingkindness and bravery, which remind us of the lines of Bishop of Exeter, "Tender as the brave are only." His was a faith which could not be overcome by discomfort or sacrifice, but endured even to death for the sake of the Gospel. Barnabas, Mark, Luke and Timothy were all great men by themselves, but with Paul is their work most associated. They had the great gift of working together, and as helpers their greatest service was rendered—Barnabas, the generous, giving his possessions, his sympathy and interest, his time and talents; Mark, always found helping, facing opportunities, but not always taking full advantage of them, yet changing failure to success by his persistent and consecrated desire to help in the work; Luke, the "Beloved Physician," the great writer, the missionary traveler; and Timothy, the youth who chose the path of Christian service to follow throughout his life. All have "life-lessons" to teach. All leave great examples to follow. And Paul, the "many-sided Paul" the Christian, enthusiastic, and devout; the missionary traveler dauntless and unafraid through danger and persecution; the great writer and orator; the founder of Churches and the friend of younger workers. Through many avenues he pressed on to the "prize of the high calling in Christ Jesus," ever exhibiting his wish to be obedient to his heavenly vision through self-sacrifice and love and service.

As breathing the air of the mountains may bring us nearer to their summits, and as being with Jesus Christ may make us more like Him, these lessons may help to lift our lives to the higher plans. Never, after thinking of their devotion, their heroic love, their unselfish work, can we be willing to be narrow in our thought, selfish in our love, nor lack diligence in our service. No one lesson can serve to impress fully their great natures, but it will take a life of study and effort to inculcate the great virtues of Peter and John and Paul and Mark, but such a study and such effort will make any life better and richer and more Christian, and therein lies the great aim of the Christian heart.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

September 30, 1923.

Topic: "Recent triumphs of missions at home and abroad."—Acts 14:19-27.

Thoughts for the Meeting.

Among the greatest heroes of the world have been the missionaries. They face opposition and persecution of all kinds, and in their natures must be developed both physical and moral bravery. Verse 19.

God cares for His workers and helps them to do His work. Verse 20.

Preaching and teaching go together to make missionary work go forward. God can use all workers in His service, and the preacher, and teacher, and doctor and nurse, and farmer and machinist may all invest their lives on the mission field, for all are needed. Verse 21.

Christianity is not always the easy way, but it is the worth-while way that leads to life. Few things of real value in this world are "easy." Few blessings are really appreciated unless they call for some work or sacrifice or patient waiting. Verse 22.

Missionaries need the prayers of the Christians at home. All cannot go, but all can pray, and live in a larger world, because they are serving the whole world through their prayer life. Verse 23.

There is an "open door" now opened by God that His children everywhere may hear the wonderful story of life. Many open doors are filled with anxious faces looking for the one who will tell them of Jesus. Many homes are filled with concerned hearts eager for salvation. There have been great triumphs where the doors have been entered. When will the others be satisfied? Verse 27.

Last year the Protestant Churches of America spent $40,000,000 on the work of their 17,000 missionaries in all the different types of ministry to human needs.

Within this generation Korea has gathered three times as many Christians as there were in the world a century after the time of Christ, and India has the largest Church in the world, at Ongole—a Baptist Church, with 45,000 members.

The mission-study books for the coming winter show the many open doors in Japan, and tell in a fascinating manner of the fight that is going on in that land between the steadily growing forces of the Christian influence and the old militaristic spirit. Read "Creative Forces in Japan" and "The Woman and the Leaven in Japan," and receive a new vision of missionary triumphs in Japan.

There are also great triumphs on the home field. Denominations are working together better, and more work is being done. Our own Church is just beginning co-operating with the work with the American Indians, by sending Miss Elizabeth Howsare, a Defiance graduate of last spring, as a teacher in their work.

Five young people are ready to go, or have gone to Japan and Porto Rico for the Christian Church this year. Write to Dr. Atkinson for the leaflet, "They are Ready," and read of their lives and pray in your society for their usefulness and successful service.

PLANS FOR THE MEETING.

Secure information about our own missionary work through Dr. J. O. Atkinson, Elon College, N. C., or Dr. W. P. Minton, Christian Publishing Association, Dayton, Ohio, for this meeting. Much information can be secured from the Christian Missionary which will make this meeting interesting and helpful. Have this information presented in story form as much as possible, getting people so interested in the missionary work that they will just talk about it informally, instead of just reading clippings. By giving the material out in advance, this can be done, and the meeting be made much more interesting.

If your Church has a young people's missionary society, get the officers of that society to plan a special program for this Christian Endeavor missionary meeting. These societies should work very closely together, for their work is much alike, and both are vitally interested in presenting the missionary message in a way that it will grip the young people, and enlist their giving of money, prayers and life to the great work of the Church toward evangelising the whole world.

Questions for Thought and Discussion.—Is our Church a missionary Church? What missionary work is it doing? Is our Sunday School a missionary Sunday School? How can it become more missionary? How can we come to know more of missions ourselves? Why should our Christian Endeavor Society be very interested in missionary triumphs at home and abroad?

Suggested Hymns.—"The Whole Wide World for Jesus," "My Jesus, I Love Thee," "Onward, Christian Soldiers," "Missionary Doxology," "I am Happy in the Service of the King."

JUNIOR CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC.

SEPTEMBER 30, 1923.

TOPIC: "Children in Africa."—Isa. 9:2.

Every month we have been having one meeting to study children in other lands, from China to India, and from Alaska to our own cities and country places. Everywhere we find boys and girls, much like us because they eat and sleep and play, but very different in the kind of houses they live in and the kind of things they have to do. Today we are glad that (Isa. 9:2) the boys and girls, who lived in the darkness of Africa, many of them, have seen a great light, because men and women have gone to them with the story of Jesus and His helpers.

Ask your superintendent to send to Mrs. Emma Powers, C. P. A. Building, Dayton, Ohio, and get from her the picture, "The Hope of the World," and the leaflet that goes with it, "They Love Him, Too," and read the stories of the children all over the world. (Cost 45 cents). There you will hear about the little boy from Africa who heard the story, and saw the great light, and you will know again that—

"Jesus loves the little children,
All the children of the world—
Red, and yellow, black and white,
All are precious in His sight:
Jesus loves the little children of the world."

THE IDEAL SUNDAY SCHOOL.

[NOTE.—North Carolina Sunday School workers are coming to look forward with eager interest to the annual messages delivered by their president, C. H. Stephenson, of Raleigh, at the annual North Carolina Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention. The following message was delivered at Catawba Springs, Wednesday, July 11th, and voted published, because the members of the Convention felt that it would be read with interest and profit by Sunday School workers throughout the North Carolina Conference and the Southern Christiana Convention. The Board of Religious Education is glad to have it for publication in THE SUN.—L. M. E.]

MY FRIENDS:

Those of you who attended the Convention last year remember that I talked to you in my annual address about "Heart Service." As a logical outgrowth of the message of 1921, which was based on "Loyalty," we found that "heart service" is the way to every Sunday School's success. This year I want to carry the same thought one step further, and present to you my conception of "The Ideal Sunday School," notwithstanding the fact that a friend of mine, when asked to define the ideal Sunday School, remarked that no such thing existed. But to me the ideal Sunday School is the natural third step. It is the final achievement growing out of loyalty, through heart service.

Then, what are the necessary elements of the ideal Sunday School, or Christian Endeavor Society?

First of all we must have interest.

We live in an age of advertising and keen competition. Before any business concern can sell its wares, it must compete with other firms in its field, in attracting the attention of the public. Corporaions use every conceivable method for this purpose. An interested public means prospective customers. This is done through the newspapers, the magazines, and the moving pictures, through billboard advertising, and the like.

Before a speaker can drive home a message to his audience, he must secure their interest. Before a promoter can interest a client in his schemes, he must draw his attention and arouse his interest.

And so it is in the Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Society. Before we can hope to build up an ideal school or society, we must have the interest of the people within and without the organization. We must make people talk about us, and have them become concerned in our respective schools. This can be done in many ways.

The big Churches of the country have taken one lesson from big business concerns, and have begun to advertise extensively, both in the newspapers and by means of billboards. Billy Sunday is today perhaps as good an advertiser as William Wrigley.

At first, orthodox Church people rather abhorred the idea of putting the Church in the newspaper and flashing in on the screen, but we are coming to realize more and more that the Church, like every other organization, must compete with all institutions that seek to draw men's attention, in order to do its full duty in arousing the interest of people every where in the great work that it has to do.

And so, the first step that I suggest for your consideration is this: Arouse the interest of all the people in your community in what you are doing; both those who are in the Sunday School, whether active or inactive, and those who are without the Sunday School, whether intentionally or unintentionally.

Then, when you have secured attention and aroused interest in your school, you are ready for my second step, which is determination.

Determination is, to me, one of the finest qualities of which a Sunday School can boast. It is interest intensified and made dynamic. It is interest directed to a fixed purpose, or toward a fixed goal.

Determination is resolution to serve and to achieve; and we need it most when things seem most adverse, and when the Sunday School is fighting for its very life.

Then it is that those vitally interested should manifest such determination in putting their program across as to attract the attention and enlist the interest of those who have been careless, indifferent or inactive. I think the stamp of determination governs almost exclusively the measure of a Sunday School's success.

If we go into this business of interesting all the good people of North Carolina in active Sunday School service halfheartedly and without determination, then our fate is marked out for us before we begin. But if we resolve at this Convention to show our interest in our respective schools and societies to make them to go, and to grow, and to glow (as Mr. Marion Lawrence puts it), both individually and collectively, then the Sunday Schools and Christian Endeavor Societies of North Carolina can look forward to a year of real achievement and can report a vast progress to the Convention of 1924.

Speaking of progress, I wonder if you realize the wonderful progress that North Carolina has made in the past ten years. Recent statistics show that our cotton mills have increased in capital $95,000,000, and in output $178,200,000. Our knitting mills show an increase in capital of $32,100,000, and in output of $21,000,000. Our furniture factories show an increase in capital of $7,000,000, and in output $19,000,000. Our State banks, exclusive of the national banks, show an increase of $180,000,000, while our building and loan has more than doubled itself in organizing, and show an increase of $41,000,000, or 40 per cent per year, and is patronized by 100,000 citizens. Now, how do these figures compare with our Sunday School progress?

Five years ago, at Shallow Well Christian Church, we held our first North Carolina Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention. At that time we had 92 Sunday Schools in the State. Thirty-five of these schools were represented by 101 delegates, 17 ministers and 7 superintendents. Later, we received enough reports to make the total 47 schools.

Today we have 100 schools in the State—a gain of 8 scholarships in five years—and so far we have reports from 43 schools which are represented by 88 delegates, 18 ministers and 11 superintendents. Some progress! you say, and I must agree with you; but it reminds me of a little incident I read a few days ago.

A government inspector was sent to Ireland to seek out illicit stills. As he was a new man on the job, he was particularly anxious to make good, and so he decided to try to bribe one or two men to give information. After visiting a factory, he called two or three of the hands to him and said: "I will give five pounds to the man who can show me a private still." One man said that he could, so the two set out to find it. They walked for miles and miles over broken ground until a town came in sight. Just before they reached the town they came to some barracks. "This is the place," remarked the guide to the inspector, and they climbed over the wall. In the yard, a squad was being drilled, and the Irishman, pointing his finger to one of the soldiers, said to his companion: "You see that man in the last row? He is my brother, and has been in the army twenty years—and is a private still."

Now, I ask you, in all earnestness, if your Sunday School or Christian Endeavor Society is a "private still"—just where you were ten or twenty years ago? Honestly and candidly, don't you think we have too many "private still" Sunday Schools in the bounds of this Convention, and especially when it comes to getting up a report and attending the Convention? Don't you think it is high time for promotion, or do you think that some of our Sunday School superintendents would do well to subscribe to an undertaker's magazine, and learn how to put away dead things?

Do you realize that of the two million white people in North Carolina, only 621,502 are enrolled in the Sunday Schools? Only one in three! Why not back up the slogan of the North Carolina State Association, and do our denominational part in winning the "other two-thirds?" Why have the Sunday Schools and Christian Endeavor Societies of this Convention been so slow in making the progress they should make? Simply because up to this time we have not been possessed of the spirit of determination in our efforts to interest actively those outside the Church and Sunday School in our cause.

But interest and determination are not all. They alone would be relatively ineffective without my third suggestion, which is equipment.

And by equipment, I would not limit the term to physical equipment, although this is very important, but I also include mental and spiritual equipment.

When the first colonist to this country landed at Jamestown, in 1607, the first thing he did was to build a crude shelter to protect him from the weather, and the second thing was to build another shelter under which Almighty God could be worshiped, according to the dictates of their own conscience, and where the colonists could thank Him for their deliverance from the restrictions and persecutions of the Established Church of England. Crude though it was, they felt the need of equipment. And every institution, organized for business or for pleasure or for the advancement of God's kingdom, to this good day, has been forced to provide equipment before progress could be made, and the better the equipment, the greater the possibility of success. To have good Sunday Schools and Christian Endeavor Societies, we must have good equipment. We must have good houses, good auditoriums, and good class-rooms. They must be well-furnished for convenience and comfort. It is not necessary that our equipment be expensive or elaborate, but we should give more attention to making it both convenient and comfortable. By convenient I mean that we should install the most improved class-room arrangements, so as to keep all classes separated and provide them with a table, blackboard, illustrations and adequate lesson helps. By comfortable, I mean that our rooms should conform in their size and furnishings to the type and age of the pupils that use them. For the small classes we should provide small chairs, and in the kindergarten send boxes, lesson toys, etc.

Furthermore, the Sunday Schools of North Carolina should place more emphasis on keeping their equipment in good repair. In business, when a filing cabinet, a show-case, or a delivery truck is broken, it is promptly repaired, and charged to overhead. Similarly, in the Sunday School, all equipment should be kept in strict repair all the time. Our properties should be improved by repainting and replastering, because this is a fundamental principle of good business.

Furthermore, we must improve our mental equipment. And to this, I call the especial attention of the teachers present. Too frequently teachers are prone to go into their class-room with only a scant knowledge of the facts related, and the meaning conveyed by the lesson. If they would take more time to increase their mental equipment by studying their history, and the significance of the lesson, they would be able to portray it more vividly to the class, and thereby make a more permanent impression on the plastic minds, which it is the teacher's duty and privilege to shape.

And not only this, but our Sunday Schools today need better spiritual equipment. This comes through prayer, study, and constant contact with God's institutions, and from constant service in them. Moses, the great statesman, leader, and law-giver, showed interest and determination when he turned aside to see the great sight, to see "why the burning bush was not consumed," but it was through constant communion with God that he received his spiritual equipment.

Havnig acquired interest, determination and good physical, mental and spiritual equipment, I would next suggest a theme that I have mentioned before—activity.

Probably the greatest need of the Sunday Schools of this State for the year 1923-24 is more action. Let me call your attention to Mr. Roger Babson's report on the statistics of the Church, showing that in this great investment of something like one billion nine hundred thousand dollars, the real work is being done by 4 per cent of its membership. What a comment on the inactivity of the Church, when only one in every twenty-five who professes to be an active member is carrying the load! Think what would result if we could have 50 or 75 per cent of the membership of the Sunday Schools and Christian Endeavor Societies actively at work in the Church for the betterment of society and the saving of souls for the Master. It would be easy then to win the other two-thirds, and to realize John R. Mott's dream of the conversion of America by 1930. It would be easy to do more than this, and realize Sherwood Eddy's vision of having every family in America eventually actively participating in some religious organization.

It is activity that succeeds in industry. It is activity, for which another name is "work," that makes the world turn round; and it is activity that must characterize all the schools of this Convention if we are to do a really great work in the coming year. It is activity that spells success. It is activity in your school that prevents stagnation and death. It is activity that we must have to buttress our interest, determination and equipment that must be the foundation rock of the Sunday School of tomorrow.

And, finally, we come to the last essential or step to the ideal Sunday School (or Christian Endeavor Society).

It is the step that I urged in 1921, and it is, to me, the finest thing in life. It is loyalty! That thing which has been the keystone to all the great world movements of the past. Loyalty for the right is the strongest single current in the world today. In the many distractions that flourish in this good day of ours, it will be easy enough to swerve from the straight and narrow path if we do not fortify the Sunday Schools and Christian Endeavor Societies and our individual lives with sufficient loyalty to withstand any attack. Have we not too often let personal inconveniences and petty obstacles keep us from our obvious duty, simply because we were not loyal to the welfare of our school. Too many times have we missed Sunday School or failed to meet our Christian Endeavor obligation all because we were not charged with enough of this spirit of loyalty to stand the test.

"Tired of the job and ready to quit,
Not quite sick, and not quite fit;
Not a chance to make a hit.
And yet you stick—that is the test.

"Harrassed you are with petty details,
Helpers scarce and slow as snails;
All too light in God's great scales.
And yet you stick—that is the test.

"Teachers are few and not easy to find,
Pupils are late, and do not mind,
School's equipment lags behind.
And yet you stick—that is the test."

My friends, in the activities of your Sunday School and your Christian Endeavor Society, will your life stand the acid test? Are you in reality loyal?

As I have said before, our lives are made up of myriads of conflicting desires and inclinations; and what we need most of all is some dominating cause which centralizes our activities and gives unity and purpose to our naturally confused and chaotic natures. And what finer cause could there be to exemplify and embody our loyalty than the Sunday School? The Sunday School where all the emphasis is placed on formation rather than reformation, where the child, from infancy up, is carefully guarded through the age of doubt, and then given task to perform that will require him the rest of his life to properly complete. The Sunday School that is the working right arm of the Church, and the supreme institution, in my mind, in all the world, for giving a man unity and stability in his every-day life. I believe it satisfies, as nothing else, the various needs of our intricate natures. It furnishes a personal solution for the hardest of human problems by simply giving us a big cause to serve; that will harmonize our lives and give us a higher record than comes from earthly activities.

This, my friends, is the goal of the "ideal Sunday School."

It is a goal worthy of our supreme effort. It is a goal that challenges each of us to return to our respective schools all over the State, and to renew our energy.

First.—In securing the interest of all the people in the big work we have to do.

Second.—To secure their determination to help solve this big problem of winning the other two-thirds.

Third.—To acquire and maintain the proper physical, mental and spiritual equipment.

Fourth.—To increase the general activity in our cause.

Fifth.—And, finally, to inspire loyalty in the greatest of all institutions for realizing here the fulfillment of the great Builder's command when He said: "Go, ye, into all the world and establish My Church."

LEONARD—PICKARD.

A wedding of much interest throughout the State was solemnized here September 8th, at 7 A. M., in the home of Mrs. S. M. Pickard, when her daughter, Mamie, became the bride of Mr. Grady Leonard. Rev. Britton J. Howard, of the Christian Church, officiated, using the impressive ring service.

The home was artistically decorated with roses and ferns. An improvised altar of white, laden with ferns and roses, furnished an attractive background. The room was safely lighted by candles, which rested on white pedestals covered with ferns.

The bridal party entered while Miss Annie Lee Webb played Lohengrin's "Wedding March." During the ceremony, she played very softly McDowell's "To a Wild Rose." Mendelssohn's "Wedding March" was used as the recessional.

The bride was becomingly gowned in a cut-steel, beaded dress of gray flat crepe, with accessories to match. She carried a large bouquet of Bride roses and fern. The maid of honor, Miss Maggie Pickard, a sister of the bride, wore a beaded navy-blue satin crape. The bridemaids, Misses Grace Neville and Rachel Fowler, wore dresses of ring-bearer, little P. R. Perry, Jr., a Spanish lace and Canton crepe. The nephew of the bride, was adorably sweet in a suit of white linen. The ring was carried in a pink rose.

The groomsmen were Messrs. Clyde Brooks, of Greensboro; Leary Peele Poythress, of Charlotte, and Glenn Turner Sykes, of Mebane.

The bride is the daughter of Mrs. S. M. Pickard, of this place. She is a graduate of Elon College, and for several years served as a most capable teacher for the State. At present she holds a responsible position at the university as secretary to Dr. E. C. Bronson.

The groom comes from Lexington. He graduated at the University of North Carolina in June of this year, and since that time has been engaged in Y. M. C. A. work, with headquarters in Durham, N. C.

Immediately after the ceremony they left for a motor trip to the mountains of Western North Carolina. Upon their return, they will be at home in Chapel Hill.

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT.

When the gentle spirit of Mrs. Frances Oldham took its flight to the land of the endless day, Antioch Christian Church (Chatham County) and the Workers' Council lost one of their oldest, most true, and devoted members.

Although unable to attend Church or the council meetings for the past two years, she did not cease to hold both sacred in her heart's memories.

We are sure the angels rejoiced when she stood before her Father's throne and heard Him say: "Insomuch as thou hast been faithful in a few things, I will make thee ruler over many things. Enter thou into the joys of thy Lord."

Now that she has gone from our midst, be it resolved:

First, That our loss is Heaven's gain. God is wise, great and good, and doeth all things for the best.

Second, The Church and council now has a vacancy never to be filled; that her noble character and unselfish life be an inspiration to the other members in rendering service to God and our fellowman.

Third, That we express our heartfelt sympathy to the family and point them to the living God that taketh away the sins of the world.

Fourth, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the begrieved family, a copy placed upon the minutes of the council, a copy sent to each The Christian Sun and the Chatham Record for publication.

WILLIAMS.

Luanna C. Brown-Williams was born September 6, 1891; died May 29, 1923, aged 31 years 8 months and 29 days. She made a confession of faith at an early age and united with the Christian Church at Union Grove, and has remained a member of that Church to the time of her death.

She was united in marriage September 28, 1919, with H. O. Williams. To this union were born two children—Edna Marie, aged 2½ years, and H. O., Jr., aged 5 weeks. She leaves to mourn their loss her husband, father and one brother.

Mrs. Williams, stricken down in early middle life, as she was, still desired to live for the purpose of rearing her children, but was entirely reconciled, and died in the same faith in God which she professed in early life. Service was held at Pleasant Ridge by Rev. H. Russell Clem, assisted by Rev. Mr. Green.

THE SUN'S OBSERVATORY

Shameful!—

Recreation for young and old in the Church is about to be overdone rather than underdone in these strenuous times. More thought seems to be expended in providing entertainment and amusement for the members, especially the young, than providing means for the growth of the soul. This is a delicate question and needs proper and careful handling. Some phases of the amusement problem need to be looked after by parents in the home as well as by those who feel solicitude about the morals and religious life of our young people. One of the growing evils of the times is the familiarity of the sexes. The Scout recreation, the camping expeditions, the half-nakedness at the bathing pools are not conducive to decent morals, much less any religious tendency. The idea of the going out of young girls and young men in Scout camps at night, and having a week's company out in the woods of girls and boys, and men and women bathing together in pools and streams, even under the sanction of the Church, will be more conducive to deviltry than to piety. It is time to call a halt, for, with the present impetus toward the bad, it will not take a score of years to reveal the pitiful condition that virtue is only a name among us.

What Say You?—

It is indeed painful to the better-thinking part of the Church membership to read accounts of dances that are attended by some of our young people from the best Methodist homes in the State. It is seldom that one can look through the society columns of our daily papers without feeling that a number of our people, and some of them the very best of people, so far forget the eternal fitness of things as to allow their children to indulge in this questionable pastime. A recent exchange says of the dance:

"The dance never has been associated with the purest and best in life. The dancing Church members are not the true children of God, nor are they the soul-winners for Christ. This form of recreation never creates a Christian—it discreates a Christian and produces a sensualist. It will not make it easier for young people to lead purer lives nor increase their love for the service to God and man. The crying need of the hour is more deep-seated religion. The Church must become active against the gigantic social evil and lust of the individual."

Anything that will not promote the interest of the kingdom of God or make better men and women must not be tolerated by the Church that was bought at such a great price.

"Tie Them On to the Chnurch."—

The North Carolina Christian Advocate speaks some very plain words along a much-needed line when it says:

"In recent years a number of preachers and Church leaders have been discussing ways and means for holding the young people, or, as it is sometimes expressed, 'Tie them on to the Church.' It has been suggested that moving-picture machines be placed in the Church. Some Churches have installed bowling-alleys, organized basketball teams, established radio or industrial clubs, none of which is to be despised, if properly handled. But, so far as we have been informed, none of these things have been able to hold those for whom it was intended. The fact of the case is, when young people want these kind of amusements they will not go to the Church for them. They will go where these things properly belong, and that place certainly is not the Church. As to this kind of amusements in the Church, Dr. John Hall said truly and wisely: 'A Church has no vocation to provide amusements. They may be necessities, like French clocks or other luxuries to some people, but the Church has not been called into existence to provide them. There are very few cases of a Church operating in the entertainment line and strengthening itself as a Church thereby. Far more frequently it holds the people while it amuses only; and when it forsakes the operatic, theatrical, spectacular, or sociable and returns to its proper business, the constituents go where they can get the real thing for which end the feeble imitation prepared them.'

"The business of the Church is of far more importance to men than to amuse. It deals in eternal things. Men want to flee to the Church when in distress. They need and want something that this world cannot give. 'Silver and gold have I none, but such as I have give I unto thee,' said the apostle, and he took the poor man by the right hand and commanded that he rise and walk. It is that which is far above silly amusements. It is that which satisfies, and gives peace and joy. 'I, and if I be lifted up from the earth will draw all men unto Me.' Wherever Jesus is, and His disposition is manifest and where His love is supreme there will be no need of any outside amusements to attract the crowd. Let the Church remain true to its one business, the preaching of the Gospel to every creature, teaching them to observe all things whatsoever He has commanded, and there need be no fear about the crowd."

Mending Broken Homes.—

We find the following in the Literary Digest, which we believe will be of especial interest to our SUN readers:

Broken homes mended, mothers saved from the loss of their children, children assured a better chance in life—these, we are told, are some of the results of "mothers' pension" laws now in force in all but six States, two States having been added this year. How these beneficent laws are administered and the chief causes leading to calls for public aid are described in a recent report issued by the United States Department of Labor, through the children's bureau, on "Standards of Public Aid to Children in their Own Homes." Communities in six States were studied as being representative of communities varying from the large city to the rural hamlet. The death of the father of the family compelled the mother to seek aid in three-fourths of the cases studied, and in about one-fifth of the cases it was the father's illness or other incapacity which led the mother to seek the benefit of the pension law. In the communities studied, aid was granted for 3,049 children to the amount of $41,781, the monthly average per child for the different communities varying from $19.68 to $10.17. The public aid granted was usually supposed, we are told, to cover the deficit between the family budget, as estimated, and the family resources, though in four of the six States visited a maximum was fixed by law beyond which the administrative body could not go, no matter how great the need. Food estimates for a woman or girl over sixteen, as put down in the family budget, varied from $12.35 to $9.78 a month; for young children, the estimates are several dollars less. Estimates for clothing allow a woman at home from $5.75 to $2 a month, and children at home somewhat less. In many cases, the mothers and children had suffered from low standards of living, and in these the agencies "aimed to bring the families up to par physically, to suggest the best methods of household management, to advise about the recreation of children, and to act as friends of the lonely mother." Perhaps the most interesting part of the report is the chapter devoted to "What the aid meant to the children." Often it meant the difference between despair and a chance. For example, we read:

"The 'S' family came to the attention of the officials administering allowances through the school. The teachers reported that the children were irregular in attendance, habitually tardy, and that they were poorly clothed and appeared to be neglected. Their school work was poor, and they frequently fell asleep over their lessons. Investigation showed that the father had died the year before, leaving little to his wife and four small sons except the heavily mortgaged ramshackle house in which they lived. They earned a scanty living by selling papers. The mother was frail, and she and the children were out in all kinds of weather, often in rain-soaked shoes and too thin clothing. They were up early in the morning to sell and were often out until late at night. They were given aid. Six years later, the writer saw them in a comfortable, home-like flat. The oldest boy held a fairly good position and was going to night school. One boy was in high school, and the others had good high school records."

NOTES-PERSONALS

The Elon letter this week has a proposition for our brotherhood.

The work of the earthquake in Japan, September 1st, is appalling. So far as we have heard, none of our missionaries were lost, but we are fearing that much of the property belonging to our mission was wrecked.

Rev. W. S. Long, D. D., and Mrs. Long have been of late stopping for a season of rest and recuperation at Connelly Springs. We wish them a most profitable stay and a safe return to their home at Chapel Hill, N. C.

Rev. J. L. Foster, Waverly, Va., was recently a visitor at Elon College, N. C., spending several days here. His many friends were glad to see him, looking well and ready for any hard task that may claim his attention.

Rev. Jas. H. Lightbourne and his Holland Church in Virginia are getting ready to entertain the next session of the Eastern Virginia Christian Conference, which will meet there on Tuesday before the first Sunday in November. Holland is one of our active Churches, and will provide well for the Conference and its visitors.

Rev. P. T. Klapp spent a part of last week and this with the Church at Mebane, N. C., visiting among the people. He is to retire from this pastorate at the end of the present Conference year, some time in November. Bro. Klapp is open to engagement with some other Church for next year, and the Church at Mebane will need a pastor for the next Conference year.

Bro. C. D. Johnston, superintendent of the Christian Orphanage, is talking sense in this issue. Read what he says and see if you do not agree with him; and if you do, then treat him in this matter as you would wish to be treated by him if your positions were reversed—that is, if he were in your position and you were in his. It is the man who wears the shoe that is too small that feels the pinch.

The opening of Bethlehem College, at Wadley, Ala., on September 12th, marked a new era, as we trust, in the work of our people in Georgia and Alabama. The school, a junior college, opened with forty students and a large attendance of visitors who came to bid the student body godspeed in the good work they were undertaking. Let us rejoice with our brethren in the future South.

Rev. G. C. Crutchfield, who has served the Palm Street Church at Greensboro, N. C., for the last several years, declines further service there, and is open to engagement for pastoral work elsewhere. He has done a good work there, and we believe will serve well the Church that may give him a call for next year. If you need him you will do well to act promptly, or another may secure him. His address is Elon College, N. C.

A telegram was received in Elon College by Rev. W. C. Wicker, D. D., on Friday morning, September 21st, announcing the death of the wife of Rev. W. G. Clements, at Morrisville, N. C., on Thursday night, September 20th. The funeral will be held in Morrisville, N. C., on Sunday, September 23rd. Sister Clements had been in declining health for several years. She had nobly and faithfully served her day and generation as a pastor's wife and the mother of a large family of children. Now she goes to her reward full of years of blessing. Bro. Clements is now aged and a cripple. He will miss the companionship of the one who has walked life's way with him through many long years, who has always put her shoulder under the burdens as they have come and helped him to face the future full of hope and courage. A host of friends and loved ones will extend to Bro. Clements a deep and abiding sympathy in this hour of sorrow.

Do not forget the opening of the new Christian Church in Richmond, Va., next Sunday, September 30th. A large attendance is expected, and it is hoped many of our friends will be able to attend. Dr. Walters is to be congratulated on the good work of himself and his people in getting ready the new building in such a short time. It is a very handsome Church edifice, judging from the picture of the building. We wish they may have a good day and a fine opening. It marks a new era in our Virginia work.

As showing the interest of our people in the new enterprise of Bethlehem College, we have a letter from Rev. E. M. Carter, of Wadlev, Ala., saying that on the opening day they had a host of visitors, and among them were visitors from Kite, Ga.; La Grange, Ga.; Columbus, Ga.; Brannon, Ala.; Roanoke, Ala.; Lanett, Ala.; Wedowee, Ala., and other places. That is a mark of general interest in the good work. We are indeed grateful for the privilege of knowing the interest in that institution is so widespread and growing. Let us all lend a helping hand now that the general work there is so hopeful. They very much need $5,000 just now to relieve the strain that building has brought on them, and Rev. G. D. Hunt is asking for 1,000 men and women to give $5 each to help them. Do not wait for a further call, but send your $5 to Rev. G. D. Hunt, financial secretary, Wadley, Ala. Do it now, while you are thinking about it, or you may forget it.

The Franklinton Christian College (colored) is one of the most promising institutions among the colored people of the Christian Church. Its president, Rev. J. A. Henderson, is a man of character and ability, and is doing a good work there, but he needs more help in the great work which is resting on his heart and mind. They need a new building, and need it very badly This is not due to the fact that the old building is serving its purpose all right, but it is due to the fact that the institution is growing and needs larger facilities in order to take care of the work and at the same time make it possible to open the way for the education of many more of the colored people for whose benefit the institution was brought into existence and for whom it has been maintained all these years. If we mistake not, Rev. J. L. Foster is a member of the board of control; at any rate, he is giving a good bit of his time personally to looking after its affairs, for which he deserves the thanks of our people, North and South.

Rev. G. D. Hunt, the financial secretary of BethlehemCollege, Wadley, Ala., is calling upon the entire brotherhood of the Christian Church—North and South, East and West—for help for that worthy institution. He wishes 1,000 men and women to give $5 each to this new and promising institution. That would turn into the treasury the sum of $5,000 and would immediately put Bethlehem College on its feet, ready to do its best work. That it should be so, is to the interest not only of the Christian Church in Georgia and Alabama, but it would be a blessing to the entire brotherhood throughout the United States. THE CHRISTIAN SUN will be one of the 1,000 to give the $5, and we now call on our people generally to come to the help of that institution. If helped now, it will mean the strength of our cause in Georgia and Alabama mightily re-enforced and the cause of Christ in that part of His moral vineyard will be greatly enlarged. We surely have a thousand men who can give $5 to this good work! Let it be done, and let us do it quickly.

We are glad to report to our brethren of THE SUN family that the last news from Dr. W. W. Staley is most gratifying. The operation was performed on Saturday, September 15th, and was a complete success, so far as could be judged. It is hoped that he will soon be himself again and be able to return to his home in suffolk, Va. We hope to get later news in time for this issue.

Later.—We have news from Dr. Staley's bedside, in the Lawrence Hospital, at Winston-Salem. On Wednesday, September 19th, he was doing, the doctors seemed to think, as well as could be expected. He is, of course, very weak and yet suffers much pain, but those who know his condition best, seem to feel that the outlook for complete recovery is good. Dr. Staley was operated on under the new surgery system, which requires only a local application of the anaesthetic, and so he was not put to sleep at all. The operation itself was not painful, for when it had been completed he thought they were only getting ready to make the major operation, and the doctors told him it was all completed. Of course, after it was all over, he had much pain. That could not be avoided, but it seems little less than marvelous that the operation could be performed while he was awake and with so little pain that the patient thought they were only getting ready to do the work. Let the prayers of the Church be continued in his behalf.

RICHMOND CHURCH OPENING.

All things are being shaped up for the opening of the First Christian Church of Richmond, September 30th. The new Hall organ has already been installed, carpenters, painters, plumbers and electric-light men are putting the finishing touches on the auditorium this week. The pews and carpet are in the building ready to be put in place. We will have everything complete for the opening services. We are arranging for three services.

Dr. Roy C. Helfenstine will preach in the morning, and Dr. Atkinson and Mrs. W. H. Carroll, representing the mission boards, will also speak.

Dr. L. E. Smith will preach in the afternoon, and the following speakers will bring words of greeting: Governor E. Lee Trinkle, Rev. J. J. Scherer, Jr., Lutheran; Rev. L. J. Powell, Baptist; Rev. Wm. E. Cox, Episcopal; Dr. H. D. C. McLachlan, Disciple; Dr. Geo. E. Booker, Methodist, and Dr. Russell Cecil, Presbyterian.

Mr. Ernest G. Carr will preside at the organ, and the following quartet will sing: Mrs. James C. Dodd, Miss Daisy Smith, Mr. W. E. Bethel, and Mr. Wm. R. Harton. Miss Nell Richardson Dodson will give a violin solo at the evening service. Dr. J. O. Atkinson will preach the evening sermon. Members will be received at the morning session.

A cordial invitation is extended THE SUN's readers to attend the opening. If you cannot come, and want to have part in the services, you may send a contribution and thus help a small congregation that has struggled hard to establish the Christian Church in the capital of the State of Virginia. VIRGINIA CHRISTIAN CONFERENCE.

The annual business meetings of our Churches will soon be held, and at them the delegates to the annual Conference will be elected. It will greatly help the entertainment committee of the Holland Church if you will send us, as soon as you can, the names of all delegates desiring entertainment overnight. Be sure, too, to send with the names any other information necessary for our guidance in the allotment of homes.

THE BROKEN LINK.

In the beginning was the word, and the word was with God, and the word was God; and God created the heaven and the earth and all that was in it, and God said, "Let us make man in our image after our likeness." So God created man in His own image—in the image of God created he him. Male and female created he them. And the Lord God took the man and put him into the Garden of Eden to dress it and to keep it; and the Lord commanded the man, saying, "Of every tree of the garden thou mayest freely eat; but of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil thou shalt not eat of it, for in the day that thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die."

But along came the devil, in the form of a serpent, and said: "Ye shall not surely die, for God doth know that in the day ye eat thereof then your eyes shall be opened, and ye shall be as God, knowing good and evil." And here the woman yielded to the temptation and eat of the fruit from the forbidden tree and gave to her husband, and he did eat also. This was the first fall of man, and he has been falling ever since. Some one has said God lost all in the fall of Adam, and I am inclined to believe that also, for God tried out three plans after the fall of Adam to redeem His people. Let us see what these plans were. And God saw that the wickedness of man was great in the earth and that every imagination of the thought of His heart was only evil continually, and it repented the Lord that He had made man on the earth, and it grieved Him at His heart. And the Lord said, "I will destroy man, both man and beast, and every thing that He had created, for it repenteth Me that I have made them."

But Noah came along and found grace in the eyes of the Lord, and asked God to spare the lives and give them another chance. And all that believed were saved. But it wasn't long until they forgot the flood and began to drift away from God again. And God said: "I will give them a commandment; maybe they will keep this. So here is where Moses won fame as a leader. On Mount Sinai God delivered to Moses what is known as the Mosaic law. Did they expect this plan? No, they did not. Then God said I have one more plan. And the prophets began to tell the people of this last plan, that they might be ready to accept it when it was presented to them. What was this last plan? A certain man planted a vineyard and let it forth to husbandmen and went into a far country for a long time, and at the season he sent a servant to the husbandmen that they should give him of the fruit of the vineyard; but the husbandmen beat him and sent him away empty. And again he sent another servant, and they beat him also; and again he sent a third, and they wounded him also and cast him out. Then said the lord of the vineyard, "What shall I do? I will send My beloved Son; it may be they will reverence him when they see him." But when the husbandmen saw him they reasoned among themselves, saying this is the heir; come, let us kill him, that the inheritance may be ours. So they cast him out of the vineyard and killed him. What, therefore, shall the Lord of the vineyard do unto them? He shall come and destroy these husbandmen and shall give the vineyard to others. Who did he give the vineyard to? Lo! to the Gentiles. Many, many thanks to my Creator for this. John says He came unto his own, and His own received Him not; but as many as received Him to them gave He power to become the sons of God, even to them that believe on His name.

And God, in sending His only begotten Son into the world, gave to us His last plan for our redemption. And Jesus, in bearing the cross to Calvary and there spilling His blood for you and me, made the supreme sacrifice; and there is, and will not be, any other plan given whereby we might be saved. But all that believe upon His name shall be saved, for God so loved the world that He gave His only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in Him shall not perish, but have everlasting life.

"This is the welding process for the broken link."

After the process of welding has been applied to the broken link, God instituted a new Eden for His people. What is this new Eden? When Peter answered Jesus and said, "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God," Jesus answered, "Blessed art thou, Simon Barjona, for flesh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee, but My Father which is in Heaven, and I say also unto thee that thou art Peter, and upon this rock I will build My Church, and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it."

This Church is the new Eden. And God intended for this Church to be kept separate and apart from the world—and He built a strong fence around it—in order for it to be kept separate and apart from the world; He built this strong hedge around His Church, and this fence represents the Holy Ghost. And in order to be admitted into this Church "Ye must be baptized with the Holy Ghost," and if the Church is to be a saving station we must have the broken link welded before we can have our names recorded in the book of life.

May God add His blessings to this message.

BETHLEHEM AND ANTIOCH.

The members and friends of the Churches have been greatly encouraged by the preaching and pastoral visiting of Rev. J. Fuller Johnson. The third Sunday in this month (September), Bro. Johnson came and preached at Franklinton, and I went to baptize eight or ten happy converts in the Roanoke River, near the boat landing, about midway between these two Churches. I spent Saturday night at the home of Deacon Wall. I stood on a bluff, near the water, and preached to a large congregation just before administering the ordinance. The day was bright and beautiful. The singing was inspiring. I never witnessed better order where so many people had gathered without a bench or chair.

I spent Sunday night at the home of Bro. H. E. Hunt. Mrs. Hunt had four ministers at her supper table—her pastor, Dr. Miller, of the First Baptist Church; Dr. Joyner, of the Episcopal Church; Dr. Malone, of the Baptist Church, and D. A. Long. After supper, all went to the First Baptist Church. Reading by the Episcopal minister, prayer by the Baptist, and preaching by D. A. Long. D. A. LONG.

FROM FRANKLINTON.

DEAR DR. BARRETT:

We are hoping and praying that Bro. Staley will be fully recovered soon. Annie has been very kind and good in trying to keep me informed in regard to her father's condition.

I wish it were possible for Bro. Johnson to serve Antioch and Bethlehem at least another year. The Lord has been with him in power in his labor of love. A few years ago these Churches would hardly pay the housing expense of a minister to go and preach for them. Now, they would pay Bro. $300 per year, and pay promptly, if he will serve another year. Bro. Johnson is a splendid young man for Christ's service. The little flock at this place was delighted with his message last Sunday. D. A. LONG.

THE GREAT METHODIST CHURCH, SOUTH, HAS SPOKEN.

Let us repeat it—the people are waking up, and when they get fully awake, they will decide the fate of modernism. A few weeks ago, in a training school at Junaluska, in a great gathering of the young people, a Canadian preacher undertook to introduce and indoctrinate the youth then present with the teachings of modernism.

Bishop Cannon, of the Southern Methodist Church, promptly repelled the effort, and, of course, made quite a stir among our Methodist brethren. Much has been said and written. Now that the event seems closed, the Richmond Christian Advocate says:

"Since the unfortunate Bland affair, we have heard a number of people knock Junaluska. We must not fight our own institutions, and we hope our people will not let this incident lower that great institution in their estimation.

"We appeal to our people to stand by Junaluska, and we appeal to those who make the programs for those who go there to see to it that they are not given speculations contrary to the teachings of our Church. We spoke out on this matter at first and urged those who were in authority not to let it be repeated. We do not believe it will occur again. The voice of the Church has spoken in unmistakable terms.

"The people who go to Junaluska, in the main, are our young folks, a majority young women, many of whom work for their living and work for the Lord. They are not scholars in the realm of teaching scholarship, and, as we see them, we see very little disturbing thought among them. They need to be grounded in the spiritual things of the word more than in destructive speculation. Whatever place such may have in the halls of universities with technical students, it is out of place here. Let us rally to Junaluska and keep it a great fountain of Methodist faith."

That looks like the M. E. Church, South, sets itself aright as to the teachings of modernism. We believe the most of the denominations will do likewise if given opportunity.

SEEING ONE'S SELF AND THE RESULTS.

There are many circumstances on life's journey which put men and women at a great disadvantage, and that while they do not know that such is their situation. They are thinking quite well of Mr. Self, while his neighbor, seeing the unfavorable circumstances, is discounting him on that account. It was Robert Burns who immortalized this situation by writing the lines, now so often quoted, as follows:

"O wad some power the giftie gie us
To see oursels as others see us!
It wad frae monie a blunder free us

Seeing ourselves as others see us might be more irritating to many of us than seeing the devil himself. As long as we do not see the truth as to our selves, we can put up with the realities of life quite well, but as soon as we get a clear and full view at our own follies and shortcomings, we begin to wish for some means of hiding the ugly spots from our view.

The Richmond Christian Advocate tells of a monkey which got a mirror, and, taking a good look at himself, was terribly offended, even getting into a rage and acting as if he were no more to be consoled—and it all came about by his seeing himself; he was so repulsive that he could not again be satisfied with himself. We are thinking that that monkey has a great many kinfolks—people who would act so much like he did if they should get to see themselves as they really are, and whether they like it or not, that is the one thing needed in their lives. They need to see themselves as they are, and the pity is that so few of us ever get a real good chance—no one has given us a mirror that portrays our own individual idiosyncracies and failures, our follies, and our sins, and so we have a pretty good opinion of Mr. I. Men and women who have never seen themselves as they are, are more than likely to have an unusually good opinion of themselves—and who can blame them? They have never seen themselves except under the glare of their own good opinions, and the effect is quite exaggerated; they get too large an estimate of their own abilities, and at the same time too small an estimate of the abilities of other people, or at least of some other people. The mirror for the monkey did him good, and it will likely do any of us good if we will use it truly and faithfully. It is true, we may be like the monkey was on one point—we may not like what we see—but if there is something ugly in your face or life, you need to see it, and I need to see it. Even though we may be depressed by what we see, there is one thing which may comfort us, and that is the fact that we all need the help of the mirror to show us what is in our own lives that is hindering our highest usefulness in the kingdom of God. It may ruffle our feelings—our vanity—to get a good look at ourselves, but that is what we all need. We do need to see ourselves as we are, not so much as other people see us, though that may help us not a little, but beyond that we need to see ourselves in the light of Christ, for if we see ourselves in the light of Christ we shall get a true estimate of ourselves, and a true estimate of ourselves will be worth more to us than all the criticisms of men.

We often pray that the Lord will help us to see ourselves in the light of Christ, for when we have seen our real self in the light of Christ we shall have an impression that will last us all our days. We may be sure of one thing, viz: That what you see in your life under the light of Jesus Christ is the real thing, for He will not give you a false light on your own face and He will not puff you up with vanity. What Jesus shows you will be your real self, and to know that you have seen your real self under the light of Christ is enough to keep you humble for the balance of your life, provided you keep humble and walk with Him as He calls you to do.

Do you wish Jesus to show you yourself? Then get the paint off your face, so His light shall truly shine on your real face and not on a painted face. When you see a painted face, you do not see the real person. So it is with us, the paint of human ways hinders the revelation of ourselves to ourselves.

"AND YE VISITED ME NOT."

The comfortable and the fortunate people of our common country seldom stop to think of what the conditions of the more unfortunate people are. It was so in the days when Christ was on earth in person, and it is so yet, but when people think of the teachings of Christ, they will, we think, come to see that they have long neglected one of the first duties Christ laid upon His people. To visit the sick and the needy, the discouraged and the unfortunate, the criminal and the "down-and-out," these are some of the higher privileges of the Christian life. Some poor fellow is lying in jail. You call him a jail-bird, but he is simply one who has gone wrong and needs the tender influence of the real Christian life to be thrown around him that he may come back and walk in the straight and narrow way. Think about it, Christians, and say will you help to give that poor fellow another chance in the hope that he may come to Christ and be saved?

The Literary Digest recently gave some valuable suggestions along this line, and it is to be hoped that many may be brought to see their duty toward this unfortunate class and so help them to a better life. The Digest says:

It will be news to many who have read the scores of articles on prison reform to learn that in many parts of our land treatment of prisoners is practically unimproved, despite much propaganda and organized effort in their behalf. Jails, we are told, instead of inspiring the offender with respect for the law and faith in humanity, too often are little more than schools for crime. In meeting out punishment, no consideration is taken of the history of the offender, of the possible causes of his guilt, whether he has had the chance which good morals hold that every child should have, and thus, often times, the punishment does not fit the case. To this day, writes Dr. Hastings H. Hart, president of the American Prison Congress of 1922, the laws of many States and the practice of many courts are based on the idea of inflicting a penalty upon the prisoner proportionate to his guilt. If, for instance, a man steals a purse containing less than $20, that is a misdemeanor, and he is sent to jail or a house of correction for 30, 60 or 90 days. If the purse happens to contain more than $20, that is a felony, and he may be sent to a State prison for one, two or five years. Again, continues Dr. Hart, in Moral Welfare:

"Here are two young men who go out together, steal an automobile and sell it for $200. Each man takes $100 and goes his way. Both are arrested and convicted. They have been guilty of the same crime, from which they have reaped the same amount. The judge gives each of them a sentence of two years, with a lecture upon the enormity of their crime, and we say justice has been done.

"But upon a study of the case, it is found that one of these young men was born in the slums; his father was a thief, his mother was immoral; he ran with the 'gang.' He was not sent to school, but was set to work and his wages were taken by his parents. He had no religious instruction. The other boy was born in a Christian family; his father had abundant means; he went regularly to Church, Sunday School and day school; he had sufficient spending-money and no excuse for wrong-doing. We say the second young man is much more guilty than the first and should receive a severer punishment. But, on further inquiry, we find that this boy's father was too busy getting rich to give attention to his son. He did not know the boy and had no real share in his life. His mother was foolish and injudicious. She flattered him and spoiled him by giving him unnecessary spending-money and concealed his peccadilloes from his father. We say: 'That makes a difference.'"

Prisoners are treated in the mass, without regard to their individuality. Apparently, says Dr. Hart, it is a new discovery that every prisoner is an individual, and that no two are alike in their intelligence, education, training and responsibility. It is only within recent years that we have begun to establish laboratories for the study of the mentality, the moral responsibility and the possibilities of the prisoner. The work is still in its early stages, but it has already revealed extraordinary diversity in prisoners, and from this judges, prosecuting attorneys and wardens are learning many things.

NOTES ON THE BOOKS OF THE BIBLE.

(No. 7.)

JUDGES—THE BOOK OF GREAT DELIVERANCES.

We call the book of the judges one of great deliverances because it sets forth somewhat in detail the great victories which the Lord vouchsafed to His people when they were in peril. These victories He gained through the men whom He had made judges for the purpose of saving them from the peril of their enemies who were constantly threatening the extinction of Israel. In these conflicts, God gave to His people the most wonderful series of deliverances known in human history furnishing an outstanding evidence of His faithfulness to them that look to Him for help.

There were twelve judges named in the book of Judges, as follows:

1. Othniel, who was Caleb's younger brother. He it was who delivered the Israelites from the hands of C ushan-Rishathaim By this deliverance, the land had rest from these enemies for forty years.

2. Ehud was the second judge, and it was by him that the Lord delivered the children of Israel from the oppression of the Moabites and King Eglon. Ehud simply assassinated Eglon and so put him out of power over the Israelites.

3. Shamgar was the third judge so appointed. It was he who delivered Israel from the power of the Philistines by means of an ox-goad, slaying 600 men.

4. Deborah and Barak were the fourth and fifth judges. So it seems clear that away back in the days of Israel the women held some places of public trusts. In this instance, she led the fight against Sisera, and it was by the hand of Jael, a woman, the wife of Heber, that Sisera was killed. Thus another remarkable deliverance was given to God's people.

5. Gideon thus becomes the sixth judge of Israel. He led in the most remarkable of the deliverances of Israelites. The reader will readily recall the test Gideon made before the Lord with reference to the fleece. Another strange thing was the fact that Gideon's army was too strong and had to be thinned out before victory was given him. He had only 300 men to do the work. At first he had 32,000, and the Lord told him to thin them out. By means of excusing all who were fearful and afraid to return to their camps. Ten thousand were left, and the Lord said: "There are yet too many." He again thinned them out by the process of lapping of water, and then only 300 were left, and the Lord sent them with Gideon to victory. We sometimes think we cannot do things unless we are a great host, and that may be true of men, but the Lord can sometimes do great things by the smaller number. Such victories indicate the presence and power of God with His people.

6. Tola was the seventh judge, Jair the eighth, and Jephthah was the ninth judge, and he it was that God used to do wonders in victory for his people. Jephthah was so overcome with gratitude for his victory over the Ammonites that he made a promise which, as many believe, involved the death of his daughter, but others with good reason believe that she was not sacrificed at all, but simply dedicated to a great and noble cause. Judges 11:31, properly translated, gives good ground for this thought. It is claimed by good authority that the last "and" in that verse should be translated "or" and not "and." Then his vow would be free from the awful thought that he must burn his daughter to death. It would also show that he simply promised if the first to meet him on his return should be a member of his family, he would dedicate such an one to the Lord.

7. Ibzan was the tenth judge. The most remarkable thing of this judge is the fact that he is said to have had thirty daughters and thirty sons. No great deliverance is credited to him, but he did do a mighty work in helping to people the earth. Who can estimate what he did?

8. Elon was the eleventh judge, and Abdon was the twelfth judge, neither of whom seems to have done any great things as judges, at least we have no account of their great exploits. Indeed, only six or seven of these judges seem to have been leaders and heroes of real daring.

One fact is very prominent in the Book of Judges, and that is that the story is one of apostacy on the part of Israel, not one time merely, but again and again, and as often as they apostatized, just so often did the Lord permit affliction to befall them, and then they would return unto the Lord in penitence and seek forgiveness, and He would always receive them when they came back to them in a wise way showing their sincerity. Every time Israel sinned in any marked way, so often her enemies triumphed over them. The opposite is true also, for whenever the people of God renewed their allegiance to the Lord, just so soon did He forgive and welcomed them back. The writer of the Book of Judges, whoever he may be, was a true man of God and delivered God's message to the people just as it was given to him—just what ministers ought to do in these days of apostacy from the faith.

The Book of Judges is crowded with most interesting facts and dates, and these are punctuated with the interferences of the hand of God—intervening in behalf of His straying people. The people would go away into sin and live in exile away from God till their oppressors would handle them so roughly that they would come back to God for deliverance, and then He would destroy their enemies and give them rest.

"The International Standard Bible Encyclopedia" gives a sort of a bird's-eye view of the facts, as follows:

The oppression of the Children of Israel by Cushan-Rishathaim, King of Mespotamia (Judges 3:8), and it continued for eight years.

God sent them deliverance by Othniel (Judges 3:11), and then Israel had rest for forty years.

Then came the oppression by Eglon, King of Moab (Judges 3:14), and this oppression lasted for eighteen years.

Deliverance came this time by the hand of Ehud (Judges 3:30), a man especially raised up of God for this very purpose, and then Israel had a long rest of eighty years.

But again Israel went into sin, when Jabin, King of Canaan (Judges 4:3), and oppressed them for twenty years.

Then when Israel cried unto God for help, He sent Barak, a noble and brave leader, to deliver them (Judges 5:21), and by the help of some women he delivered Israel and the Lord gave them rest for forty years.

Then, when they again forgot God, came the oppression of Israel by Midian (Judges 6:1), and this lasted for seven years.

When they repented of their sins, God sent Gideon to deliver them (Judges 8:28), and after Gideon had delivered them they had rest for forty years again, and during this forty years of rest, they were ruled by three kings, as follows:

Abimelech (Judges 9:22), and he ruled for three years.

Then came the judgeship of Tola (Judges 10:2), and it lasted for twenty-three years.

Next, they had Jair for their judge (Judges 10:3), and his rule lasted for twenty-two years.

Again Israel departed from the ways of the Lord, and He permitted the oppression of Philis and Ammonites to come upon them, and again this oppression remained as a burden upon them for eighteen years (Judges 10:8).

Then came that mighty man of valor, Jephthah, and delivered them from the oppression of the Ammonites (Judges 12:7), and for six years they had rest again. Following this period from their deliverance by Jephthah, they had twenty-five years, and in that time they had three rulers over them—(1) Ibzan (Judges 12:9), and he judged Israel for seven years; (2) Elon, who judged Israel for ten years (Judges 12:11); (3) then came Abdon (Judges 12:14), and he ruled for eight years.

By this time, Israel seemed to be getting her head up and turned away from God for sin, and then came another oppressor, Philis (Judges 13:1), and this time this oppression continued for forty years, and when the Israelites got tired of their unfaithfulness, Samson was sent to their rescue, and they had deliverance for twenty years.

That is one of the most interesting periods in the history of that great people. It shows, as perhaps no other period in their history does, how God took care of them as long as they were loyal to Him, and then it also shows that whenever they forgot God and went into sin that almost immediately their oppressors came upon them to their dismay, and they remained in trouble till they saw fit to repent by returning unto God.

We are told that these changes from the ways of truth to the ways of error went on for more than four hundred years. That was a good long session of school, but the Lord meant to teach them some valuable lessons before He was through with this sort of training, and He did it, and His training of this people was for their good. Let us all look into God's dealings with us and see if He does not seek to do us good whenever He permits us to be oppressed; and when the oppression has been enough to bring us to our knees, He always sends a deliverer and sets us free.

Judges is in two parts. 1 Judges, chapters 1:16, which includes the key-verse 2:18, and then from chapter 17 to 21 is the second division, with the key-verse in chapter 21:25. A careful study of the Book of Judges, seeking to find and appropriate its great lessons, will well repay any of us.

Suppose your house were on fire and the fire company were called to put it out, but before they responded they would take the time to calculate their duty according to the requirements, such as call up and find out if it were a false alarm, ascertain the extent of the blaze and how much fighting it would take to overcome it, calculate the distance, and if it were out of reach of a fire plug! All this that they might meet the demand exactly so that they might not do anything more than they were compelled to do, and that they might have as much time as possible for the game of cards they were in, or to sleep a little longer. The fact is that our firemen leap to their feet and, if there is any way of knowing where the fire is, they are there in an inconceivable short time. Isn't this a principle of morals and religion which may apply in our relations to the welfare and hazards of others?

A boy began a career once as an office boy. He was on the job every morning at 5:30 cleaning up, and he stayed until eight—hours after every one else was gone—to see that everything was right. When an employee dropped out, he asked that the job might be given to him. This kind of thing happened several times, until he had several jobs and was saving his firm hundreds of dollars each month. He finally became the director of the firm. How? He did not watch the clock, besides he was willing not only to do more than others, but to work indefinitely to see that things were right around him.

CONTRIBUTIONS

ELON LETTER.

September 30th, "Rally Day," an offering is to be received in all the Churches of the Christian Church for the support of the Board of Christian Education. It is expected that seven thousand dollars will be given on that day for that purpose. Organized classes are asked to send an average of one dollar per member. Every class which does send this liberal amount will receive special recognition. The money should be sent immediately to Dr. J. F. Bennett, C. P. A. Building, Dayton, Ohio, and a letter should accompany it, stating for what purpose it is sent.

The Sunday Schools of the Southern Christian Convention have not heretofore been asked to take part in these annual offerings. We have been receiving the benefit of our field workers at the expense of other sections of our brotherhood. For some time there has been a growing sentiment in favor of participating in the maintenance of these field workers, especially since we have found their work in our midst so helpful.

Our mission board has helped wonderfully in the general mission work, but we have not sent a penny to help in Sunday School, Christian Endeavor, or college work. Many of our people want this changed. We do not wish so good a work to go on and we profiting by it without having part in supporting it.

The Board of Christian Education, the present year, has sent Mr. Hermon Eldredge to the Eastern Virginia Conference for proctically a month of his time. His traveling expenses were paid while in this section, but his salary went on at the board's expense. He also came at no cost whatsoever to the Chautauqua. Besides this, the Board of Christian Education has paid to ministerial students of the Southern Christian Convention the following items: At Elon College, $900; at Yale, $600; at Defiance, $100; at Princeton, $300—a total of $1,900. In addition, two scholarships of $50 each were voted to two of our Southern pastors for summer school work. This means that this board has given us in scholarships $2,000, besides the services and expenses of Mr. Eldredge, amounting to about $500 more—a grand total of $2,500 since January, 1923.

And now, beloved, I call on you to show your appreciation of this generous kindness by making liberal contributions to the cause of Christian Education on September 30th. I believe you will be glad to respond. W. A. HARPER.

I heartily endorse the co-operation of the Sunday Schools and Christian Endeavor Societies of the Southern Christian Convention in the financial support of the Board of Christian Education.

W. T. WALTERS,

Chairman Board of Religious Education, Southern Christian Convention.

THE PRACTICAL USE OF A LIBERAL EDUCATION.

After reading Dr. W. A. Harper's splendid article entitled, "Who Should Come to College?" I was inspired to carry the thought a step farther. Never before was the opportunity of the educated man so great as today. Never before was there such a demand for the trained man, the man who can do a thing superbly well, and never before was ignorance placed at such a disadvantage as today. Everywhere it is the educated, the trained man, the man whose natural ability has been enlarged, enhanced a hundredfold by superior training, that is wanted.

All education which does not elevate, refine, and ennoble its recipient is a curse instead of a blessing. Educated rascality is infinitely more of a menace to society than ignorant rascality. Every year thousands of young men and young women graduate full of ambition and hope, full of expectancy; go out from the schools, the colleges, and universities, with their diplomas, to face for the first time the practical world. There is nothing else, perhaps, which the graduate needs to be cautioned against more than the money-madness which has seized the American people; for, whichever way you turn, the dollar-mark will swing into your vision. Never before was such pressure brought to bear on the trained youth to sell his brains, to coin his ability into dollars, to prostitute his education, as today. The most unfortunate day in a youth's career is that one on which his ideals begin to grow dim and his high standards begin to drop; that day on which is born in him the selfish, money-making germ which so often warps and wrenches the whole nature out of its legitimate orbit.

The educated man ought to be able to do something better, something higher than merely to put money in his purse. Money-making cannot compare with man-making. There is something infinitely better than to be a millionaire of money, and that is to be a millionaire of brains, of culture, of helpfulness to one's fellows; a millionaire of character—a gentleman! Whatever degrees we may carry from school or college, no title will ever mean quite so much as that of gentleman. The world should be able to say of every educated person, as Lincoln said of Walt Whitman, "There goes a man." If through your ability and superior opportunities, you have received a special message for humanity; if a torch of learning has been put into your hand, it is your duty to deliver your message to the world with all manliness, vigor and force you possess. What shall we think of a man who has been endowed with godlike gifts, who has had the inestimable advantage of a liberal education, who has the ability to ameliorate the hard conditions of his fellows, to help to emancipate them from ignorance and drudgery; what shall we think of this man so divinely endowed, so superbly equipped, who, instead of using his education to lift his fellow-men, uses it to demoralize and drag them down? The greatest thing we can do is to be what we ought to be. A great man has said that no man will be content to live a half life when he has once discovered it is a half life, because the other half, the higher half, will haunt him. The mission of a trained man is to show the world a higher, finer type of manhood. He should say to himself, "If the highest thing in me will not bring success, surely the lowest, the worst cannot." "Pretty good," "fairly good," applied either to character or work are bad mottoes for an educated person. The world has a right to expect better results from the work of an educated man, and he should be able to demonstrate that the man with a diploma has learned to use the tools of life skillfully; has learned how to focus his faculties so that he can bring the whole man to his task, and not a part of himself.

"Keep your eye on the model, don't watch your hands," is the injunction of a great master as he walks up and down among his pupils, criticizing their work. A liberal education ought to broaden a man's mind so that he will be able to keep his eye always on the model, the perfect ideal of his work, uninfluenced by the thousand and one petty annoyances, bickerings, misunderstandings and discords which destroy much of the efficiency of narrower, less cultivated minds. While an education should develop all that is highest and best in a man, it should also make him a practical man; possessing his knowledge, and not being possessed by it.

The mere possession of a diploma will only hold you up to ridicule, will only make you more conspicuous as a failure, if you cannot bring your education to a focus and utilize it in a practical way. Knowledge is power only when it can be made available and practical. Only what you can use of your education will benefit you or the world. The great question which confronts you in the practical world is, "What can you do with what you know?" Your ability to read your Latin diploma is not a test of true education; a stuffed memory does not make an educated man. The knowledge that can be utilized, that can be translated into power, constitutes the only education worthy of the name. There is a great difference between absorbing knowledge, making a sponge of one's brain, and transmuting every bit of knowledge into power, into working capital.

The assurance of knowledge multiplies self-confidence, and self-confidence is the lever that moves the world. In other words, a liberal education makes a man think a little more of himself, feel a little surer of himself, have more faith in himself, because he has discovered himself. The best thing you carry from your alma mater is not what you there prized most, not your knowledge of the sciences, languages, literature, art; it is something infinitely more sacred, of greater value than all these, and that is your aroused ambition, your discovery of yourself, of your powers, of your possibilities; your resolution to be a little more of a man, to play a manly part in life, to do the greatest, grandest thing possible to you—the power to reach up, as well as on.

The graduate should regard his education as a sacred trust; to be used not alone for his own selfish ends, but for the betterment of all mankind. No one can use his divine gift for himself and get the most out of it. The man who withholds the giving of himself to the world does it at his own peril. The way to get the most out of ourselves, or out of life, is not to try to sell ourselves for the highest possible price, but to give ourselves, not stingily, meanly, but royally, magnanimously, to our fellows:

Put beauty into your life, do not let your esthetic faculties, your aspiring instincts, be atrophied in your efforts to make a living, or in the everlasting scramble for the dollar. Do not, as thousands of graduates do, sacrifice your social instincts, your friendships, your good name, for power or position; but practice the secret learned in your college life—the making of life a glory instead of a sordid grind. Whether you make money or lose it, never sell your divine heritage, your good name, for a mess of pottage. Whatever you do, be larger than your vocation; never let it be said of you that you succeeded in your vocation, but failed as a man. Let your life be its own eulogy, let your success tell to the world the story of a noble career, carry your greatest wealth with you in a clean record, an unsullied reputation, for never before did an opportunity to render such great service to mankind confront the educated youth as confronts you today.

What will you do with it?

S. L. BEOUGHER.

THE PERMANENCE OF LITERATURE.

By. Wm. Thornton Whitsett.

The permanence of literature constitutes one of its strongest appeals. The story of mutation and transformation is written strongly on the face of all the earth. Nothing persists, nothing endures. Material things pass as the fabric of a dream. That which today is, tomorrow is not. Dust and dissolution are on every hand as reminders of the glory of a day that was, but that is no more forever.

Here, literature steps to the front and says, "The things of time may wax and wane, but thought once expressed in fitting form may endure forever upon the tablets of eternity." Marble and bronze may decay, but thought survives fresh in its eternal youth. Those who work in the fields of literary endeavor, and pour into their efforts the best and the highest of man's possibility, may do so with the full assurance that they are becoming linked with the only memorials that withstand the ravages of decay. The only human immortality that walks with enduring feet the utmost reaches of earth is the immortality that reveals itself in the expression of man's highest intellectual and spiritual dreams upon the pages of literature.

Come stroll for an hour in the shades of the cemetery that lies upon the rising hills of the city. Yonder blackened marble tells the tale of him who in your youth was the great merchant in control of the trade of all the region. Thousands stood at his counters, and poured their contributions to swell his profits of his great establishment. Now, his great business enterprise is in the hands of strangers, and even the building which housed it has been razed to make way for the newer ideas of others. His name and influence have gone to the dust, and none preserve the ideas which once drove to success his vast undertakings. Here in this secluded spot near the cypress and the elm reposes the form of that brilliant youth who battled with you in college for the honors of scholastic attainment. He left no written records of his dreams, and he, too, is lost to the memories of today. That graceful shaft stands to mark the lowly grave of some queen of beauty, who, living, ruled by her fascinating arts, and who, lying, left nothing to tell the tale of her triumphs. Here we reach a granite block that simply carries the name of one of a generation now long since passed away; but here you feel a thrill; here the mind is flooded with thoughts; here you catch a glimpse of the immortal amid the scenes of mortality—and why? Because, here rests all that is mortal of one who left upon the glowing pagae of literature the thoughts that filled his days, and while he, like all the others, has passed to the dust from which he came, he walks with viewless feet, but mighty tread, amid the ways of men, and will live as long as time itself shall endure, for he gave his days to that which makes its permanent impress upon the things of time. His name today is better known than many of the names of the living, and at every turn we are dominated by the thought that once was formulated by his brain, and which he gave to us through the medium of the literature of his time. Men from all the ends of earth make pilgrimages to his grave, feeling that an immortal kinship exists between the best and highest in their lives and that which once moved him to expression.

"Cold in the dust the perished heart may lie,
But that which warmed the heart can never die."

Buoyant and youthful and perennial in strength is the memory of him who has touched all time by his entrance into the circle of immortality by the power of thought transmitted through the printed page.

" 'Tis immortality, 'tis that alone,
Amid life's pains, abasements, emptiness,
The soul can comfort, elevate and fill."

3,000 THE CHRISTIAN SUN. 9,000

There are between 8,000 and 10,000 families represented in the Southern Christian Convention, which means if a copy of The Christian Sun is placed in each family, a possible subscription list of 9,000 copies. There are now circulated approximately 3,000 copies, or about one-third of our Church families are reached. Hence, there should be added to the list 6,000 new subscribers in order to have the Church paper placed in every family.

Now, the great personal effort required to do this must be rewarded. To compensate this labor, if premiums are given, it will take 20 automobiles, or 40 radio machines, or 50 to 60 talking machines, or 90 to 100 typewriters, or 200 to 300 watches, etc. Don't you think you will have a good opportunity to secure one of these prizes?

But you need not confine your solicitations to your Church alone. You have friends in other denominations who will gladly assist you by giving a subscription. Make your appeal in a straightforward manner. True men and women are interested in the success of their friends and will lend a helping hand.

Premiums Given for New Subscriptions.

The subscription price of The Sun, recently reduced, is now $2.00 per year—two six-month subscriptions at $1.00 each count as one year. One person may take as many as he may wish for himself or for others. Those in arrears should pay up and assist the solicitor by taking an advanced subscription.

Schedule.

1. To one securing 350 Subscriptions, a Ford Touring Car will be given ($298.00 f. o. b. factory).
2. To one securing 150 Subscriptions, one Radio Equipment—Westinghouse R-6 Set, complete with batteries, tubes, phone and aerial equipment, the price of which is $150.00.
3. To one securing 100 Subscriptions will be given one Victrola ($75.00), or cash prize of $50.00.
4. To one securing 75 Subscriptions, one Remington Portable Typewriter, with standard keyboard and case ($60.00 f. o. b. Richmond).
5. To one securing 30 Subscriptions, one Gentleman's or one Lady's Wrist Watch will be given, guaranteed by Jahnke Bros., Jewelers, of Richmond, Va. ($30.00).
6. For 25 Subscriptions, one Gentleman's or Lady's Watch ($25.00), likewise guaranteed by Jahnke Bros.
7. To one securing 20 Subscriptions, one Standard or International Dictionary will be given.

To all authorized solicitors will be paid 10 per cent commission on all renewals, and 20 per cent on all new subscriptions. Those receiving prizes will not be entitled to commission.

Two renewal subscriptions will be counted as one in determining the winners of prizes.

Send in your name and address and receive the necessary report blanks and receipt books.

The contest will close on October 31, 1923.

Remittances made on this campaign are to be net. Post-office money orders constitute a safe plan of remittance.

MISSIONS

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Field Secretary.

PAYING MEN AND MILLIONS PLEDGES.

Bro. Chas. D. Johnston, executive secretary, reports that from September 1, 1922, to August 31, 1923, there was paid on Men and Millions pledges a total of $24,705.01, and that the total collected on Men and Millions since the pledges were made, up to September 1, 1923, was $97,982.81.

We have for the past two years gone through a rather dull period for collections for Church and benevolent enterprises. There were in many sections financial depression and unfavorable crop conditions. While people have been lavish in their expenditure for what they really desire, automobiles and sundry luxuries, for example, payments to the Lord's cause have been difficult, and in many instances distressing. However, we are settling to normal conditions now after a period of eruption, fear and doubt, and the feeling seems to be general that payments to benevolences will be easier, readier, and more agreeable. Our Men and Millions pledges should certainly claim first place in our obligations. These pledges were made to, and the money paid on them goes for, the support of all that the Church has and is trying to do. If the Church itself is sacred and undertakes to do holy and sacred things, then these pledges to Men and Millions are sacred because every dollar paid in on them is divided up to all the enterprises of the Church which make for strength, growth and progress.

It is greatly desired, as it is promised and anticipated, that liberal payments shall be made on our Men and Millions pledges this year and that we shall more than double the present year what we did in this behalf the past year. Whether the captain calls and presses the obligation or not, and whether a notice of payments due is received through the mail or not, we should seek to make our payments faithfully and discharge, with a good conscience, these solemn obligations. Some are paying their pledges promptly. It behoves all who can do so to join them, that the few may not have the burden to bear alone.

J. O. ATKINSON,
Secretary.

OUR LOSS IN JAPAN.

While the lives of our missionaries in Japan were spared in the great calamity there, Tokyo and Yokahama, its cities suffering most, are in the very center of our missionary activities. We await with fear and dread definite information of the extent of our loss as a Church and the destitution among our people there. It must be extensive and deplorable.

This we know: Here are suffering and want that call for immediate action and relief. We feel that our people everywhere should be given an opportunity to send succor and support to these our friends, brethren and sisters who have suffered unspeakably from causes over which they have no control.

Every Sunday School, Christian Endeavor Society, Church, missionary organization and individual should have the privilege of contributing something to this cause. All money received will be acknowledged through THE SUN, receipted for and sent to our foreign secretary, Dayton, Ohio, who will transmit it immediately to the most needy and deserving sources.

J. O. ATKINSON,
Missionary Sec'y Southern Christian Convention.

ACTIVITIES AMONG OUR WOMEN.

PATTIE COGHILL, Field Secretary.

Notice, Eastern Virginians.

Are you planning to attend the Woman's Missionary Conference, which meets with the Wakefield Christian Church, October 5th? Make arrangements to be there. Keep in touch with your work. Representatives should go from each woman, young people, cradle roll, and Willing Workers' Society, and if you have no missionary societies you should go to represent your Church.

The officers of this conference are: President, Mrs. C. H. Rowland; vice-president, Mrs. M. J. W. White; secretary, Mrs. L. W. Stagg; treasurer, Mrs. M. L. Bryant; superintendent young people, Mrs. W. V. Leathers; superintendent literature and mite boxes, Mrs. J. E. Cartwright; superintendent cradle roll, Mrs. W. H. Baker.

Notice, North Carolinians.

Together, we can make the Woman's Missionary Conference this year the best one we have ever had, both in interest and attendance. Plan now to attend the conference, which meets with the Burlington Christian Church, October 11th and 12th, beginning Thursday evening and closing Friday afternoon. The Burlington people are planning for a large delegation; let us not disappoint them. Meals will be served in the basement of the Church.

New officers for local societies should be elected in September, the year's work completed, and reports sent in.

Officers of the conference are: President, Mrs. W. H. Carrol; vice-president, Mrs. J. P. Avent; secretary, Mrs. J. W. Patton; treasurer, Mrs. W. R. Sellars; superintendent young people, Mrs. H. Russell Clem; superintendent literature and mite boxes, Mrs. J. J. Henderson; superintendent cradle roll, Mrs. N. G. Newman.

We hope that a large number of young people may attend both of these conferences. Young people are taking a more active part in Church work at the present time than ever before, and they need encouragement in their undertakings. Attendance at these conferences will help to give them a clearer vision of kingdom service.

Program Plans.

October, November, and December will be devoted to the study of the home mission books for this year, with special emphasis upon the study of child life. The books, as adopted by the Protestant denominations in America, are "The Child and America's Future," for adults, and "For a New America," for Young People's Societies.

Some especially interesting programs for local societies should be arranged, using the suggestions of these books and information concerning our own home mission points. A study of the child and its relation to health, morals, education, and so forth, should make an interesting program, using the local community for a basis of study and discussion. Our mountain work, Americanization work at Haverhill, Mass., or work among the lumber camps would furnish an interesting program.

It is interesting to know, and we get inspiration from the fact that while we, as a local Church, are conducting a study in home missions, that many of our other Churches are conducting a similar study, as well as the Churches of other denominations.

Jesus was the greatest missionary the world has ever known. Had you thought that the very announcement of the birth of Christ was in the missionary key, when the angel came and said: "Lo! I bring you good tidings of a great joy which shall be unto all people." Not to the Jews or Gentiles, but unto everybody.

Have you ever tried posters for announcing your missionary meetings? It is a most effective method.

MISSION BOARD MEETING.

The annual meeting of the Mission Board of the Christian Church is hereby called to meet at the mission rooms in the Christian Publishing Association Building, Dayton, Ohio, beginning Monday, October 15, 1923, at 4 o'clock in the afternoon. All persons having business with the Mission Board should communicate with either the home mission secretary, Rev. O. S. Thomas, D. D., or Rev. W. P. Minton, D. D., foreign mission secretary. The members of the board are:

Home Department.—Rev. O. S. Thomas, D. D., Dayton, Ohio, home mission secretary; Rev. G. O. Lankford, D. D., Burlington, N. C., chairman; Mrs. McD. Howsare, Dayton, Ohio; Mr. M. S. Campbell, Collison, Ill.; Rev. C. G. Nelson, Red Cloud, Neb.; Rev. H. M. Hainer, New Bedford, Mass.

WARREN H. DENISON, President.

Questions and Answers.

[NOTE.—If "Sun" readers wish this department of "Questions and Answers" kept up, let them help to make it interesting by asking questions. Questions should be sent to the Editor of "The Christian Sun," Elon College, N. C. It may be you think you will ask some question some time soon, or when you can get a chance; but that is the way "not" to do it. The way to do it: just as soon as you find the question you would like to have answered, then get your pen and ink and paper and envelope, and write it at once and let it come. Then it will be done. This department is kept up in the hope that it may furnish information for the people, but if you will not send us questions, how shall we answer? Can you tell us how to answer a question that has not been asked?—Editor.]

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

Question.—Why is it that we do not read in the Bible of the people making their wills and giving their property to their children?—A. T. O.

That is a fact. We had not before thought of the absence of will-making in the Bible, especially in the Old Testament. One reason why the making of wills on the part of parents is the fact that it is not necessary, since the law of Moses made such a practice useless and unnecessary. The law of Moses gave sons priority rights, the oldest getting a dauble portion of the property of their parents. In case there were no sons in the family, as is sometimes the case, then the daughters inherited the property. While this was the law of Moses, and no doubt they had some reason for such a law, yet we have never been able to see just why it was so, unless it was due to the fact that the daughters were not expected to have any need of property. Of course, it was taken for granted that every daughter would some time marry, if she lived to be old enough, and in that event, her husband was expected to take care of her, thus rendering her independent of her father's estate. If such a law had been in force all through the last hundred years, many a rich man's daughter would have been saved much sorrow and humiliation. Instead of the daughter providing for the husband, it was expected that the husband should be man enough to take care of his own wife. From the beginning, we think that was the idea.

Question.—In a number of places in the Bible we read of pavillions. Please explain just what a pavillion in the times of the Holy Scriptures and what was the figurative sense in which the sacred writers used it? In 2 Sam. 22:12, we read that God made darkness pavillions round about Him. —Deboran.

Originally a pavillion was the covering about a king's throne. It was usually built of the finest material. Then later the word lost its significance—at least, it was given a broader signification—and was applied to anything that had a covering over it, as the upper part of a booth. In some places today a pavillion is a covering for a place where people congregate for rest or recreation. When it is used figuratively in the Bible it usually means the favor and protection of the Lord for His people.

Question.—What was the Passover, as it was used by the Jews?—John.

It was a Jewish feast which commemorates the great event when the death angel passed over Egypt and left one, the first born, dead in every home, except the first born of the Israelites—they were all spared, as indicating God's favor for them and His displeasure at the course they had pursued in oppressing the children of Israel. It also commemorates the event of the leaving of the Israelites from Egypt to go to the promised land. It was held on the 14th day of Nisan. At even the passover was to be celebrated, commemorating these great events in Jewish history.

Question.—What was Rabbah, spoken of in Deut. 3:11, and several other passages of the Scriptures.—Inquirer.

Rabbah was a city east of the Jordan, and originally the capital of the Ammonites. It has been much in war, changing from one side to ancther. It was once captured by David, but later the Ammonites recaptured it, taking it from David. Several centuries later it was rebuilt by Ptolemy Philadelphus. He then called it Philadelphia. It was also at another time called Rabbath of the Children of Ammon, or perhaps more correctly Rabbath of the Ammonites. There was also another place called Rahhab, a city of Judah. It is named with Kirjathjearim.

Question.—Can you tell me what is the figurative use of the word rain?

The word rain, when used in a figurative way, signifies whatever is refreshing, nourishing and tending to make a person or persons useful in good works. If it is used to indicate the blessing of the spiritual life, it refers to the outpouring of the Holy Spirit. Again, if it is used of ethical instruction, it indicates that there is great good to come to the people who are to receive the benefits of this rain. One of the prophets speaks of the early and the latter rain. He refers, I think, to the early and latter rain as it was known in the East, but when used of the Christian life, I think he means the first gifts of the Spirit which are bestowed on the Christian life, and then when he refers to the latter rain, I think he is thinking of the later gifts of the Spirit by which their lives are made ready for the harvest days.

Question.—What is the meaning of the words our Saviour used when He cried out on the cross, "Sabacthani?"

The word literally means "Thou hast left me." As used by Jesus, He meant to say, I think, that God had left Him in the moment of great peril. Taking the whole sentence Jesus used on the cross, we read: "Eli, Eli, lama, Sabacthani," and that means: "My God, My God, why hast Thou forsaken Me?"

Question.—What is meant by John when he said there shall be no more sea, as in Rev. 21:1?

As I understand it, the word sea in that passage has a symbolic meaning. The sea, in that case, means the heathen world. So when he said there shall be no more sea, He meant that when the Christ kingdom had fully come, there would be no more heathen world, and for the reason that the Gospel would have taken away all heathenism and substituted for it Christianity; so that then there would be no more heathen world, all having been converted to Christ.

Question.—What is Timnathserah, as mentioned in Joshua 19:50?—Sally.

It was a hill in Judah where Joshua lived and was buried. When Joshua was dividing out the country to the twelve tribes, he left himself out entirely, making no provision for a home for himself in his old age. It was then that the children of Israel rose up and declared that Joshua must have a place for his home, and they gave him Timnathserah, and that was a hilltop, and it was called Timnathserah, meaning a home in the sunlight, or on top of a hill. There Joshua, we are told, lived and died and was buried. How beautiful is the light of a life lived in the light, of a death in the light of God, and then of a burial on the hilltop where the light always shines. That seems to suggest that a Christian should live always in the light, and that is just what Christians ought to have—they always need the light of God in which to live and to die.

Question.—What do you mean by various versions of the Bible? I hear people speak of this and that version of the Scriptures. Please excuse my ignorance and tell me just what it means.

The Bible was originally written in Hebrew and Greek, in the main, and of course if the common people are to read the Scriptures then it must be translated from the Hebrew and from the Greek, let us say, into our English, so that we may read it. Then a little later it must be translated into the language of some other people who could not read Hebrew and Greek. Each new translation so made is called a version. For instance, we have four ancient versions of the Old Testament, which have come down to modern times. These are the Septuagint, the Targums of Onkelos, and Jonathan ben Uzziel, the Syriac Peshito, and the Latin Vulgate. Of the English version of the Bible, we have Wyclif's translation, A. D. 1381; Tyndale's translation, 1525; Miles Coverdale's translation, 1535 A. D.; Thomas Matthew's Bible, A. D. 1537; Taverner's edition, A. D. 1539; the Great Bible, or Cranmer's Bible, A. D. 1539; the Geneva version, A. D. 1560; Bishop's Bible, A. D. 1568; the Douai Bible, A. D. 1582; the Authorized Version, 1611 A. D.; the Revised Version, A. D. 1881 and 1885; the American Revised Version, A. D. 1900. Some people do not like to think of all of these versions, but if we had no translations of the Bible, only people who read Hebrew and Greek could read the Bible, and that would mean great darkness in the land. If the Bible were altogether in Hebrew and English, we doubt that you could find a hundred people among all of our readers who could readily read and get the meaning of the Scriptures. As it is, every one who can read English can have a Bible to read in his or her own home. So long as the translations are made by spiritual, honest and capable men, the people get help by every new translation that is made. It may be that the people to whom you belong do not get help, because it may be that they already have the Scriptures in their own mother tongue, but it brings floods of light to people who have it translated into their mother tongue.

FROM BRO. ALLRED.

The Church at Union Grove has recently painted the house on the inside and erected a recess pulpit. It all adds very much to the looks of the building. We have but lately closed a meeting there with great success. We had twenty-five conversions, and we are expecting several more to unite with the Church later. Rev. J. E. Shaw did the preaching, and his word was given in power. The Church worked well, and that is why they got a revival. The Union Grove Church is doing a good work.

Well, Bro. Editor, I like to read your editorials in THE SUN—they are food to my soul! You ask THE SUN readers to pray for you and your work. For one, I will do that, although I feel like one of the least of His children.

JOHN M. ALLRED,
Pastor Union Grove Church.

[Thank you, brother. We would be glad of the prayers of all who feel as if they were the least in the Church of Christ. We fear that such as may feel themselves to be great might think too much of their greatness to remember the little ones in the field of service.—EDITOR.]

FAMILY ALTAR

CONDUCTED BY H. E. ROUNTREE, U. S. NAVY.

"In Thee and in Thy seed shall the families of of the earth be blessed."—Gen. 28:14.

(Use this in your daily devotions.)

MONDAY.

"None liveth to himself."—Rom. 6:12.

It is contrary to the character of Jesus to live unto himself. He found it impossible to do so. His life was a yearning for others, that they might realize that they were created in the image of God and that their every impulse should move to develop that.

It is contrary to the character of any good Christian to find pleasure in lavishing on himself the resources of his possession. The widow cast in all that she had. Though a very small amount, it gave her the greatest pleasure to know that she was helping others to be like God. God's chief glory is to administer the inexhaustible resources of His kingdom for the benefit of His people, and He has told us that we will find that it is more blessed to give than to receive.

PRAYER.

O God, who hast commanded us to be perfect like unto Thyself, put into our hearts, we pray thee, a continual desire to obey Thy holy will. Teach us, day by day, what Thou wouldst have us do, and give us grace and power to do it. May we never, from love of pleasure, luxury and ease, fail to contribute to the comfort of others or decline to go where Thou wouldst have us go. Amen.

TUESDAY.

DOING WHAT CHRIST DOES.

"He that believeth on Me, the works that I do shall he do also, and greater works than these shall he do."—John 14:12.

The prophecies of Jesus, as read in Lev. 25 and Isa. 61:11, foretell the works of Jesus to be that of preaching to the poor, releasing the captives, opening the eyes of the blind, freeing the oppressed, helping the bruised, proclaiming the Lord; and Luke 4:16 and 7:18-23 tell us plainly how all this was fulfilled. When His Messiahship was questioned, he said, "Go, tell John that this is what I do," as if to say, "I am known by my works," and so He was.

But this was not the end of it. This did not complete the salvation He came to bring. Salvation is consummated only through man. Jesus said to His Father, in that memorable prayer of John 17, "As Thou didst send Me into the world, even so send I them," and He said to them as they went forth, "The works that I do shall ye do, and greater works than these shall ye do."

PRAYER.

Dear Father, we have left undone those things we ought to have done, and have done the things we ought not to have done. Have mercy upon us, miserable offenders. Reveal to us Thy work. Make Thy ways known, that we may be led into them. This we ask for Jesus' sake. Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

THE COMMISSION OF JESUS TE THE DISCIPLES AND THE CHURCH.

(Read Matt. 9:35-10:1.)

Note the motives that led to the organization of the Church. Verse 36 says: "The people were distressed and scattered." This is a shepherd term for scattered sheep in the forest when wild beast had broken into the flock, and the root meaning of the original of these words is: "Skinned and harried," and a second meaning is "flung down and prostrate."

The people seemed like a flock of sheep after the volves went through them—distressed and scattered, skinned and harried, flung down and prostrate, and suffering many other disorders. Jesus came to seek and to save these; and He begins His work by declaring it and by sending forth his disciples to do the same. It was out of this the Church of Christ sprang, and as it did so, "He gave them power over unclean spirits—the wolves—to cast them out; to call all the people—the sheep—together, heal their diseases and all manner of sickness. To what extent do you share the commission to go and save?

PRAYER.

Our Father, we have fallen far short of our duty. We desire to be true disciples. Teach us how to be. Put within us an overmastering spirit of love for Thy word, for holy influences, for Christian thought, until we know nothing else to abide but the assurance that we are thine. We need the courage that comes from such a knowledge. Amen.

THURSDAY.

JESUS AND EVERY-DAY FOLKS.

"Blessed be ye poor, for yours is the kingdom of God."—Luke 6:20.

"Did not God choose them that are poor, as to the world, to be rich in faith and heirs of the kingdom which He promised to them that love Him?"—Jas. 2:5.

Jesus was with ordinary, every-day folks constantly, calling upon and blessing them. His personal habits and customs were: in the morning, He would worship the Father, and in the evening He was on the streets, in the homes and in the parks, talking to the multitudes. Little sketches of this come to us in the incident of the widow who came to him, and of another who gave all that she had, and of another by the pool where He mingled with the sick and the halt and the maimed and other suffering ones; and of another at the well, who came to draw water; and of others who mended their nets and boats by the sea. It was only in such soil as this that it was possible for the kingdom to come; and it seemed that it was out of the abundance of their common poverty, deprivaations and sufferings that they became rich, made others rich, and were the chosen people of God. (2 Cor. 6:10.)

PRAYER.

Dear Father, we may have no money, but we thank Thee for the common, every-day things that money cannot buy—for friends, for health, for food, for clean minds, strong manhood and womanhood, for forgiveness of sins, immortal life, for the wealth of the land that comes to us in the day and the night, for the fruit and the flowers, birds and beast, and for the grandeur and glory of it all. Teach us how to be rich in these, and how to walk with thee in all. This we ask for Jesus' sake. Amen.

FRIDAY.

WORLDLY AMBITION AND CHRISTIAN DEVOTION.

"Not by might, nor by power, but by My spirit, saith the Lord."—Zech. 4:6.

We have heard of a sermon preached recently, that left its impress upon the entire community, which said that the world is using God's power without His spirit. Note the following: We are using steam, gas, electricity, the air, man power, science, etc., all of which is nothing more nor less than God's power; but that we are using all these things without God's spirit with them. Never a truer thing was said. The perils of man lie just here.

When Christ was weeping over Jerusalem, He heard every cry and moan of His people, and He saw every peril they would encounter; and He tried to forestall it all by causing them to know that life is superior only in the good spirit of God; that humility and love are the only forces that bind together—that meet the urgencies, glorify life and heal the dissensions. "Walk not after the flesh, but after the spirit." (Rom. 8:1.)

PRAYER.

Our Father, surround us with Thy tender and strong protection as we traverse life's perilous way, that, whatever life may mean to us, first of all we may make sure we have Thy spirit and Thy love which have never been defeated. This we ask for Jesus' sake. Amen.

SATURDAY.

THE DIVINE ASPECT OF LIFE.

"Who shall stand in His holy place? He that hath clean hands and a pure heart, who hath not lifted up his soul unto falsehood."—Ps. 24:3, 4.

(Read also Lev. 19:11, 12; Prov. 6:16-19, 14:25, 12:5, 26:18, 19; Ps. 5:6, and Rev. 14:5.)

So divine are we that a lie spoken, or a wrong done is not spoken or done against an individual, but against God. When Annanias deceived the community and swore to it before the altar, Peter told him plainly that he had not lied to man, but unto God. Annanias expected to get away with this, thinking he had only lied to Peter, who had charge of the affairs, but no sooner than the words were spoken, Peter drops out and God drops in, and Annanias is face to face with the Lord.

It is thus that it happens that a conversation about a bit of property suddenly becomes related to the great white throne. A man has misrepresented the facts about a few yards of land and finds that the universe and heaven are against him.

Often a question is asked by some one and an answer is given, but in it a lie flashes like a flame and all righteousness is insulted.

This is what Jesus is talking about when he said that he that thinketh to do evil hath already committed it.

PRAYER.

Our Heavenly Father, help us to realize that everything in life is related to Thee, and in proportion as we are set in harmony with Thy great spirit will we be true to ourselves, to others and to our God. We pray that we may be kept from that which is false, superficial, selfish and unsavory, and, through exemplary living, cause others to love Thee too. Amen.

SUNDAY.

IN HIS IMAGE.

"God created man in His own image."—Gen. 1:26, 27.

Before sin entered into the world, God said, "Let us make man in our own image," which means, "after our own likeness." Therefore, the things that are of God (characteristics, attributes and qualities) are the things He has put in man. All we need to do is to examine ourselves and we see this likeness. In our invisible selves there are feelings, loves, hates, hopes, aspirations, beauty, holiness, etc. These are of God, and if we have any of them we believe we have something like Him who made us, and that we belong to His family.

PRAYER.

O Lord, Almighty and Everlasting God, who hast safely brought us through the week, and to the beginning of another, we thank and praise Thee and adore Thy name. Defend us today and in the new week by Thy power, and grant that we may fall in no sin, nor even into any danger, but that we may know that any good in us is of Thee, and all our doings may be ordered by Thee, and that we may be righteous in Thy sight. Through Jesus Christ, our Lord. Amen.

Christian Orphanage

A BUSY TIME.

DEAR FRIENDS:

It is a busy time at the Christian Orphanage. Gathering in the crop is no small job. We have cut and put in our silo more than sixty-five tons silo feed. We have also cut and put up nine big loads of pea hay and still have twenty-seven acres of peas and soy beans to cut. Twenty acres is on rented land, and we get one-half, under our contract. If we can get fair weather to cut and cure it, we will get a nice lot of hay. Then we have the sweet potatoes to dig and cure for the winter; wheat and oats to sow and all the small grain, so it is work every day.

Then it is time to begin to get winter clothes and shoes for the children. To buy clothing, shoes and all the necessary things for 105 children and get them properly fitted up is no small job. We hope to have your support and your help. You can make our work easier and our burdens lighter if you will make your offerings liberal and make it possible for us to meet our bills at the end of each month.

"Pure religion and undefiled before God and the Father is this: to visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction and to keep himself unspotted from the world."

Asking for a contribution for the support of the Christian Orphanage is giving you an opportunity to visit the widows and the fatherless and help supply their needs. Will you make use of this opportunity. CHAS. D. JOHNSTON,
Superintendent.

FORMS OF SOCIAL SERVICE FOR CHRISTIAN CHURCH SUNDAY SCHOOLS.

At the recent Chautauqua, held at Elon College, N. C., a very interesting class in social service was conducted by Drs. W. A. Harper and H. S. Smith. Among the things discussed were the particular forms of social service the Sunday School children in the various grades might render. The following represents the findings of the class for these grades. There were other findings which the class requested published, but they are not in the hands of the secretary:

Beginners.

1. Kindness to animals.
2. Gifts of apples or oranges for grandmas at the home for the aged.
3. Eggs at Easter for sick babies.
4. Pictures for primary room to be carried by themselves.
5. Pennies for one month to go to buy coal for the Church.
6. Pennies at Christmas to buy gloves for the sexton.

Primary.

1. Keeping the family in touch with the work of the class.
2. Distributing song books.
3. Visiting absent members of the class and taking flowers to the sick.

3. Providing a basket at Thanksgiving to a needy and worthy family.
4. Sending decorations for a Christmas tree to the mountain mission.

Secretary of Class.

PLEASANT HILL, N. C.

We began our revival services at Pleasant Hill, Alamance County, on the first Sunday in September. Rev. S. L. Beougher, of Graham, N. C., came to our assistance on Monday and preached during the remainder of the meeting to good acceptance. His sermons were plain, practical, earnest Gospel messages. There were five public professions, and we trust that the Church was much revived. P. H. FLEMING.

Golden Text: "In Thee shall all the families of the earth be blessed."—Gen. 12:3.

Devotional Reading: Psalm 47.

Abraham, a Religious Pioneer.

"To be sent for God is to be sent for good."

The Bible is the greatest of missionary books. In spirit and with command, it is filled with the message of missions.

The greatest work of the Church, and all of its organizations, is to win the world to Jesus Christ. Her foremost task is missions.

Now, in the Sunday School, for the first time, three months will be given to a study of this great book that thousands and tens of thousands of earnest Bible students may see in a clearer light the missionary message as revealed through the lives of great biblical heroes, through the history of the nation of Israel, through our Lord Jesus Christ and the early Church, until no thoughtful Christian man or woman, or boy or girl can fail to believe whole-heartedly in the missionary endeavor and desire to have a part in it.

The series of the quarter's lessons begins with Abraham, the founder of his race, the "friend of God," the pioneer religious leader and missionary. His missionary career was not like that of the twentieth century ambassador to carry out God's commands. No board commissioned him, and no home Church supported Abraham as he left his home. But, nevertheless, Abraham had the fundamental qualifications of a missionary, and the spirit of a missionary, and began a great missionary movement.

Thus, we see, first, that Abraham lived close to God.

"Jehovah said unto Abram."

We do not know how God spoke, but we do know that Abraham (or, as later, Abraham) heard His voice. His life was in tune with the Almighty, so that He would hear. Here is the first essential. Dr. John Griffith, the pioneer missionary in China, used to write back to his home board, "Send me no man-made missionaries." He knew that the workers who could win souls were those who had heard God's voice themselves first. God has tried to speak to many who have never heard because they allowed other things to come between which dull the call. Other messages have been misinterpreted because they were heard and given meaning in terms of personal desires rather than as commands of a loving and wise Heavenly Father. Every missionary has a message to bear. That is no unimportant errand, and no royal ambassador ever had a greater trust. How vital that every word of the command be understood! Abraham heard God speak. The Church is hearing Jehovah speak today, and going into lands far, and working in fields close by. How wonderful to hear Jehovah speak, and how tragic to miss the smallest item of His message!

So, Abram went."

The second qualification of a missionary who is always more or less of a pioneer is "obedience." Abraham did not stop to question, nor to complain, nor even to rejoice. He simply went. God needs folks who will just go—to teach a Sunday School class; to attend a prayer service; to China. All need not go the same place. All should not. The question is: "Are you willing to go anywhere with Jesus?"

Unquestioning obedience is the first lesson a soldier must learn. He may be skillful and alert, but without obedience he is useless. Obedience is the first lesson we learn as children. Obedience is the lesson which Christians must learn well—just simple, trustful obedience to a Father. And as Abraham went in obedience, he found much to do on his "missionary" travel. There were doomed cities for which he prayed earnestly and in sorrow. His concern for them was very real. The missionary has this concern for the world. "We are all right. Let them care for themselves" is not the Christian way. Abraham found quarreling workmen with whom he made peace. Christian Endeavorers recently spent an evening is discussing the growing good coming from industrial missions. Abraham found a nephew whom he favored with the best of pastures and land. The missionary is not for self, but for others; not for personal advantage always, but for the good of all. How much it means that "Abram went"!

"Take now thy son."

Sacrifice comes as part of a missionary's training. Abraham was called to take his son, his only son, for whom he had waited long, and to sacrifice him on the altar. His lesson of obedience was well-learned, and with no question as to how God's promises were to be fulfilled, he went to the appointed spot and prepared for the sacrifice. He met God's test. He was worthy to be the father of a great race. Sacrifice comes to all Christians, but the happy part is that it does not seem like a hardship when done for Him. Livingstone, the great pioneer missionary into Africa's jungles, once declared that he had never made a sacrifice. If he could say that, how small are the demands upon us! What seems to be the sacrifice of our best, may bring the greatest blessing to us, as to Abraham. Nothing is too precious nor too good to be given to our God.

"In thy seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed."

Abraham was blessed. No man is respected as he by Christian, Jew and Mohammedan. All the nations! What a scope of service!

Missionary tasks bring a twofold blessing. The individual helps others as he helps to tell the story, whether by his life or by making it possible for others to tell. And as he makes his life count thus, he is the happy Christian himself. Have you ever seen a person who thoroughly and wholly believed in missions who was a constant grouch? The missionary Church is the growing Church, as Dr. Atkinson has told so many times, extending its local program as it reaches out to help others.

Read of missions, and learn of the great blessings coming therefrom. Pray for missions, and find your own interest multiplying. Give to missions, and share in the great dividends paid in a consciousness of having a part in the great enterprise. But, above all, live so close to God that you may hear His voice, gladly go where He says, and give Him of your best, and the blessing shall be yours.

"There's surely somewhere a lowly place
In earth's harvest field so wide,
Where I may labor through life's short day
For Jesus the Crucified.
So, trusting my all to Thy tender care,
And knowing Thou lovest me,
I'll go where you want me to go, dear Lord,
I'll be what you want me to be."

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

October 7, 1923.

Topic: "Lessons from the Psalms—10. The Word-of-God Psalm."—Ps. 119:9-16, 105. (Consecration Meeting.)

Thoughts for the Meeting.

The Bible is the best guide for youth. First, to know the Bible, and then to "take heed" to its teachings means to make the most and the best of life. Verse 9.

Christian Endeavor keeps many from wandering from the Bible, by its emphasis on daily Bible reading. The first step in "wandering" is to forget to read the commandments of God. Verse 10.

The Bible in the heart is the best guard against sin. To have it in the heart means to have the Bible truth in the very center of the life, with its great power-giving strength, to withstand temptation and hatred for wrong-doing. Verse 11.

Jehovah is our best Teacher. Verse 12.

"With my lips." The faith that is expressed, and the love for Jesus that is spoken strengthens the belief and the love. The part of our pledge "to take some part, aside from singing, in every Christian Endeavor prayer-meeting" is important. That testimony helps the individual who gives it, and inspires others, as well as helps to make the Christian Endeavor prayer-meeting interesting and uplifting. Verse 13.

The greatest wealth in the world is invisible, and our greatest blessings can never be seen. Thus are wisdom and love, strength and righteousness, and a host of riches which may be ours. Verse 14.

"I will not forget Thy word."

Consecration meetings call Christian Endeavorers very definitely to the word of God, and aim to keep them, like the psalmist resolved to never forget the great precepts found there. Verse 16.

God's word is light. In times of sorrow it brings the only ray of brightness to the heart. In times of temptation, it gives a light that spells overcoming the wrong. In a heavy task, the Word gives wisdom. But as the room will remain dark if you fail to remember to light the lamp, or turn on the electricity, so God's word must be remembered and used if its light is to help brighten the path and direct the feet. Verse 105.

"Lamp of our feet, whereby we trace
Our path when wont to stray;
Stream from the fount of heavenly grace,
Brook by the traveler's way.

"Word of the ever-living God,
Will of His glorious Son;
Without Thee how could earth be trod
Or heav'n itself be won?

PLANS FOR THE MEETING.

At the beginning of the year, it was suggested that Christian Endeavorers this year memorize the psalms used for the consecration meetings, and thus have them to use in their services at any time. This meant one psalm a month, and those who have followed this plan known nine of the choicest selections in the word of God. This month there are just nine verses of a wonderful psalm. Begin to learn these verses, and repeat them each Sunday night during the month Perhaps the "forward step" which many Christian Endeavorers should take at this consecration meeting is to resolve to really know more portions of the Bible.

Questions for Discussion.—Of what help has the Bible been to you personally? (Several may answer this question.) How may Christian Endeavorers use the Bible more in the Sunday or week-day meetings? Why should Bible passages be memorized? What is the best way, and time for reading the Bible? (The quiet hour should be explained, and the blessings coming to those who have enrolled as "comrades" to spend fifteen minutes every day, in the early morning if possible, in Bible study, prayer and communion, related.)

Ask each member in advance to come with a verse learned from the psalms which gives a great lesson. Instead of having the secretary call the roll, if variety is desired the president may give the first verse, and then call upon some member. This one will give his, and call on another, until all have taken part in the consecration service. Then the secretary will call names of absent members for messages, and the meeting may be closed with a short message from the pastor or president on "How to Carry the Lessons from the Bible into Every-Day Life," a hymn, and the benediction.

Suggested Hymns.—"Break, Thou, the Bread of Life," "How Firm a Foundation," "Tell Me the Old, Old Story," "More About Jesus," "Holy Bible, Book Divine," "Wonderful Words of Life."

JUNIOR CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC.

OCTOBER 7, 1923.

TOPIC: "How to Live an Unselfish Life."—Rom. 15:1-3.

(Consecration Meeting.)

"For Christ also pleased not Himself."

What kind of folks do you Juniors like best? Do you like folks like that selfish giant, which you may have heard about, who had a beautiful garden, with flowers and grass and fruit and trees, but who had such a high wall around it that nobody could enjoy it? He was selfish because he wanted every single thing for himself, and did not stop to think that other people liked flowers and fruit, too. Or do you like the man who remembers that boys and girls, and older folks, as well, like him to think of them, to say "How do you do?" kindly, and to help them when they are sick, or give them something to eat when they are hungry? Which do you like best?

Our lesson tells that Jesus Christ pleased not himself. We know that He went everywhere doing good, and that wherever He went, people were happier and better. Whenever we think of Him, let's remember this. And as we know the kind of people whom we like the very best, let us remember that they are unselfish folks, and try to be like Jesus and like them. Let us learn the little verse, which may be either a prayer or a song for our meetings:

"God, make my life a little light
Within the world to glow;
A little flame that burneth bright
Wherever I may go."

"WALK IN LOVE."

(Ephesians 5:2.)

With this test in mind, let us look at Paul's geat love chapter (1 Cor. 13). However, before we start, it may be borne in mind that Paul's own life is his greatest love-letter. His was a simple, Simon-pure, unrelenting, undying love for Jesus Christ. Christ was Somebody, in Paul's estimation. He was not merely a dead hero, not a martyr to a losing cause; but He was his Lord. He had seen Him! He knew Him! It was He, and none other, who had graciously, vicariously redeemed his soul. Jesus had made him a new creature. His was a real experience. He staked all on Him. To him, Christ was God manifested in the flesh. He worshiped Him!

His Christ has quite a task. Paul loved Him so much he jumped right into the job with all his great soul to do his part in helping get it done. For Paul, Christ had not quit the job and left it to His successor. He was on it and doing it through His successors.

Now, that we have hastily reviewed Paul's authority to speak, let us fit our text to the love-chapter.

(1) Emptiness of Achievement Without Love (1 Cor. 13:1-3).—This is the testimony of Christianity's great achiever. Paul was indeed a speaker in "the tongues of men"—Latin, Greek, Hebrew; he had a prophet's commission; he had a mountain-moving faith, a sea-traversing faith; how often he gave his body; and, indeed, he bestowed his goods. But all, all of this without love would be empty—oh, so empty! This principle he learned from Him he loved so greatly. How many things we learn from those we love! And, my! what an example Jesus was! He walked in love. His every act was wholly sanctified by love. Misunderstood speaker in the language of every age and race of men, healed every sick, blessed little children, washed men's feet, kept faith with the Father, and love, boundless love, for His fellows!

How do we achieve today? When we make progress, do we make it in love? Many years were left on old, faithful Paul. "I bear in my body the marks of the Lord Jesus" (Gal. 6:17). Love-marks! gathered in Europe, Asia, and the isles of the sea. He walked in love. He didn't content himself with walking a little in love, but he walked as far as he could, as long as he could, and often contrary to the counsels of men.

(2) The Length of Love.—"Love never faileth." Never! A thousand times Paul could have given up if he had not loved; but he loved, and he didn't give up. He could not feel the bruises on his body for the love in his soul. He was a fighting man when it came to cheapening his blessed Redeemer. He cared not for the chains of iron—he gloried in the cords of love which bound him to his Lord so that nothing could separate him from the love of Christ. Paul knew love never ceased. This principle he learned from Jesus. Love arose a great while before day; it remained up all night; it sweated drops of blood; it bore the cross; it said, "Father, forgive them," because it was endless. In another place, Paul says, "Walk in Christ"; here he says, "Walk in love." The two are one. "As ye received Christ Jesus, so walk in Him."

(3) The Coming Completeness of Love."—"Now, we know in part." We are children. Paul a child? With all his learning, wisdom, and revelation from God? Yes, a mere child as compared with what he had yet to learn in the heavenly home. Paul's was a Christ-filled life, and he had hopes for a gainful death. "For me to live is Christ; to die is gain." Since he first met his Lord he had walked (served) in love, and at last he could look forward to a completion of all things in Christ, when he should know as he was known, i. e., completely; and when faith and hope had ripened forever into love, and love should live forever.

And may we walk in love—the true love for Jesus Christ until our service shall be completed and we, too, receive that perfect love in the heavenly home. If we walk in love, truly our struggling Churches will become powerful, our great Churches will become effective, and victory will be with our banners. If we have lost the love, how shall we walk in it? If we have lost the Christ, how shall we walk in Him? We can find Him as others found Him long ago at the place of praayer!

THE FIRST OPENING OF BETHLEHEM COLLEGE.

Bethlehem College opened its doors for students September 12th. It was indeed a good day. The opening exercises were very enthusiastic and inspiring. While the building was not complete, and the opening was held in the Church, the best spirit prevailed throughout the day. We are promised the building in a short while. Forty students were enrolled the first day; others are to come later.

A few weeks ago there was a move begun to interest the Churches, Sunday Schools and individuals in furnishing a room of the dormitory. This is working fine. Already we have money for three. The name of the person or society furnishing a room will be placed over the door. Bro. J. O. Peek, of the New Harmony Church, was the first to pay into the treasury of the building fund and the first to send money for furnishing a room ($50). Mrs. Anna Johnson, of Norfolk, Va., and Mr. and Mrs. J. S. Stephenson, of Kite, Ga., send a check each for room. There are four others promised.

Quite a number have sent and brought books for the library. Bro. J. W. Payne gives a "Biblical Commentary" and "Encyclopedia Britanica." Dr. J. T. Clack brought twenty-eight books to the opening. All we need just now is the co-operation of the people to make a school of which we will all be proud.

Rheumatism and Indigestion

Practically all physicians and medical writers are agreed that there is a close relationship between Indigestion and Rheumatism. This view is substantiated by the fact that Shivar Spring Water, which is probably the best American mineral water for Dyspepsia and Indigestion, relieves Rheumatism and the Rheumatoid diseases, such as Gout, Sciatica, Neuralgia and Nervous Headache. Physicians who have studied this water and who have observed its affects in their practice, believe that it relieves these maladies by rendering the digestion complete and perfect, and thereby preventing the formation of those poisons which inflame the joints and irritate the nerves, and also by eliminating, through the kidneys, such poisons as have already been formed.

If you suffer from Rheumatism, Indigestion, or from any curable disease, accept the guarantee offer below by signing your name. Clip and mail to—
Shivar Springs,
Box 16-D, Shelton, S. C.
Gentlemen:

I accept your offer and enclose herewith three dollars for ten gallons (two five-gallon demijohns) of Shivar Spring Water. I agree to give the water a fair trial in accordance with instructions which you will send, and if I report no benefit you are to refund the price in full upon receipt of the two empty demijohns, which I agree to return within a month.

A WAR PRAYER.

Mark Twain.

O Lord our God, help us to tear their soldiers to bloody shreds with our shells; help us to cover their smiling fields with the pale forms of their patriot dead; help us to drown the thunder of the guns with the wounded, writing in pain; help us to lay waste their humble homes with a hurricane of fire; help us to wring the hearts of their unoffending widows with unavailing grief; help us to turn them out roofless, with their little children to wander unfriended through wastes of their desolated lands in rags and hunger and thirst, sport of the sun flames of summer and the icy winds of winter, broken in spirit, worn with travail, imploring Thee for the refuge of the grave and denied it—for their hopes, blight their lives, protract our sakes who, adore Thee, Lord, blast their bitter pilgrimage, make heavy their steps, water their way with their tears, stain the white snow with the blood of their wounded feet! We ask of one who is the spirit of love and who is the ever-faithful refuge and friend of all that are sore beset and seek His aid with humble and contrite hearts. Grant our prayer, O Lord, and Thine shall be the praise and honor and glory now and ever. Amen.

Mark Twain said of this prayer: "I have told the whole truth in that, and only the dead men can tell the whole truth in this world. It can be published after I am dead."

And it was.—Selected.

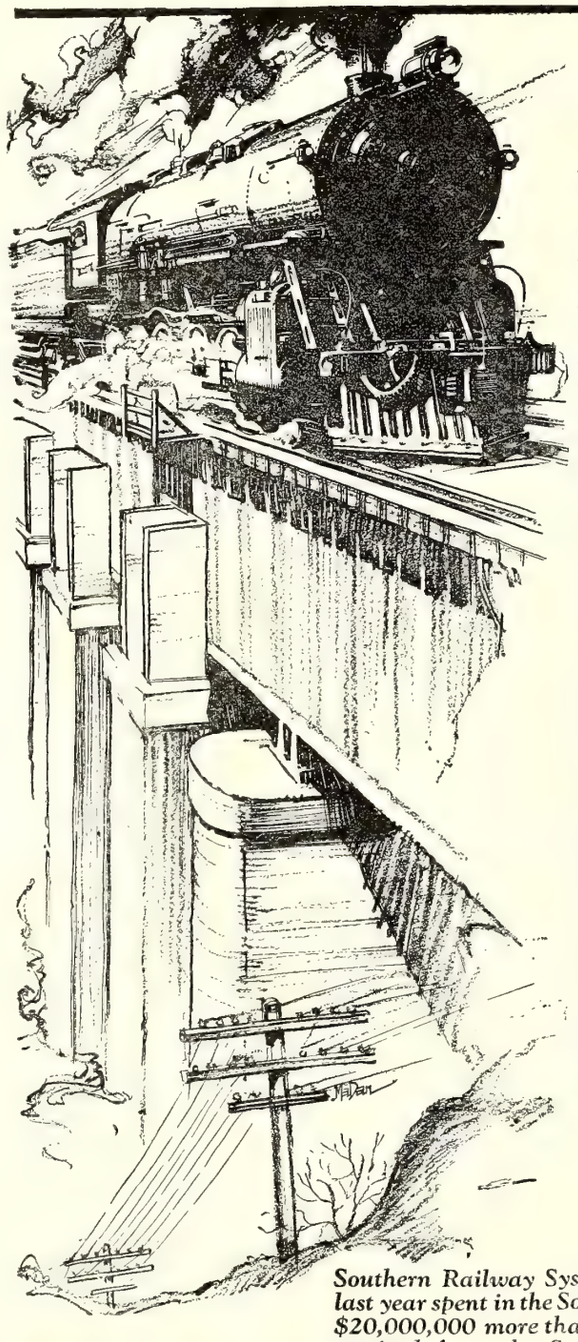
WASTE OF TEACHING.

The segregated school, in which backward children are separated from their more intelligent associates, has been condemned by some as more expensive than the "straight" school. Statistics prove that it is slightly more in cost than the old scheme, but also show that a great saving is effected in teaching and in time.

Miami, Fla., reports that in her split schools the percentage of failures has been reduced from more than 15 to less than 5 per cent, and that one-tenth of her enrollment has received an acceleration of a half year. Superintendent Tupper, of the Southern city's school system, says:

"Failures represent wasted teaching, teaching bought and paid for, but which has failed to result in proper development, which must be repeated and paid for again. A reduction of failures from 15.3 to 4.7 per cent is a reduction in the amount of wasted teaching equivalent to $8,000 annually."

SOUTHERN RAILWAY SYSTEM



Keeping pace with the South

The first American locomotive to enter actual service was the "Best Friend" of 1830. Built in a New York foundry, shipped by sea to Charleston, it hauled the first passenger train on what is now the Southern Railway System.

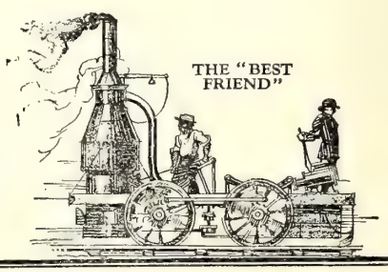
Twenty-two hundred locomotives, some of them fifty times as heavy as this famous pioneer engine, and 70,000 cars, operating on 8,300 miles of Southern Railway System lines, are now doing the work that was begun by the "Best Friend."

From the Ohio and the Potomac to the Gulf, from the Atlantic to the Mississippi, the far-flung rails of the Southern reach across twelve states with 40,000,000 inhabitants.

The Southern serves the South—from the northern gateways at Washington, Cincinnati and Louisville—and the western gateways at St. Louis and Memphis—to the ocean ports of Norfolk, Charleston, Savannah, Brunswick and Jacksonville—and the Gulf ports of Mobile and New Orleans.

Operated by men of the South, who have been bred in its traditions to understand its problems and its needs, the Southern keeps pace with the South. The investment in its properties is now more than $710,000,000, of which $285,000,000 has been expended in the past two decades.

With the continued cooperation of the people of the South, we will be enabled to command the capital for the greater transportation facilities that Southern development will inevitably demand.



Southern Railway System last year spent in the South $20,000,000 more than it received from the South.

THE CHRONIC KICKER.

He kicks about his boarding-house,
He kicks about his bed,
He kicks about most everything—
Wants something else instead.

He kicks because his cow is red,
Because the grass is green;
He'd kick his mother out of doors,
He is so low-down mean!

He kicks about the preacher,
He kicks about the pews,
He kicks about the deacons
And the congregation's views.

He kicks about the hymn-books,
He kicks about the choir,
He kicks about the organ,
At a piano shows his ire.

He kicks because the pastor's term
Is lengthened by a year,
And because the congregation,
As a whole, won't interfere.

He kicks—but what's the use
To inquire why he kicks?
He kicks because to kick is one of old Satan's cutest tricks!

GOODWIN.

Miss Sallie Goodwin was born May 17, 1874, and departed this life September 10, 1923. In early life she made a confession of Christ, and united with the M. E. Church, South, in Winston-Salem. On removing to Greensboro later she united with the First Christian Church, where she has for eighteen years lived a faithful Christian life. For twenty-seven years she has made her home with Mrs. K. W. Webb, her loyal friend, who, together with many other friends, she leaves to mourn their loss. Services were conducted at the residence by the pastor.

AYSCUE.

Richard Glenn Ayscue was born April 24, 1856, and died August 16, 1923. He was married March 18, 1889, to Miss Stella Eaves. Three children were born and have gone before, one an unnamed infant, and twins—McHurty and Mattie Pearl Ayscue, died when nearly nine months old. There was only a few days between their deaths. Brother and Sister Ayscue secured Cassie Eaves, a niece of Sister Ayscue, upon whom they lavished their love and interest. She has proven very worthy; indeed, as faithful, loving and helpful as any child could be. She married Sollie Ayscue, a nephew of Richard Ayscue, and the two have taken the place of faithful children. They are a great comfort to Sister Ayscue, who survives her husband.

Bro. Ayscue joined Liberty Church when a young man. He has been numbered with the most faithful and best of the Church and community. He loved the house of God and the servants of God. His was the welcome home of the preachers. He will be remembered by as many as any good man that has lived in our Church.

The end was a victorious one indeed. He often said to his loving wife and friends, who did all they could to keep him, "Let me go; I shall be so much better off."

Funeral service by the writer, assisted by Rev. G. J. Green. A great crowd was present, giving evidence of the love and esteem of the man that had lived.

Love a Necessity in the Christian Life.—

For Paul, as for Christ, there is no possible discharge from the duty of love, no substitute for it. Other things, even so-called spiritual gifts, are not only no substittues, but themselves are worthless without love. * * * God's whole redemption is to a life like his own, to a sharing life; and that life is love.—Henry C. King.

A Great Find in Radium.—

The world's largest deposit of radium has been discovered in Ferghana, Russia. This find is expected to prove "a tremendous advantage to science and a boon to the masses," according to a statement by the New York Radium Institute. It is also hoped that, as a result of this discovery, the price of radium will be brought down to the point where it may be put into every hospital in the land and made available to all, whereas the scarcity and high cost of it makes it prohibitive to many at the present time. The discovery of redium-bearing ore in the Belgian Congo last fall caused a decrease in the price from $110,000 to $75,000 a gram. It is said that the world's supply of radium was estimated last July at eight ounces, of which three and one-half ounces were extracted in this country. If the curative properties of this strange substance should prove as great as has been anticipated, an increased supply, with diminished cost, will be an infinite blessing to suffering humanity.

Real Religion the Need of This Day.—

Bishop Shahan, rector of the Catholic University at Washington, who recently returned from Europe, reports that a religious wave seems to be sweeping over France and Italy. A majority of the Churches in these countries are crowded with worshipers at the early morning services on week days as well as Sundays. Many young priests have been ordained in France during the last five years, and the minds of the people are turning to religious matters. This is said, of course, concerning the Roman Catholics, and may not be true, at least to the same extent, of Protestants. And yet it is gratifying to learn that here are spiritual flood-tides setting in anywhere in the world, for Christianity itself has been at a rather low ebb. There must be a great revival in the Protestant Church, which will swing us back to fundamental doctrines and a vital religious life, or the very foundations of the Christian Church will crumble away. There will be either another Pentecost or the judgment soon.

"Remember, therefore, from whence thou art fallen, and repent, and do the first works."—Rev. 2:5.

War Is a Denial of Christianity.—

An American general who helped smash the Hindenburg line has publicly come forward to support an idea first proclaimed by William James, in his famous essay, "The Moral Equivalent War."

Recently a banquet was given in honor of General John F. O'Ryan, organizer and commander of the Twenty-seventh Division. As was to be expected, the toasamaster recited the triumphs of the general's war record. Then came the surprise. The guest of honor startled his listeners with this response:

"The chairman has done exactly the thing which ought not to be done today. He has lauded my war record. No man's exploits in killing should be lauded now. We soldiers are not ashamed of the way we fought, but those of us who know anything know that fighting is not glorious. No matter how righteous the cause, the experience of a soldier at the front tends to lower his finer sensibilities. * * *

"War is the denial of Christianity and of all the most sacred things in life. It exalts force. It thrives on lies. It is the product of hate and fear and cannot by any stretch of imagination be waged humanely."—Boston Transcript.

Can Men Do the Impossible?—

Do you think men can do the impossible? Dr. J. H. Jowett says they can, and then proceeds to explain as follows: " 'Stretch forth thine hand!' But that is just what he was unable to do. His hand was withered. His hand had hung there for years, a rebel to all the commands of the will. The Lord's imperative was the demand of the impossible! Yes, but the man obeyed. 'He stretched it forth.' What he had been unable to do, he did at the bidding of the King. Christ's commandments are always accompanied by adequate supplies of grace. His commandments are really inverted promises; every one is a true bond that the Lord will provide the needful power for its fulfillment. When we begin to obey we release the power, and we discover that the requisite ability has been given by the gracious Master who gave the call. Let me, therefore, not fear the decree of the Lord. If 'His commandments are exceeding broad,' His love is exceeding deep. He will not mock our souls. He will not make us thirst, and then hold the water beyond our reach. He is faithful who called thee. Rise to obey, in all thy lameness, and thou shalt find that thy feet and ankle bones receive strength."

Undemocratic Education.—

Education finds a new critic in Charles M. Schwab, whose views, given in the New York World, shows he condemns colleges, not college men:

"The system of education in America today is undemocratic. It tends to mold the young manhood of the country into a set type. That type is peculiar to a certain environment of books, of music, of art. It is a type which cannot comprehend the dynamics of the workingman's situation; which fails to recognize the importance of the workingman; which even overlooks the distinct entity of the workingman in the molding of a nation.

"The educational system is, in this sense, narrowing. It creates an undeniable atmosphere that men become rooted in. Once set in this atmosphere, it is impossible to make them comprehend any problems save those of their immediate surroundings and personal thoughts. That is why we seldom find a college man who is a fit executive for thousands of steel workers.

"American colleges need to broaden their outlook. They need to mold men that can see across distances—not into themselves. They need to cover more territory, and this territory needs to engulf the average citizen. For, what good is education unless it makes for racial progress, unless it produces a class of men that can bear the burdens of the nation rather than live their own selfish lives?"

A Burning Shame.—

If there is a more implacable enemy in the world against anything, or any person, than is the liquor business and its friends against prohibition, then we are pitying that person. It is not a question of guilt or of wrong, but it is a question of getting a verdict against the man who stands for prohibition. The N. C. Christian Advocate, in its issue of September 6, says:

The secular papers throughout the country that are inclined to sympathize with the liquor traffic, and seem to take a delight in belittling those who favor the enforcement of the eighteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States, have given great prominence to the charges of grand larceny and forgery which a grand jury in New York City has found against Mr. W. H. Anderson, superintendent of the Anti-Saloon League of that State. If Mr. Anderson is guilty, he ought to suffer for his crime. But, listen to the board of directors of the Anti-Saloon League of New York State:

"We admit that Mr. Anderson received the money mentioned in the indictments. But this board, in the exercise of its legal power, had previously unanimously authorized its payment, has since ratified it, now approves and upholds it, and squarely denies that the league has been robbed of a penny."

Liquor papers and advocates of the liquor traffic will not scruple to crush any man who is trying to put down the accursed stuff. No man's character or even life is safe in the hands of such a bunch. It is time for all lovers of sobriety and law to take a firm stand, and stand regardless of the cost.

NOTES-PERSONALS

The letter of Rev. W. T. Scott, concerning his field of labor for the past year, is indeed a most interesting review of his work. It will appear in the next issue, and will be read, we believe, by a number of our people. It indicates a year of good work as a pastor.

Rev. J. W. Wellons, D. D., had the misfortune to get a fall recently in which he was quite badly hurt, and from which he is recovering very slowly, although he is up and around in his room. He is suffering a good deal of pain from the hurt he received in his side. We trust he may soon be able to get around as usual.

Rev. H. S. Hardcastle, the new pastor of the Suffolk Christian Church, has entered upon his labors as such, and seems to be getting along as might be expected—very well. We wish him great success. Dr. Staley spent more than forty years in the same field, and still holds a warm place in the hearts of the people there. We wish Bro. Hardcastle may do as fine a work and have as many years to serve that people, if in keeping with God's will.

On Friday afternoon, September 28, 1923, Rev. W. W. Staley, D. D., who has been so extremely ill in the hospital at Winston-Salem, N. C., for several weeks, was improving very nicely, and if no reverse occurs, he hopes to be able to leave the hospital on Saturday, October 6th, and go to the home of his brother at Burlington, N. C. This will be good news for his many friends throughout the Church. We all rejoice in the prospect of speedy recovery and wish for him many days of high usefulness yet before he may be called to go to his long home.

We should like to know how many families are using the "Family Altar" services prepared by Rev. H. E. Rountree, of the United States Navy, Portsmouth, Va. It is no secret that many of the Church members of this day do not have a family altar. We have asked Chaplain Rountree to furnish us with such helps for the family altar that we may stimulate, if possible, our people to a larger use of the family altar daily. It is needed in every home where it is not now established, and we trust that many of our readers will use the help which Bro. Rountree is so generously giving to our readers.

This Saturday morning, September 29th, came this message by wire from our nephew, Mr. J. Herbert Barrett, Baltimore, Md.: "My precious Sue left me last night. Funeral Monday, 3 o'clock P. M.—Herbert Barrett." We have no particulars, this being the first intimation of her illness. Mrs. Barrett was a remarkable woman in several respects. Though she was reared in the lap of plenty, she was a woman of remarkable common sense. She was also a most extraordinary mother. If we were called on to give the proof, we should unhesitatingly present her children as proof. She reared them to be little ladies and gentlemen, polite and accommodating, whether in the home or at play. She has surely distinguished herself as a mother in this day when so many children have so little regard for parental authority. God bless her memory and the loved ones she has left behind her.

Rev. L. E. Smith, D. D., and his Temple congregation are working hard to open their new house of worship on the fourth Sunday in October. It may not be possible to get ready by that date, but they are working hard to that end, and it is much hoped they may succeed. It will be an occasion long to be remembered, and will, we trust, mean a new day for the Temple congregation. It will be the most beautiful Church building in the Christian Church, North or South, East or West, and perhaps the finest Church building in the city of Norfolk of any denomination. That is saying much for the Temple congregation, when only a few years ago they would have thought it quite out of the question to think of a building that would cost $50,000. But now it has come to the test; they are building, and will soon have ready for occupancy, one costing possibly five times that sum. Let us all, as far as possible, get ready to attend the opening service when it comes

The Santa Isabel house of worship is about ready for dedication. We sent over the chairs yesterday. This is a splendid house of worship. The chairs are excellent. The pulpit furniture is made of native cedar, and was donated to the Santa Isabel Church by all the Christian Churches in Porto Rico, at a cost of $205.00. This furniture is very pretty, and the best of it is the wood ants, which are such a pest here, will never eat it as they do all other kinds of woods, especially wood which comes from the States. The dedication is set for September 7th, at 7:30 P. M. Dr. J. W. Harriss, president of the Polytechnic Institute of San German, will preach the sermon. I will have charge of the dedicatory service. The twelfth annual Christian Conference will assemble on the morning of September 8th, at 9 o'clock, and continue till Sunday night. Bro. Ojedo, pastor of the Church, and the Church in general, are delighted with the Church and the furnishings. Such a nice, workable little Church can hardly be found in Porto Rico.—Rev. D. P. Barrett, Ponce, Porto Rico.

We spent Sunday, September 23rd, with the Church at Union, Alamance County, N. C., in order to let Bro. W. C. Wicker off, so he could attend the funeral of Mrs. W. G. Clements at Morrisville. Dr. Wicker had been engaged as supply for the Union Church for that day, as Dr. Fleming, the pastor, was away. It had been many years since we had visited this dear old Church. It is one of the oldest Churches of our people in Central North Carolina. It is one of our strong Churches. Since our last visit there, many of the leading members have been called to their reward, so that in some respects it is almost a new congregation. They have a very good Church building, erected with concrete blocks, which serves their needs very well. They have been blessed with the ministry of a number of our ablest men. I noticed on the walls the portraits of three of their former pastors, viz: the late Rev. Alfred Iseley, Rev. W. S. Long, D. D., and the late Rev. J. W. Holt. We had a pleasant day and, as we trust, a good service. On this occasion, we noticed the sons of the men we knew quite well forty years ago, who were then in the prime of life, but now they are not only gone, but their sons have hair as white as was their fathers in those days. I recall especially the face and the white hair of the late Dr. E. F. Watson. Now his son, Dr. Geo. F. Watson, who, although he has moved from the community, was there on a little visit, and, if possible, his head is whiter than was his father's when we last saw him. We met many others whose names we cannot recall, but on many of them the frosts of many winters begin to show the marks of age. The Church has a large cemetery, and it has many graves; time is flying, and we are going, one by one, to our long homes. We had dinner with Bro. and Sister R. W. Fitch.

A Weekly Presentation of Truth for the Christian Life.

BUILDING THE CHRISTIAN LIFE ON THE RIGHT FOUNDATION, AND THE OUTCOME.

"For other foundations can no man law than that is laid, which is Jesus Christ. Now, if any man built upon this foundation gold, silver, precious stones, wood, hay, stubble: Every man's work shall be made manifest; for the day shall declare it, because it shall be revealed by fire, and the fire shall try every man's work of what sort it is. If any man's work abide which he hath built thereupon, he shall receive a reward. If any man's work shall be burned, he shall suffer loss, but he himself shall be saved, yet so as by fire.—1 Cor. 3:11-15.

We are facing and approaching two great buildings—buildings of human life. The foundation has been laid for us. All true structures must have a safe and solid foundation. Here are two men who propose to build, each for himself. After looking the situation over carefully, one decides that nothing short of the sure foundation will satisfy him. The building he is to erect is a symbol of the Christian life, and accordingly he assembles the material for that purpose. He piles up gold and silver and precious stones—symbols of truth and righteousness and love—and from these he intends to build a structure that shall stand the test of the storms of life. He means to build on the foundation of Jesus Christ. The other is a man who likes to believe he is thinking for himself. He, too, looks over the one foundation, but decides he can do just as well by making another foundation for himself. He selects a place for his building on the sand. He assembles material with which he proposes to erect his house. He gathers wood, hay and stubble and begins his work. Both houses are being constructed in easy reach the one of the other. Both buildings are completed and the men occupy.

One day, dark clouds are crowding the sky. There is thunder in the distance. It comes nearer, and as it comes, the lightnings begin to flash in fury. The wind is driving the clouds hurriedly. The storm is rapidly approaching, and all of a sudden it bursts upon the two structures, the one which was built on the sure foundation of gold and silver and precious stones stands. The storm strikes it furiously, and though it seems to quiver under the terrible pressure of its rage, it stands, and when the dark, angry clouds have emptied their fury, the building is unhurt. The other man, having chosen to build on a sandy foundation and of poor material, such as is represented by wood, hay and stubble—selfishness, falsehood and disloyalty—is soon alarmed because he feels the quiver of the house in which he lives. The storm strikes it with great force. It is seen to tremble as a man who is about to fall, and then in a moment of great fury the storm wrecks the building from its foundation, and it is instantly crushed beneath the destroying force and the house that was built on the sands is no more.

These are but two little parables in which Jesus Himself likened the men who were building a life for eternity. The one was after the divine pattern, and it stood unharmed by the ravages of the storm; the other was after the way of the flesh—the one stood, the other went down and was destroyed. The difference of the two men is chiefly found in two important particulars, viz: one built on the sure foundation, and he used the best material that he could get; the other, deciding for himself what he would do, built his house on the sand, and he used the poorest material—wood, hay and stubble—and the house went down in ruin. No wonder at the results which followed! In these word-pictures, the inspired penman was showing us the life of two men—one being built upon the sure foundation, while the other was built upon the shifting sands of time. One felt that he could not afford to act for himself. The other was independent. He was a man who thinks for himself. He is the modern man, who thinks for himself and will not accept anything which he cannot understand. The man who chose to have God do his thinking for him, stood and lived through the storm. The man who thought for himself went down and was crushed by the storm. Oh! the wisdom of the one and the foolhardiness of the other! One chose God's way; the other chose the way of the flesh. The lesson is clear.

The storm was sure to come, and coming, it made manifest the character not merely of the two men, but it revealed the strength and weakness of the work of the two men—the power of God in the one, and the absence of that power in the other. Reader, you can choose which way you will take. It is with you. Choose God and stand; choose the devil as your leader, and go down.

What was the difference between the two men as seen from the outside? Both were building and preparing for safety in the storm. One chose well and wisely; the other chose foolishly and very unwisely. Both were building. The one was right, and the other was wrong; and between the right and the wrong lies all the difference. One man honored God in his life and work; the other tried to honor himself. The difference is the difference between real Christianity and downright hypocricy. The Christian stands for the truth as God has given it to us. The hypocrite sets up a standard of his own, and loses all.

The essential part in every building is the foundation. Take that away and you have nothing of value. The Christian does not have to lay this foundation—it is laid for him by Jesus Christ. What the Christian has to do is to build on the one sure foundation. The other man thinks he can lay his own foundation in his own strength. The one succeeds; the other fails.

If there was ever a day in the history of Christianity when men are trying to lay their own foundations upon which to build character, that day is this day. In this effort, they act as if the one thing to be done is to pluck the crown from the brow of the Son of God. This one thing to be done is to rob Jesus of His deity. In this one act they sweep the field and take from Him every possible superiority over man. Having, as they suppose, reduced the Son of God to the level of man—to the level of themselves—they then go forward to set up their own ideal and to build their own foundations and erect their own superstructures. Having, as they think, established the fact that the Son of God is only a common man, they feel free to set up other claims for themselves. Were they to admit the deity of Jesus, they would at once deny to themselves all possibility of another way of life. Jesus must be reduced to the level of men or all hope of another way is gone. This seems to be the one end upon which the enemies of the Cross have set their goal? Jesus must be disposed of or his life will always be a rebuke to their sinful lives. With Jesus out of the way, these men imagine that they can make a salvation to suit themselves. But in this they are mistaken, for if Jesus were not, they would be helpless to bring salvation, being without hope and without God in the world. It is Jesus or it is death! We must take the one or the other. He is the one Foundation of the hope of salvation. Build your life on Him or plunge into the dark abyss of the hopeless.

Let no man suppose that he can pass into the home of the blessed without Christ. Your life will be tested, tested by fire, and that fire will make manifest the true character of your inner life. It will show whether you have built of gold and silver and precious stones, a structure after the plan of the Infinite, or upon the sands of infidelity, a house of wood and hay and stubble, a building that must go down under the crushing blow of the anger of God against all them who deny His Son.

ANOTHER PROTEST FROM DOVER.

Editor Christian Sun:

Your article four weeks ago, relative to the People's Church, of Dover, was somewhat misleading. The article states that the People's Church is a wealthy Church. There is no one in this Church that can be classed as wealthy. The Church membership is made up of people who are in moderate circumstances; people who work for a living. The original membership consisted of about 250, who left the Methodist Church and, under the leadership of our lamented and beloved founder and first pastor, Rev. Albert Willis Lightbourne, organized and built the present Church building. Since that time, many of the older members have been called to their reward. Those of the original members who still remain, in a large measure, are the strength of the Church, both financially and spiritually. There have been many accessions during the history of the Church, and a large number of these have come in during the pastorate of Dr. Helfenstein, and many of them are a real strength to the Church; but large membership does not always indicate great strength. Persons who join the Church and are never seen in a prayer service or a testimony meeting, or who take no interest whatever in things spiritual, do not, as a rule, add much strength. We may be old-fashioned, but somehow we cannot think the modern methods of getting people into the Church are very conducive to faithful service.

The past method of coming to Jesus with a broken and contrite heart and making confession of sin and asking forgiveness, may be crude and out of date, but somehow, after one makes such a start in the Christian life, with the heart all broken up and mellowed with love to Jesus Christ, there is a joy and peace that the soul never enjoyed before, and the outside world knows that something has happened in that life.

We hear much about educating people into Christianity. We believe that real religion is of the heart; if only the intellect is made Christian, and the heart is left wicked, there will not be much real Christian work performed. Jesus emphasized that ye must be born again! Some people speak lightly of the faith of the fathers, and pretend to have great sympathy for them in their ignorance and superstition; but they were willing to die for the faith that was in them. We wonder what the future Church will be! With the modern and liberal ideas that are being injected into it, there is great need, in our judgment, for some one to be on guard, that the Church may not slip from her moorings.

A few nights ago, I had a dream. I dreamed that I went into the Church—our own Church—and that I saw a strange object flying about the room, and that it developed into a large serpent, and in the serpent's mouth was the New Testament, and the serpent was trying to swallow it. Can any one interpret my dream?

A FACT IS A FOUNDATION.

Where there is a fact, an undeniable fact, there you have a foundation on which to build. It was Jesus who said: "By their fruits ye shall know them." (Matt. 7:20.) If a fruit tree bear peaches, then we know it is a peach tree. This fact is true of men and institutions, as well as fruit trees. If a man ordinarily bear the fruit of a righteous life, we cannot say he is not a righteous man. If an institution bring forth good to men, we know its character must be in harmony with the fruit it bears.

If the people, who are generally interested in the welfare of human society, might discriminate well and wisely between an institution and its fruits, they might readily decide what is the true value of the institution. The same is true of a teaching. Here are a number of men and women who teach certain lines of thought. If you will but carefully look into the fruitage of the teaching, one can determine with fair accuracy the value of the teaching they give. If the fruit is bad, the teaching must be wrong, and if wrong, all practical and well-meaning people would do well to withdraw from association therewith. If you lend your influence to wrong teaching, you make yourself largely a partaker of the evil which may accrue therefrom. If you support a system which bears not good fruit, you at least give your influence to a barren desert, so far as active good is concerned.

We are thinking of the institutions and teachings of men as to the fruits they bear in human society. What is the fruitage of an infidel's life? What is the fruitage of infidelity? Tom Paine taught the principles of infidelity. What are the fruits of Tom Paine's life? Can you point to a single Church he built? To a single college he established? To a single hospital he gave to humanity? To a single philanthropic enterprise he gave to the world? To a single mission he planted in the lands of darkness? On the other hand, how many precious souls did he lead away from God and into the darkness of sin and death? The same is largely true of any infidel who seeks to set his fellowmen against God and His truth.

If an institution is clothed with truth and saturated in righteousness, we may rest assured that its character is good and its fruits excellent, but if it is wrapped up in error and saturated in the very essence of opposition to truth and right, then we know the institution itself is wrong.

We are thinking of the fruits of what is commonly known in this day as modernism. We wish you to think it out, as best you can, and then answer this question, answer it true to the truth and in the fear of God: What are the fruits of Modernism? Does it bring great revivals of genuine religion to the minds, hearts and lives of men and women? Does it send the Gospel to the lands of darkness? Does it establish mission stations in the slums of our great cities? Does it visit the prisoners in our jails and penitentiaries? Does it look after the helpless and the weak? Does it seek to lead men away from sin to the Christ as the divine Saviour of the world?

A right answer to these questions, based upon facts in the profession of men and women of this day, may help us to determine the value of modernism to human society, as we have it today. Who can tell us of one man who is distinctly a modernist who has been greatly blessed in revival work? Can you name one modernist who has established missions in the slums of our great cities? Can you name one who has even led in the work of establishing and endowing a hospital for the care of the poor and the helpless? Can you name one who has led the way in the establishment of a college for the benefit of poor boys and girls? You may investigate all you can in order to get a right answer to these questions, and we believe in each instance the answer will be in the negative, and, if so, there must be a reason for the negative answer.

Modernists do not do that sort of work, so far as we are informed, and they do not because they have not the time or the inclination to undertake such enterprises—they are too busy trying to find out where they think they may locate an error in the Scriptures, or where they can show, according to tradition or some myth in history, that certain things affirmed by the Bible cannot be true because some unknown author says it is not true.

Judge the tree by the fruit it bears. What are the fruits of modernism? Look around you. Survey the field of Christian activities today, and what will you see, so far as the fruits of modernism may be concerned? Instead of an effort to help men up, and to a better and more fruitful life, they are pulling down the bulwarks, so far as they can, of the Christian faith. Does any one claim that this is a good work? When they have accomplished their purpose, when they have pulled down the faith that the people of God have had for centuries in the Bible, what do they give you in place of that faith? Absolutely nothing, unless it be a "perhaps" so, or "a may be so," and there they leave poor humanity struggling in its helplessness.

This is a most serious charge against our modernist friends, and if they cannot, or will not, disprove the same, it seems to us that their silence must be a confession of the truth of the charge? If there be any modernist who is a great soul-winner, give us his name and post-office address, that we may investigate. If there is a modernist who has given his life and time and energies to establishing rescue missions in the slums of our great cities, give us his name that we may verify the claim. If there be any pronounced modernist who has established a college for the education of poor boys and girls, give us his name and let us look into the facts.

The Sunday School Times, in a recent issue, under the heading, "Modernist Rescue Missions," says:

Does denial of God's Word save souls? Does agnosticism, or uncertainty, concerning the inviolable truth and efficacy of what God has declared, give life to the dead? While modernists are rejoicing in their emancipation from the narrowness and "obscuratism" of the old-fashioned faith, do they find that they themselves have a message which works miracles in the morally down and out? A reader of the Times writes: "I do not recall having seen in any writing on the subject any reference to the utter inadequacy of the modernist message in the case of derelicts who frequent rescue missions. Is there a single rescue mission in all the broad land which is conducted on the basis of such teaching? I do not know of one, and I am convinced that any attempt to conduct them on that basis would meet with failure. Aside from anything else, this looks like a fatal defect in their teaching, although I do not suppose they would see it in that light. If they cannot meet the needs of this class, what are they good for? A gospel that does not offer uttermost salvation to the uttermost sinner is 'another gospel'—which is not another—but there be some that trouble you, and would pervert the Gospel of Christ."

Surely if this modernist gospel be the true Gospel, it ought to bring forth fruits in keeping with what Jesus Himself said would be the fruits of Gospel truth. But does it? Paul tells us what the Gospel will do—let us read from Acts 26:18 as follows:

"To open their eyes, and to turn then from darkness to light, and from the power of Satan unto God, that they may receive forgiveness of sins and inheritance among them which are sanctified by faith that is in me."

If the gospel of modernism cannot turn the people in sin from darkness to light, and from power of Satan unto God, it must be because it is a spurious gospel, and has not the power in it for good.

A fact is a foundation. If the modernist can show the facts to be otherwise than as herein given, let him do it; but if he cannot, then he will do well to shut his mouth as to Christianity and call his teaching by some name more appropriate to the character of his work.

HOW CAN WE BELIEVE SUCH A FACT POSSIBLE?

We have, in our day, heard of many strange things taking place in religious worship. We once heard a man (and he was a Christian minister) who pronounced the benediction at the close of a service in the name of Moses. We regarded that as a most unseemly act, and we so believe it to this day. What on earth could any man wish to substitute the name of Moses for the name of Jesus Christ? We do not think the man who did it could give a good reason for such an unseemly act.

We now hear of another act in worship of a thing which seems even more inexcusable, if possible, than that. We are told by one of our exchanges that there are missionaries in India who will not use the name of Christ in prayer, and the reason they will not is because there are in their congregations men and women who do not believe in Christ, and out of respect to them they will not use the name of Christ in worship. That is one of the most unreasonable compromises of which we have heard. How can the heathen be taught to love and serve God, if those who already profess to know and worship Him can be so easily induced to abandon the use of the name of Christ in order to win a Moslem? What respect can such an one have for the missionary who is guilty of abandoning the God of his salvation that he may not offend a heathen. As we see it, we believe they will never go to such people to inquire the way of life. We believe the clipping below is from the Religious Herald.

For many months it has been charged that the London Missionary Society had missionaries in India who were omitting the name of Christ from the hymns and prayers they used in teaching Hindus and Moslems. Until now, no denial from the society has been forthcoming.

The point of view of these missionaries appears to be that, since the heathen do not believe in Christ, it is better for the missionaries to find common ground with them by leaving out the name of Christ.

Commenting on this, the Bible Call says: "If men can pray to God apart from the mediatorship of Christ, there is an end of Christianity." Paul became "all things to all men," but he did it that he might "by all means save some." He did not become anything to any man that was inconsistent with his constant testimony to the power and nature of the Gospel of Christ. From all the information we can get, it appears that the London Missionary Society refuses to instruct its missionaries on this matter. That is, its missionaries can either hide the Christ out of sight, or keep Him to the front, as they may think best.

This is essentially the attitude of modernists in America and everywhere else. It would seem to be an indication that the now broadspread charge is true that modernists have stolen into the directorate of this historic missionary society.

May God deliver our English Baptist brethren from this terrible thing. It is the absolute negation of the spirit that actuated William Carey, the great first modern missionary. It is strong evidence that apostasy from the Christ of the New Testament is getting a stronger hold among not a few of the official cast of English Baptists.

As elsewhere among God's people, it would seem that the modernism apostasy takes hold among the men of influence, rather than among the intelligent mass of Christians. We have assurances that the great mass of English Baptists are devout and Bible-loving Christians. We must not be prejudiced against prominent men. For the sake of the responsible positions many of them hold, as well as because in the case of Baptists in the South, they are approved and proven men of God, we must honor them and protect them from the tongue of suspicion. But it certainly should humble the hearts of even our best leaders and of all of us, when we face the incontrovertable fact that the devil is getting nearly all his voices for the modernism apostasy from among the men who have been trusted with high position in the Lord's work.

In this vital respect, Southern Baptists have great ground for gratitude. But the defection is so general and influentially placed in the religious world, and the atmosphere so surcharged with the philosophical outlook that produces modernism, that it would be to advise Baptists to live in a fool's paradise, not to caution them that we are in this matter in a war "not against flesh and blood, but against principalities, against powers, against world-rulers of this darkness, against spiritual wickedness in high places."

Let us thank God in much prayer that He has protected us so exceptionally from the shame of this apostasy. Let us beg of Him that He shall keep us so humble and devout in spirit, so consecrated in devotion to revealed truth, that we may be kept from the schism of this apostasy. And let us be spared the folly of closing our eyes and ears and minds and hearts to the heart-breaking apostasy which is as a conflagration in the midst of many Christian bodies, and refusing earnestly to consider ourselves lest we also fall into temptation.

DOES THE BIBLE MEAN WHAT IT SAYS?

We have received the following note from an esteemed friend and brother, with a request to answer, either privately or through THE SUN columns. Our brother says:

"Several times you have used the expression, 'the Bible means what it says,' in your editorials. I recall the use of it six or seven years ago in the Herald, and in THE SUN of August 30th, page four, third column.

"I wish you would either privately or editorially comment on the statement. For instance, in reference to Matt. 16:17-19; Matt. 5:40, 5:42, 6:25; John 20:33, and Mark 14:22.—Jas. H. L.

We confess we are a bit puzzled to know what commenting on our statement that "the Bible means what it says" has to do with any comment we may make on the passages named. The trouble is, our brother is very indefinite in his request. We can but guess at what is intended. It looks as if he objects to our statement that the Bible means what it says and then wishes us to comment on some of the most difficult passages in the New Testament. We take it for granted, therefore, that he has chosen these most difficult passages because it may be that we cannot answer them. If we could see what the answering of these passages has to do with the statement that we believe the Bible means what it says, we should naturally be more hopeful of doing what he wants done; but, as it is, we have to guess at his wish and then do the best we can. Doubtless, there are passages in the Bible which are hard to be understood, but how that fact has anything to do with "the Bible meaning what it says," we cannot see. However, we will do our best, even though he may think the Bible does not mean what it says.

As to Matt. 16:17-19, let us say: If he means that he wishes us to interpret Matt. 16:17-19, we are not sure that we can. By giving the keys to Peter with power to bind and loose on earth, it may be that Peter had just shown such remarkable faith in, and true understanding of, the real character of Christ, that in recognition of this fact Jesus honored Peter's faith by conferring on him this unusual power to bind and to loose on earth. But what does that mean? The giving of the keys was the symbol of special authority in the Church on earth. At that time, the Jews had the Gospel, but the Gentiles did not. Now, Peter was honored with the high mission of opening the Gospel door to the Gentiles. (See Acts 15:7.) Then, too, did not Peter just after Pentecost open the door of the new Church to the Jews? This may be the correct interpretation, or it may not, but we cannot tell how this passage has anything to do with the statement, "the Bible means what it says." Can Bro. L.?

As to verse 42, same chapter, Jesus was teaching the true generosity of the regenerated life. Do you say, but that will not work? It may be, and doubtless is, true that it will not work among people who have a large degree of selfishness, but as Jesus meant it, it works to the good of the person who does the giving.

As to Matt. 6:25, we think it teaches the disciples of Christ not to be overanxious about their temporal needs. You may recall that Jesus rebuked Martha for this very wrong. (See Luke 10:40.)

As to John 20:23, this is essentially the same question as that of Peter binding and loosing in the Church on earth. The answer to the one is practically the answer to the other. As a matter of fact, I am assured by the Word that this power was conferred upon Peter by the Holy Spirit to declare the terms of admission and of exclusion from the kingdom of God. We confess we do not understand it, but we have no doubt the Bible says just what it means, and if I could understand it, it would be plain enough.

Now, as to Mark 14:22, when Jesus said: "This is My body," He meant, as I think, this is My body sacramentally, and by that we mean that the disciples were seeing the bread, and that it symbolized the body of Jesus. We see the bread, and Jesus calls it His body because it symbolizes His body sacramentally. This is a mystery, but the Bible means just what it says, however much it may be that we do not understand it.

There may be many difficulties in these passages, but what have these difficulties to do with the Bible meaning what it says? The fact that we do not understand them proves nothing against the Bible not meaning what it says. You may not understand them, and we may not, but that has nothing to do with the fact that "the Bible means what it says."

It may be that you are not willing to accept my interpretation of "this is My body," but that makes no difference, so far as the main question may be concerned. To mean this or that, does not make the Bible mean anything else but what it says. We can show you, however, that our interpretation is in keeping with biblical usage, as may be seen by the following instances: "The word for is denotes only likeness in all metaphors and in the explanation of all symbols." I may quote a few instances, as for instance: "The seven good kine are seven years," "The bones are the house of Israel," "The seed is the Word of God," "This is he who hears the Word," "The field is the world," "The rock was Christ," "The women are two covenants," "The seven lamps are seven Churches." Symbolic likeness is certainly implied in all of these explanations.

Let us commend to Jas. H. L. and to all of our readers, not to be in too much of a hurry to decide that some passage in the Bible is not a right thing because we cannot understand it. Be patient and wait on the Lord for light, and in due time it will come. We knew a man who waited on the Lord for forty years for light on a question in biblical interpretation, and in all the forty years he could not get so much as a start in understanding; but one day, after forty years of waiting, the light came, and the question has not disturbed that man since. Let us wait, I say, on the Lord, for He gives light and not darkness.

HOW DO YOU COMPARE WITH ADAM?

The witty editor of the Richmond Christian Advocate declares he is sorry for Adam, and thus he goes on to say:

At times, we are sorry for Adam. He had the honor of being the first man, and he had that beautiful garden and no neighborhood chickens to scratch up his flowers. But he never was a boy and he had no mamma to love him and spank him and hug him when he hurt himself, and tuck him to sleep and tell him stories. And he had no grandma to come to see him and tell him about when she was a little girl and cook him cookies and pies and everything. And he had no grandpa to go walking with and dreaming with, and he had no sister and brother, and not but one sweetheart and no mother-in-law.

And he never rode on a one-man car nor sailed on a boat. He had no neighbors to talk to, and couldn't gossip with any one but the devil. He had no one but Eve to whom he could express his opinion, and she wouldn't listen. He couldn't sit on the front porch and watch the crowd go by. There was nothing to see but animals, and he soon tired of that. He had to name all the animals, and this was a hard task. But we all admit he did well at the task. That is, if they still have the names he handed them. What suits a hog better than hog, and what else would you call a flea?

But he had his blessings—Father Adam had! He didn't have a bad pedigree like many of his children. He was not embarrassed by his kinfolks. He had no bad blood in his veins. Many are cursed by parents and bad kin-folks. Adam escaped this disgrace. He was clean, pure, and strong.

He was God's child. God walked and talked with him. He was closer to God than any man since the fall. Being pure and innocent, he could come nearer to the holy Father. He had no worries and troubles, yet poor Adam fell. And with all the blessings we have, we, too, may fall.

Rev. H. A. Truitt, Beloit, Ohio, one of our Southern boys, who went North in the service of the Church, is open to engagement as pastor. He cannot forget the South, and would like to relocate in the work of the Southern Christian Convention. He is a graduate of Elon and has taken two years' study in the theological seminary. We wish he may find a place of usefulness in the Southern Convention.

ELON LETTER.

Talking yesterday with a very intelligent man relative to the Elon rebuilding program, I felt very much elated over the precaution with which our board of trustees and building committee have proceeded in the practical working out of their duty to the Christian Church in this crisis for our college. This man is one of our ablest leaders and knows the Christian Church historically, architecturally, spiritually as few men do. He said it is more than a betrayal of a trust for a board of trustees to construct buildings on a college campus without knowing what they are doing—it is a crime against the generation to come, he insisted.

When the fire of January 18th precipitated a rebuilding program for Elon, the executive board met the day after the disaster and ordered two things: that the full board of trustees be called in session five days later to consider the emergency situation, and that competent architects be invited to appear before the called session to give professional advice to the trustees.

Accordingly, the trustees met on January 24th, and did three things: decided on a rebuilding program adequate to fit the college for enlarged service, appoint an emergency committee to have general oversight over the program, and created a building committee to expend the money and erect the buildings.

The emergency committee then authorized the president to carry out certain plans to raise the money. That these plans were wisely conceived is evidenced by the liberal response the people have been making to the call for help this committee issued. We are nearing our goal and see the twilight brightening the eastern horizon of a new day for our college.

The building committee girded itself for its task by employing an architect with special fitness for college planning and a general contractor in thorough sympathy with the college, a man of large experience in building and ready to study every economy in the reconstruction program.

As the building program unfolded itself, the architect was instructed to visit the more recent buildings of other colleges. When the plans for the science building were under discussion, the professors of the sciences were consulted, and then sent to visit recently constructed science buildings. For the library, the library bureau, State officials, and competent librarians of experience were sought out for advice and criticism. The general education board experts have been constant advisers. It was this board that advised the building committee to have only one literary society hall in the administration building, instead of four as had at first been the plan.

I am now returning with the architect from a visit to Washington, New York, Boston, and Rochester, where we have studied modern methods of keeping fire and smoke out of library stack rooms and of properly lighting, ventilating and heating them. We were glad to see that no library in any of the cities visited surpasses or even equals our plan for these items. The care and caution taken on these points are due to the steady insistence on the part of Bro. P. J. Carlton that the library he is giving Elon shall score 100 per cent in all directions.

Our major interest in Boston, however, was with reference to the Christian education building. The best-informed man in the world today on properly housing the educational agencies of the Church is Walter S. Athearn, dean of the school of religious education and social service in the University of Boston. Mr. Hunter and I went up and sat at the feet of this master. He made most valuable suggestions and was loud in his praises of the idea of such a building. "When my school gets into its new quarters we are going to have just such a building," Dr. Athearn declared. "I am heartily glad you are pioneering in this work for the world," he continued. "You are right: Christian educational laboratory facilities must be provided by Christian colleges. The future will prove you are prophets in taking this forward step," he concluded. So absorbed were we in this interview that when we looked at our watches it was supper-time, as we say in Dixie. We had been too busy to think of eating, and had lost our dinner.

We then went to Rochester to visit the completely graded departmental Sunday School of the Lake Avenue Baptist Church. This school, according to Dr. Athearn, has best solved the problem of using its space twice—for assembly purposes and class instruction, which we had to do in our Christian education building. So we went over and saw that part of our building in active operation, and were confirmed in opinion that Dr. Athearn had wisely and properly counseled us.

It is right and proper that the Christian Church should know that those whom it has placed in authority over their college are exercising every precaution to give them value received, and more, for every penny they invest in rebuilding Elon.

A CALL FOR BETHLEHEM.

Dear Brethren and Sisters of the Christian Church,—Our Bethlehem College is a reality. I guess Prof. Hook, or some one of the board of trustees, will write of the opening. It was truly a great, good day. A fine crowd greeted the faculty and students on that happy occasion. Now, I am asking for a special favor for Bethlehem. I want one thousand men and women in the Southern Christian Convention to give $5 each within the next sixty days for Bethlehem College. Will you do it? It is not much, but it will put the institution on a solid basis. Now, brother pastor, will you help me put this over? Help me now in this time of need, please! God will bless you and you will always feel glad. I wish all of you could have been present at the opening session. It was the best day in our history in this country, and now since Bethlehem becomes a part of us, we must become a part of it. So please don't fail me in this time of need. Our college numbers its friends by the thousands, and now we only ask for a response from one thousand at $5 each to help us over the crisis. If we will pray God to direct in this matter it will be so easy to reach the goal. Pray mightily for Bethlehem, its faculty and student body.

Our educational work in the Far South is a new enterprise, and we must move cautiously and prayerfully, but the possibility is so great until we cannot fail. I, therefore, appeal to friends far and near to help us now.

O ye Christians, North and South, East and West, won't you come up to the help of the Lord against the mighty? God help you to respond now.

G. D. HUNT.

NOTICE.

The following is the record of action taken by the executive committee of the North Carolina Christian Conference, September 10, 1923, regarding reports from the Churches as to the year's work: "The executive committee of the Conference met and decided to request you (the secretary) to send Church letter blanks to all the Churches in the Conference, requesting them to report on these blanks to their respective local conferences, then these reports can be sent to the general conference and one report will be sufficient. The secretaries of thse several conferences can submit the report blanks to the conference at Wake Chapel. This will simplify matters." Signed W. C. Wicker, President North Carolina Christian Conference.

Church letter blanks have been mailed to the secretaries of all the Churches as directed by the above action of the executive committee. Ministerial report blanks have also been mailed to all ministers holding membership in the Conference. Doubtless, these reports should follow the same routine as the Church letters. RALLY TO DEFIANCE.

BY W. A. HARPER,

Secretary for Christian Education.

The appeal which Defiance College is making for $500,000 November 11th to 18th, should be heeded by all who properly appraise the strategic place of Christian colleges in the program of the kingdom. The Christian Church cannot survive without its educational institutions. Failure to realize this means disaster to the Church.

The American Christian Convention, in session in Burlington, N. C., went on record as favoring a united educational appeal. For various reasons, this united campaign could not be undertaken till January 1, 1925. Conditions have, however, arisen over which Defiance has no control, which makes it absolutely necessary for her to raise this $500,000 immediately. Her appeal deserves every consideration, first in her own territory, but also throughout the Church, which stands committed by Convention act to a united support of higher education among us. Defiance cannot be allowed to suffer without crippling the cause of every educational agency we have. We must raise this money for her. We must do it, that is all.

So, without any suggestion from President Caris or any one else that I do so, I have written this appeal to our people, and I pray that God may lead them to noble giving for Defiance in this campaign.

Much of this money should come in large gifts. We have the people with the money. Men and women of the Church to whom God has given wealth, I call upon you not to neglect this splendid opportunity to give liberally to this campaign. By responding generously now, you will guarantee the future status of our college. Do it Willingly, do it gladly, do it prayerfully, and do it without delay.

But we small givers, by our numbers, hold the balance of power. Let us be even more liberal in our gifts than the rich and prosperous shall be. Lincoln once said God evidently loved poor people best—he made so many of that kind. Let's prove our love for Him by giving cheerfully to Defiance in the hour of her need. We will live to rejoice over our success if we do. We will not escape the consequences if we neglect so great an opportunity to further the cause of Christian education in our Church.

Let every member of the Christian Church rally nobly to Defiance in this hour of her supreme need and of our supreme opportunity.

November 11-16—a red-letter date for Defiance and for Christian education in the Christian Church. Let's make it that!

A GREAT DAY FOR THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

September 30th was a great day for the Christian Church, not only of Richmond, but of all sections. On that day, the First Christian Church of Virginia's capital city was formally opened for worship. The day was beautiful. The spirit was exhilarating. Happiness over a noteworthy achievement was written on every face.

On December 5, 1919, a group of our people living in Richmond met with Dr. J. O. Atkinson in the Jefferson Hotel to discuss the advisability of undertaking the organization of a Church. Prof. P. J. Kernodle served as chairman of this informal meeting, and Miss Mildred Atkinson as secretary. At this meeting it was decided to make a beginning.

Accordingly, on January 1, 1920, a Sunday School was organized, with seventeen members and Bro. D. J. Kelly as superintendent. Meanwhile, the mission board had elected Dr. W. T. Walters as pastor. On March 1st he assumed his duties. On March 3rd, at a meeting in the home of Prof. Kernodle, the following trustees were elected: P. J. Kernodle, J. W. Price, P. J. Carlton, D. J. Kelly, and F. S. Gardner; and on March 4th, the court confirmed their appointment, though the Church, as such, was not organized formally till April 4th, at which time forty charter members were received. A lot on the corner of Grove Avenue and Sheppard Street was then purchased, Mr. L. P. Hartsook employed as architect, and the John T. Wilson Company secured as general contractors. Ground for the present edifice was broken on September 25, 1922. On November 18th, the corner-stone was laid, and on September 30, 1923, one of the prettiest and most serviceable of our Churches in the South was opened for worship, three great congregations attending as many services throughout the day.

The edifice which houses our faithful brethren in Richmond is beautiful without and within. It is well located in a growing section of the city. There is room for a Sunday School addition on the site, the present Sunday School rooms then to be used for social and recreational purposes. Plans for this addition are already in hand. The plant so far has cost, I am told, around $90,000. It looks like it might have cost at least $150,000. There is no evidence of skimping or cheapening. All the material, workmanship, and equipment are of the highest order. A sweet-toned pipe-organ and a choir of trained voices are but further evidences of the complete manner in which these stewards of the Lord have endeavored to discharge their obligation to build for Him and themselves a becoming house of worship.

It was a grand and glorious feeling to be present in this splendid edifice three times in one day, to see what was to be seen, to hear the messages of cheer and inspiration, and to indulge the pleasing conviction of the future service this organization will render our Church and the kingdom of Christ. Three princely preachers of our brotherhood, on the opening day, brought messages of uplift to anxious ears and hungry hearts. Dr. R. C. Helfenstein, at 11 o'clock, spoke on "God's Readiness to Speak to His People." In the afternoon, Dr. L. E. Smith chose as his theme, "The Church in Its Relation to the Gospel." Dr. J. O. Atkinson rounded out a perfect day with an eloquent sermon on "Greater Achievements Lie Ahead." One of the speakers at the afternoon service, when greetings were brought by the representatives of the different denominations of the city, said such a fine Church would demand fine sermons. Well, we had them on the opening Sunday, and, from the expression on Dr. Walters' countenance, I feel sure the congregation will continue to have them. I wonder how a pastor feels on such an occasion! I can testify that on two such occasions—Winchester and Richmond—Dr. Walters looked not simply good, but handsome. Col. J. E. West and Mr. J. M. Darden also spoke briefly at the morning hour.

The afternoon service was signal, too, by reason of the presence and greetings from Governor Trinkle of Virginia, and six distinguished ministers of the city, who bore greetings from their respective communions and spoke appreciative words for Dr. Walters and his people. Rev. J. J. Scherer represented the Lutherans; Rev. L. J. Powell, the Baptists; Rev. Geo. E. Booker, the Methodists; Rev. H. D. C. McLachlan, the Disciples of Christ; Rev. Russell Cecil, the Presbyterians, and Rev. Wm. E. Cox, the Episcopalians. "No minister," one of them declared, "has come to our city in the past seventeen years and won the admiration and love of us all, as has Dr. Walters." Now, Dr. Walters is a good man, but I am athinking that the broad, liberal principles of the Church he represents have something to do with the affection of his brethren for him. He is the embodiment of the principles of the Christian Church. I have yet to know a minister who embodies in his life and professional practice the principles of our Church who is not well-beloved by all other ministers.

The new Church of our brotherhood in Richmond has promise of growth and of large service to the general enterprises. It began a little more than three years ago with forty members. In all, since the organization, 114 members have been received. Seven have died and nine have been transferred. The membership on September 29th was ninety-eight. But at the opening service another was received on profession of faith and a family of five announced they would join as soon as their Church letters could be received. And when I say this Church promises large service and assistance to the general enterprises of the Church, I am not prophesying without reason. It was on the occasion of the laying of the corner-stone of the Church that a member of the congregation sent my spirits bounding by quietly informing me that he and his family had decided to give Elon $25,000 for endowment. This same brother has since given $50,000 for a building in Elon's rebuilding program and added other thousands for matters I am not privileged now to particularize. Other members of the congregation have given liberally to Elon while their own building program was on. Ordinarily, members of Churches with building programs in the mission stage feel they must keep for themselves all their funds. Not so the Richmond Church, and so the Richmond Church has a great and blessed future. Mark my words—"A great and blessed future"! No effort was made at any one of the three services on Sunday to secure gifts from the host of friends who assembled to do honor to this heroic band of sacrificing Christians—an unusual situation, and further evidence of the Richmond Church's "great and blessed future."

The modest men deserve a special word of praise for their untiring efforts to provide our people their beautiful house of worship. They are the pastor, Dr. W. T. Walters; the chairman of the building committee, P. J. Carlton, and the treasurer of the building committee, John T. Kernodle. All the members have labored devotedly, but these three have been exceptionally devout to the new enterprise. And they are all three Elon men!

Of course, I had to be there when this Church was opened for worship, as I had been when the plans were adopted and when the corner-stone was laid. I could not help thinking what Elon had meant to our Church in Richmond and what the Church there has meant and will continue to mean to Elon. Speaking privately with me after the day was done, one of the leaders there said: "What we have done here is added argument for the necessity to institute at Elon a fuller theological and ministerial course for the training of pastors and builders of such Churches as this in centers of population." This brother is not given to visionary words. He is a man of sound judgment and discerning wisdom. He sees visions in terms of practical plans. He is a real prophet. I believe he is right, and that ere long we shall see the courses, necessary to accomplish what he esteems to be necessary, fully instituted at our college.

The day was sad for some of us by the absence of two grand old men who ought to have been there and who under normal conditions would have been. It needed the benediction of their presence to complete the picture. I am referring to Bro. J. W. Carlton, who felt too indisposed to go, though he was at his home in Richmond; and Uncle Wellons, whose heart rejoices at every forward step and whose prayers for the success of our Church undoubtedly prevail with God.

It was a great day for us, beloved, in Richmond, Va., on September 30th. How glad I am that I was fortunate enough to be privileged to be present!

W. A. HARPER.

REVIVAL SERVICES AT UNION CHURCH.

Our revival service at Union Church, Surry County, Va., came to a close on Friday, September 21st, and we regard it as one of the most successful revivals that we have had in several years. Our esteemed pastor, Rev. A. R. Flowers, was assisted by Rev. W. H. Garman, of Norfolk, Va., who did the preaching. Bro. Garman is a forceful preacher and is dear to the hearts of our people. He has conducted our revival services for eight successive years, and we have engaged his services for one year hence. This is sufficient proof of our appreciation of Bro. Garman's services. He says that it is a pleasure to know our pastor and to work with him. Our Church is a peaceful brotherhood, made up of country people, and our pastor says many praiseworthy things of us.

MISSIONS

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Field Secretary.

A NEW CHURCH ORGANIZED.

Rev. G. D. Hunt, Wadley, Ala., is very deeply interested in seeing a Christian Church at Roanoke, Ala. A Christian Church organization has recently been effected there, and with a good start. A good Sunday School is also under way. We have several good members in the growing town of Roanoke, and we have good country Churches in the territory adjacent thereto. Unless we build a Christian Church at Roanoke, it will forever be a source of drainage from the membership of other Christian Churches. A city without a Christian Church, surrounded by sections in which there are Christian Churches, is always a source of leakage to the Church, for people are constantly moving from the country to the city. For the sake of the future Roanoke ought by all means to have a splendid Christian Church.

Bro. Hunt is now intensely engaged in raising $5,000.00 for Bethlehem College in sixty days, and is meeting with good success in his most worthy campaign. He should have encouragement and liberal response everywhere, for Bethlehem has opened her doors and is needing funds for immediate payments, that the building may be completed. J. O. ATKINSON.

RECEIPTS FOR JAPANESE RELIEF.

The full horrors of the Japanese situation are slowly coming to be known, and the destitution and great need of a stricken people are appalling. The extent of distress and suffering among our own people in Japan will be made known as soon as the facts are available.

Sufficient advice has been received to warrant the need for liberal contributions from individuals, Churches and Sunday Schools. Let the funds be forwarded as rapidly as possible to the writer, who will see that they are sent forward in the most expeditious manner.

FROM ELON COLLEGE.

Herbert B. Hunter, architect for the Elon rebuilding program, and President W. A. Harper have just returned from a trip to Boston and Rochester, where they consulted with Walter S. Athearn, probably the greatest living authority on religious education in the world today concerning the Christian education building now being erected here and observed the religious education work as carried on by the Lake Avenue Baptist Church of Rochester. Dr. Athearn accompanied President Harper and Mr. Hunter to Rochester.

The architect had drawn the plans for the building under the direction of the head of the religious education department of Elon, and the plans were submitted to Mr. Athearn. He heartily endorsed the plans, and after a conference of several hours, the plans were practically perfected.

In the final plans arrived at in the consultation the new building will have the following arrangement: On the lower floor of the building will be the Y. M. C. A. and Y. W. C. A. rooms. These will be so arranged that they will be available for social and recreational purposes, as well as for the regular meetings of those organizations. Entering upon these rooms will be two dressing-rooms at the ends of the stage, which will make impromptu plays possible, and they will be equipped for moving pictures. Each will have a kitchenette attached which will make them available for use by the social organizations of the college. This seems to be an ideal arrangement for the care of the social life of the college.

On the second floor of the building there will be a chapel, with a capacity of 400. This chapel will be used as the college assembly-room during the week, and for the citizens' Sunday school on Sunday. Opening into this large chapel will be four class-rooms for classes in religious education. Offices for the college pastor and the director of religious education will be situated on this floor.

On the third floor of the new building there will be a beginners' department adjoining a kindergarten for children under four years. The primary department will be in three grades. The junior assembly-room will be so constructed as to allow itself to be divided into six rooms, three grades for each of the sexes. The intermediate department will be similarly arranged. There will be a library and supply office for the Sunday School on this floor, and facilities for the senior department. This building, so arranged, will be easily available for the week-day school of religion which the college proposes to gradually extend.

Besides these features there will be provision made for the various auxiliaries of the local Church. It will be the most modern building of the kind in the world, and will be the only building of the kind standing on any college campus.

Mr. Athearn was enthusiastic over the plans as finally arranged, and the three men went to Rochester to see the up-to-date Church plant there, a part of which is being incorporated in the proposed Elon building. Mr. Athearn stated that he was glad to see the Christian Church again pioneering. This building will be unique, and will place Elon far in the lead in the work of Christian education.

Money for this building has already been provided, and work has been begun. It will be rushed to completion as rapidly as possible, as will all five of the buildings now under construction here.

While on their way to and from Boston, President Harper and Mr. Hunter made a careful examination of the leading libraries of the country with a view of incorporating the best library features in the Carlton Building now under construction. They were especially anxious to solve lighting and ventilation problems for the stack rooms. This building is to be equipped in the most approved library style, and will be in every respect modern. When completed, the Carlton building will have a capacity of 100,000 volumes, and adequate reading-room facilities to care for a much-enlarged student body. Its equipment is to be the best that can be had. In the Carlton building, Elon will have one of the most up-to-date library buildings in the country.

STILL AT IT.

It does not hurt us, but rather helps, to get away from our own circle sometimes and find out what other folks are doing. As opportunity comes, I endeavor to do this. On Sunday, September 23rd, I had a forced opportunity for such occasion. I had started to a Church several miles beyond Greensboro for the 11 o'clock service. My car always being so faithful, I did not allow much extra time to make this distance. My car became "sluggish" between Burlington and Greensboro, and added tire trouble in the latter place, I had to seek the assistance of a mechanic. When I was in position to resume my trip, it was then ten minutes of the appointed hour and twenty-four miles yet to make. I decided to abandon the trip, knowing that the pastor of the Church to which I had started could take care of the situation. I was within sight of the First Baptist Church, Greensboro. The bulletin-board had the announcement that Dr. J. T. Henderson, layman, Nashville, Tenn., was to be the speaker. Having heard so much of Dr. Henderson, I seized the opportunity of hearing him. His address on the big business of the Kingdom was great, masterly, powerful and uplifting.

At the close of the service, the pastor announced that the regular annual financial canvass would be taken in the afternoon. He called the names of about two dozen laymen of the Church, and each responded by presenting himself at the altar for prayer that the canvass might be done in His name and for His cause. The pastor remarked that pledges to the Seventy-Five-Million-Dollar Campaign would also be taken by the canvassers, giving those who had not already contributed a chance to do so.

It was four years ago that the Baptist denomination launched its great Seventy-Five-Million Campaign. If the Greensboro Church is a model of this plan and campaign, then our Baptist brethren are still at it—at it to see that every member has a part in the denomination's biggest undertaking. Only one more year remains to close the work, and yet they are not centering on collecting alone, but leading their people to give to a big and broad program.

I think that my inference is too plain for me to name it here. No big job can be done in a few months; and no great thing undertaken can be let go if it is right and is needed. And yet—well! C. B. RIDDLE.

AN EXPLANATION.

The Christian Church at Henderson, N. C., recently extended a call to Rev. C. E. Gerringer, Brown Summit, N. C., as pastor for the coming year. Bro. Gerringer accepted, but since accepting, his present pastorate have called him and will not accept his resignation. Bro. Gerringer being a man who wants to do the right thing, feels that God would have him stay where he is and finish his work there.

We, the Henderson Church, feel very much disappointed over not getting him, but we rejoice with those who are fortunate in securing and keeping him.

Bro. Gerringer says in a letter recently received by one of the deacons of the Church that he fully intended coming when he accepted, and was very favorably impressed with everything when he visited here. He doesn't feel that because his present Churches won't accept his resignation is why he should stay on there, but he feels that his mission there is not complete, and he is willing to do whatever the Lord would have him do.

We wish him much success in his work.

A SKETCH OF BETHLEHEM CHRISTIAN CHURCH, NANSEMOND COUNTY, VA.

By Wilbur E. MacClenny,

Suffolk, Va., and read by him before the congregation on Sunday, August 26, on the occasion of the dedication of the third house of worship since its organization.

Part II.

In 1858, the first interment took place in the cemetery, Rev. Joshua Livesay, the first steward of the county poor farm, being buried near the big white oak out there. Rev. Joshua Livesay was one of the pioneer Christian preachers, and always wore a long frock coat. At the time he was steward or manager of the poor farm, it was a common occurrence in summer for bears to visit the neighborhood, and on one occasion bruin made a visit to the poor house. The dog discovered him and began barking at him, and the bear went up a peach tree. Parson Livesay procured his gun and proceeded to shoot the bear. At the flash of the gun, the bear fell to the ground, wounded, and Mr. Livesay thought he was dead, and went up near him, but he was mistaken, and bruin stretched out his forepaw and seized the parson's coat-tail, whereupon Mr. Livesay tore the long tail of his coat off and got away, leaving the bear with that part of his garment. Under Dr. Wellons and his assistants, this Church had a phenomenal growth before 1860.

In its early days, the Church building served in a dual capacity as Church and school. Dr. R. E. Parker, a brother of Mr. Thomas Parker, who lived where Mr. D. L. Sumner now lives, was one of the teachers. We must relate one incident that happened to one of the present deacons of the Church in those days. Human nature has not changed, and the boys and girls liked to be with each other then as well as now. The benches were so arranged as to have a walk all around the inside of the house, and the last bench was on a balance to give room for this space. This, then young, brother was walking around this room with one of his girl friends, while Dr. Parker had gone to his brother's for dinner; and just as he was passing this bench that was on a balance, his hand accidently struck that old bench, and it fell against the next one, which in turn fell over, and the same thing happened to every bench down to the stove, which was a great, two-story wood heater, and the last bench, not having anything to strike against except the stove, it struck that, and broke the legs out, and down the stove went, to the consternation of all. When the doctor arrived, he made inquiry as to who had caused the downfall of so much furniture, and it was frankly told him, and while the young ladies made an eloquent plea for the young man, it was of no avail in the eyes of the doctor, who proceeded to the woods, procured a good black-gum, and proceeded to give the boy a dressing down that he well remembers to this day, notwithstanding it all happened long before the War Between the States.

Later, a school-house was built on the Church yard and stood for many years. Among the teachers of those days, we mention Mr. Stephen Archer and a Mr. Collins.

In 1861, this Church and community were both in a prosperous condition, everywhere there was plenty, peace and happiness, and the future loomed up brightly, but these bright hopes were soon to be blasted, for the great war was soon to break out in all of its fury on this section, and this Church and community, by their very location, were soon to be between the lines of the contending armies.

The record of the Church gives the following in regard to the time from February 8, 1862, when the last conference was held before the evacuation of Suffolk by the Confederate forces, and October 29, 1866, the date of the reorganization of the Church: "On the 8th and 9th days of May, 1862, Suffolk was evacuated by the Confederate forces, and in a few days afterwards, the place was occupied by the Yankees, who made Bethlehem a picket station and occupied the house for nearly or quite a year before they left. Before they ceased to occupy it they tore off the doors, the window blinds, the sash and some of the window frames, the pews, the pulpit and altar, door steps, the floor, the whole of the gallery and the weatherboarding and laths as high as they could reach, and burned or destroyed them. They built their fires in the middle of the house, smoking the plastering all over as black as soot, destroying the stove and fixtures, or what is more probable, stole it, together with the library, as the thievish Yankees did everything they could lay their hands upon."

These lines were penned on the 12th day of February, 1871, by Colonel John R. Copeland. Let us see a few other things that happened in those trying years. At the time of the seige of Suffolk, most of the floor and the stove were in the house, the Confederates used it for a short time, the floor being cut out around the stove for some distance, the stove sat on the ground, and when a fire was made the men would sit on the floor and warm their feet, and we have heard some of the old boys in gray say how well it warmed them. The Federal soldiers built a booth of branches of trees on the north side of the Church for their horses. Several skirmishes took place around this Church yard, between the outlying pickets and the Confederate scouts, some of these had hair-breadth experiences, especially one when a Confederate deserted who had joined the Union forces was on duty and was suddenly surprised and made the run for his life and escaped. There was a watering trough or box cut in the body of a large oak that stood near the old well by the roadside. One man was shot at the fork of the road while reading the old sign-post. In the last years of the war, General Ransom's command camped near here, and the next morning had a skirmish in this vicinity. During the seige of Suffolk, the whole community was filled with Confederate soldiers under Gen. James E. Longstreet, and the people proved their patriotism by their acts of help. We must not refrain from mentioning one thing that happened during this time. At one time, Gen. Longstreet was near Deacon John W. Turlington's home, and wanted a drink of water, and a courier, my grandfather, who related this to me, was dispatched to his home to get water for the general and his staff. The deacon furnished the water, but he carried it and held his pitcher and glass himself, passing the glass to the general and staff, as he did not want to part with them. Perhaps he had already learned soldiers too well.

We will now take a retrospective view of the original membership. Prior to 1866, 121 male members had joined this Church, and 156 females, making a total of 277. During this time fifteen male mambers had died from natural causes, 13 had been expelled for drink, 15 had removed, 1 had withdrawn, 4 had been dropped, 11 had been killed in battle, 4 died in the Confederate service, and 1 had died in a Federal prison and 2 had been dropped for swearing.

The following members of Bethlehem were killed in battle: Capt. Theddeus G. Williams (the muster roll of his militia company in 1859 is still extant, as well as his muster roll in the Confederate army), William W. Luke, John Murphy, Frank R. Pruden, John T. Holland, Milton Babb, Allen Powell, John J. Holland, George T. Faulk, Richard Bartlette and William H. Babb; James Luke died in prison, John T. Luke died from wounds, Charles H. Everett, James T. Harrison and John C. Pruden died in the Confederate service. This brings the list up to 66 lost from all causes.

Among the women, we find 6 dropped, 14 removed, 4 expelled, 25 died, 4 joined other denominations, 1 withdrew, and 1 had gone to the Yankees, making a total of 55, leaving a total membership of 156, which was thoroughly disheartened, scattered and disorganized on April 9, 1865, and it took them over a year to rally around their pastor, who had to flee his home and worldly possessions on account of his patriotism. He followed his men through those dreadful years as chaplain, a part of the time, and in other important posts the remainder. Many are the deeds of love and mercy he performed for his former members, there being now in this community a gold watch worn by the son of a Confederate captain, who was killed, and Dr. Wellons took his personal effects and returned them to his widow and orphans.

February 8, 1862, at the last quarterly conference before the evacuation we find the following present: Pastor W. B. Wellons, John R. Copeland, Wiley Knight, William Eley, Richard Copeland, Albert Smith, John G. King, Benjamin Griggs, Mills Pruden, Frank R. Pruden, John C. Pruden, R. H. Baker, William Archer, Aaron Archer, John W. Turlington, Abram Norfleet, John J. Holland, John Lassiter and Benjamin C. Garner.

The Church was reorganized October 29, 1866, and the following members were present: Pastor W. B. Wellons, Isaac P. Luke, John W. Turlington, Wiley Knight, John G. King, Richard H. Baker, Richard Copeland, Aaron Archer, Mills Pruden, Albert Smith, Joseph King, Harrison E. King, Thomas Bartlette, Michael King, and George W. Small. They then appointed an assessing committee, appointed a sexton, and Rev. William B. Wellons was requested to prepare a paper and present it to the next annual conference, giving the cause why no meetings and conferences had been held at Bethlehem since the 8th of February, 1862, with a view of having same recorded in the Church book. (This we have already mentioned.)

The work of construction is going forward on the new Church at Raleigh, N. C., and they are hoping to push the building to completion at an early day. Dr. Parry, the pastor, is greatly interested in the work, and so are many of the members. It will be quite a handsome house of worship when it is completed.

FAMILY ALTAR

"In Thee and in Thy seed shall the families of of the earth be blessed."—Gen. 28:14.

Conducted by Rev. H. E. Rountree,
Our Chaplain in the United States Navy.
(Use this in your daily devotions.)

MONDAY.

The Gospel of Self-Control.

"He whose spirit is without restraint is like a city that is broken down and without walls."—Prov. 25:28.

Read also: Ps. 25:9; Ezra 4:2, 3, 31, 32; Col. 3:13, 4:6; Luke 21:19; Matt. 18:4.

"In your patience, win your souls." To be patient is to deliberate, and to deliberate well leads to decisions that are best. All the misunderstandings, quarrels, fiery words, divorces, etc., are due to too much haste and utter lack of proper consideration. He who would do right, when he knows what is right, will surely find the right if he is patient and deliberate enough.

All strength is conquering strength, and the strength of deliberation gives guidance in justice, establishes harmony, administers helpfulness, saves useless words and silences unkind ones, prevents doing foolishly, makes one slow to anger, forgives transgressions, and is full of love.

You tried and failed, did you? Keep on trying. It's worth the effort; and as you succeed (and you will), you will be glad you tried, for your every failure will be at least a try.

Prayer.

Our Father, set a watch before our mouths and keep the doors of our lips. Fill our hearts with the graces of the Holy Spirit and temper our disposition to sweetness and our understanding to see wherein we have erred. May we hold our thoughts when we think we are offended and wait always for the wisdom of good sense to take the throne and minister good will to all. In Jesus' name, we ask it. Amen.

TUESDAY.

Taming a Lion.

"He that ruleth his spirit is better than he that taketh a city."—Prov. 16:32.

Taming one's self is like taming a lion. We are told that the one important thing in the taming of a lion is to make the beast think more of the tamer's anger than his own desire. As long as he can maintain this, he can make the lion do just what he wishes. But to do this, very drastic measures and methods are employed. He first starves him in order to reduce his ferocity. He sometimes uses a red-hot poker. He always uses the whip. The work of lion-taming is the same work every man has to do in conquering himself. First of all, he must think more of the true values of life than his own personal pleasures. To do this he must often starve himself with sacrifices and self-denials lest he grow too proud in self-sufficiency and untouched by the needs of others.

How is it with you? You are your own tamer. Are you conquering you?

Prayer.

Dear Father, make us to lay aside all those disguises which we wear and to bare ourselves with all our weaknesses and sins to Thy sight. The greatest troubles we have or know arise from most uncalled-for circumstances in which we have lost control and offend others. Show us the folly of hasty words, the wisdom of patience, and give us the courage to hold ourselves in check by which alone we may conquer. Bridle our tongues when we would speak angrily; silence our weak complainings, steel our hearts against temptations, and make our spirits like Thine, now and forever. Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

Winsome Christianity.

"He shall be like a tree planted by a stream of water."—Ps. 1:3.

That is what is said of a Christian. A stream of water makes glad everything around about it—the parched soil is refreshed, all life is green, joyful and fruitful. The little creatures of the earth, great and small, plunge their noses deep into the limpid flow until their eyes shine and their hearts beat with new life. The trees wave their green branches in joyful greetings to the friend that brings them abundant life.

So is the Christian who lives by God's refreshing stream. The countenance of a godly man is always lighter and his presence is always welcomed in the society of good intentions, and then his memory is sweet. There is a lone tombstone bearing the following epitaph: "She was always pleasant." Visitors linger longer there to think. A man once said of the portrait of his sainted friend, which hung on his wall: "Whenever I am tempted to do anything wrong, I look at that; and the life he lived and the pure face I see there recalls me to my better self." Covet this memory for yourself.

Prayer.

Our Father, help us to form the habit of looking for the good that we may do. Teach us to love as Thou hast loved us. This we ask for Jesus' sake. Amen.

THURSDAY.

The New Birth.

"Ye must be born again."—Jno. 3:3.

This was a mystery to Nicodemus, and he asked a very natural question: "How can these things be?" The question is still being asked, and because it is a mystery, many do not accept it, forgetting that they accept mysteries in everything every day, and that without a question. Here are some of them: It is a mystery how the mineral of the earth can become the vegetable of the trees and gardens and converted into fruit, but it does. It is a mystery that food, when eaten, becomes our blood, flesh, bone and sinue, but it does.

We graft the rose bush by taking the ordinary, or even wild, rose root and stem and splice the improved stock into it. Through this graft passes all the powers of the old life into the new, and the result is the fine, improved rose. In this the rose is born again. It is a miracle, and we accept it without a question. A sinner repents, turns to God, takes Christ and follows Him, and he becomes a true Christian man. What has happened? The old person that he was has had grafted into it the Christ, and now every passion and impulse of his life passes through the Christ in him and he is a new man.

Prayer.

Father of all mercy, in the meeting of our thoughts in these meditations, give us faith that knows no bounds, a knowledge of the realities of eternal life that reason cannot fathom. May we walk with Thee and know Thy companionship, that our earthly loves and hopes may be completed in Christ, who rounds out all human experiences. This we ask for Jesus' sake. Amen.

FRIDAY.

New Life by Grace.

"Wherefore, if any man is in Christ, he is a new Creature. Old things are passed away; behold they are become new."—2 Cor. 5:17.

Salvation is by grace and not by works, for it is made plain that we are created in Christ Jesus unto good works, which God hath before prepared, that we might walk in them. One of the finest passages in all the Scriptures is found in Eph. 2:1-10, of which our text is the climax. It describes fallen man, dead in sin, quickened by divine power and through the grace raised unto good works; that goodness is not the cause of salvation, but the result of it. The rich young ruler sought salvation through his goodness. The afflicted woman sought her salvation in science. There are those who seek theirs in the solitude of the monastery, and others in the donation of their wealth to charity: with what result, I think we all know full well. Any of them might be a villain at heart while doing these things. No man can recreate himself by anything he can do. "Can an Etheopian change his skin, or the leopard his spots?"—Jeremiah.

Prayer.

Heavenly Father, refuge of our souls, safe defense to all who trust in Thee, cause the light of Thy life to shine in our lives and make us new. Forgive us of all our sins. Set us free and bring us to all that is infinitely right and holy, wise and good. Amen.

SATURDAY.

The Purpose of Salvation.

"Created unto good works."—Eph. 2:10.

Man was created in the likeness of God and placed in the garden to dress it, keep it, cultivate it and make it fruitful and perfect for the Lord. This is the first and supreme symbol of the purpose of our life. When we are born again, we are placed in the undeveloped garden of ourselves, which is God's garden and vineyard; we are given responsibilities of others just like Cain was, and we are told to plant, nourish, dress, garnish and improve it, until it shall be like Him. Jesus made this plain in the parable of the steward and the parable of the talents.

Prayer.

Dear Father, we acknowledge our lost condition. There is no good in us. Have mercy upon us and spare us, and restore us this day. Grant that we of Thy workmanship may live godly, righteous, useful and fruitful lives according to Thy purpose. Bestow upon us Thy saving grace and raise us daily from the unseemly and the wrong unto completeness of ideals, beauty of holiness, light of truth and the glory of service, and may Christ be in our hearts forever. Amen.

SUNDAY.

Our Bible Day.

"Thy Word is a lamp unto my feet and a light unto my path."—Ps. 119:105.

Let's ask ourselves, what is the Bible? First of all, it is a record of the religious experience, convictions, and inspiration of the Hebrews in the Jewish age, and of the Christians in the New Testament age. Thus, it is the religious history of the world and man's greatest teacher. As such, it is more personally ethical and more truly spiritual than anything ever written, and therefore, to say nothing about its being the inspired Word of God, it is the richest treasure of instruction and inspiration ever known to man.

Prayer.

Dear Father, we believe that Thou hast given us this day for our true selves, and we know that Thou hast given us Thy Word, that we might know Thee and Thy way. Teach it to us and instill it in us and help us to spend our Sabbaths in its inspiration. In the name of Christ, we ask it. Amen.

NEW HILL, N. C.

The revival meeting at New Hill, N. C., began here September 16, 1923, and closed on Thursday night following. The attendance was very good. Rev. L. L. Wyrick, Elon College, N. C., and Rev. J. S. Carden, Durham, N. C., were with me and did the preaching. Their messages were well seasoned with the Holy Spirit. There were six reclamations, and the Church was very much revived. Five joined the Church. The music was good, and the singing improved from service to service. We are greatly indebted to the Baptist brethren for co-operating with us in the singing.

I. T. UNDERWOOD.

3,000 THE CHRISTIAN SUN. 9,000

There are between 8,000 and 10,000 families represented in the Southern Christian Convention, which means if a copy of THE CHRISTIAN SUN is placed in each family, a possible subscription list of 9,000 copies. There are now circulated approximately 3,000 copies, or about one-third of our Church families are reached. Hence, there should be added to the list 6,000 new subscribers in order to have the Church paper placed in every family.

Now, the great personal effort required to do this must be rewarded. To compensate this labor, if premiums are given, it will take 20 automobiles, or 40 radio machines, or 50 to 60 talking machines, or 90 to 100 typewriters, or 200 to 300 watches, etc. Don't you think you will have a good opportunity to secure one of these prizes?

But you need not confine your solicitations to your Church alone. You have friends in other denominations who will gladly assist you by giving a subscription. Make your appeal in a straightforward manner. True men and women are interested in the success of their friends and will lend a helping hand.

PREMIUMS GIVEN FOR NEW SUBSCRIPTIONS.

The subscription price of THE SUN, recently reduced, is now $2.00 per year—two six-month subscriptions at $1.00 each count as one year. One person may take as many as he may wish for himself or for others. Those in arrears should pay up and assist the solicitor by taking an advanced subscription.

SCHEDULE.

1. To one securing 350 Subscriptions, a Ford Touring Car will be given ($298.00 f. o. b. factory).
2. To one securing 150 Subscriptions, one Radio Equipment—Westinghouse R-6 Set, complete with batteries, tubes, phone and aerial equipment, the price of which is $150.00.
3. To one securing 100 Subscriptions will be given one Victrola ($75.00), or cash prize of $50.00.
4. To one securing 75 Subscriptions, one Remington Portable Typewriter, with standard keyboard and case ($60.00 f. o. b. Richmond).
5. To one securing 30 Subscriptions, one Gentleman's or one Lady's Wrist Watch will be given, guaranteed by Jahnke Bros., Jewelers, of Richmond, Va. ($30.00).
6. For 25 Subscriptions, one Gentleman's or Lady's Watch ($25.00), likewise guaranteed by Jahnke Bros.
7. To one securing 20 Subscriptions, one Standard or International Dictionary will be given.

To all authorized solicitors will be paid 10 per cent commission on all renewals, and 20 per cent on all new subscriptions. Those receiving prizes will not be entitled to commission.

Two renewal subscriptions will be counted as one in determining the winners of prizes.

Send in your name and address and receive the necessary report blanks and receipt books.

The contest will close on October 31, 1923.

Remittances made on this campaign are to be net. Post-office money orders constitute a safe plan of remittance.

The Mission of a Chosen People.

"Freely Ye Have Received, Freely Give."

Israel received much from Jehovah. Beginning with the great religious pioneer, Abraham, she had a long line of great leaders. Noble kings and devout priests led her. Far-seeing prophets were sent to advise and to warn against danger ahead. Chosen as a people of God, Israel received freely of His divine bounties, but she never learned the lesson which God tried to teach through centuries that to receive imposes the responsibility as well as the opportunity to give. The covenant or contract between God and Israel, faithfully observed, would have made the nation truly and wholly missionary in deeds, as well as in principle, and by command. The mission of a chosen people is to serve. The lesson today presents Israel as this chosen people, belonging to God; as a witnessing nation, working with God, and as the nation possessing the message of salvation, serving others, or "Lighted to Lighten."

1. Belonging to God. His Chosen People.

"Ye shall be mine own possession—if ye will obey my voice."

From Mt. Sinai, Moses brought God's great covenant to His children. The promised blessings were great. To be God's own chosen people, to teach others of the one and true God, was a very special divine mission and honor. The condition was "if ye will obey My voice." Every contract has two parts. Both sides make a promise. Both sides agree to something. Here is God promising to bless and guide, while the people agreed to obey. The tragedies in the history of Israel came when she did not live up to her part of the covenant, and when, through selfishness and lack of faith and vision, she turned to other gods, who could not help her. "Ye shall be unto Me a kingdom of priests," declared God to Israel. A nation of people, living not for self alone, but to serve others, must be a strong nation. "Saved to serve," is a good motto. By neglecting to serve, Israel was lost. Other nations have been blessed by God, but when they have forgotten to pass on that blessing to other nations and other peoples, disaster has come. All nations belong to Him, even "unto the ends of the earth." America, belonging to Him, may be His chosen people today to spread His Gospel. Blessed by prosperity and wealth, spared the dangers and losses of invasion and war, given great men and women, America may well study the story of Israel and consider the commands divinely given. America may well see that blessing from the great Father is conditioned upon obedience to His commands. America may well know that her great privilege is to give of her wealth and wisdom and discoveries to the world, always helping to bring other nations nearer to the Father of the whole world.

2. A Witnessing Nation. Working for God.

"Ye are My witnesses."

Belonging to a Church or organization of any kind imposes obligations of various sorts. Each member of a family has some duties in that family group. To join the Church and "belong" means a share in the work and worship of that Church. So, to belong to God, gives tasks to do for Him. Israel belonged to God, and her work was to be a "witnessing nation" to work with God to tell of Him to other nations. God depends upon people to spread His Gospel. In order to be faithful witnesses, He called upon Israel, as He calls upon His children today, to know Him, to believe in Him, to understand that He is the one God.

Do you know God? Then you will wish to have others acquainted with Him. Do you believe in God, His goodness and power and love? Then you will have faith to trust Him to help you to inspire this belief in others. Do you understand that He is the one God? Then your sympathy will arise for those who, because of ignorance, must worship gods of wood and stone, gods who can never help nor inspire them. Such knowledge and faith and understanding must surely make every Christian, individual or nation truly missionary in thought and deed. The mission of Israel, the chosen people, was to witness. When this was done, Israel was uplifted and nations blessed. But when Israel failed, she caused her own downfall, and lost her national home. To witness faithfully, means life for others, and growing spiritual strength for the witness.

3. Possessor of the Message of Salvation. Serving Others.

"Look unto Me, and be ye saved, all the ends of the earth."

In spite of the disobedience of Israel many times, and in spite of her wrongdoings, through her came the long-promised Messiah, our Saviour the Lord Jesus. He belonged to the Jewish race, but His love and life were for all people. He came with a world vision and a world salvation. He, through God, was Israel's great gift to the world, though rejected by His own race.

"Freely ye have received, freely give," were His own words. His life was one of service—teaching, healing, feeding the hungry. He took little children and blessed them when others would have driven them away. He lived daily in conformance with God's commands to His people, and was a constant witness to the love and power of His Father, who is our Father. To follow Him truly, and be selfish, cannot be done. To love Him, and lack faith, is impossible. To be Christ-ian and not love others—for that is what "missionary" means—cannot be.

God chose a nation to belong to Him. He commanded them to witness for Him, to give to many the great message of salvation. He still needs individuals, and He must have nations to be witnessing workers. The greatest opportunities, the highest honors, are in store for the nation which will be a "kingdom of priests," a group of servants, seeking the advancement of the kingdom, that all of God's children everywhere may know Him, may believe in Him, may understand that He is the Father of them all.

Israel as a "chosen people" had a great mission. And America has a mission, a mission made greater by a time of peculiar need, of special opportunities, of tremendous problems which can only be solved rightly in the light of God's wisdom, and the spirit of His love. What a privilege to be chosen by God to share in His work! What a joy to be a co-worker with Him!

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

Topic: "What my denomination is planning for the Future."—Luke 4:16-21.

Thoughts for the Meeting.

Jesus not only went to Church on the Sabbath, but took His part in the service. In the worship and work of the Church there is a part for each member, and the greatest blessing comes when this part is faithfully filled. Verse 16.

Jesus knew God's work, and so was able to teach it to others. Verse 17.

The religion of the true God is for all—the poor, the captive, the blind and the bruised; for all, for you and for me. Verse 18.

The Church building is God's house, and the members are His workers.

In the work of the Church, as in all worthwhile undertakings, a definite plan and goals are necessary. Local Churches attempt definite tasks. Groups of Churches, known as denominations, plan great undertakings in which each Church has a part. Today, all Churches are planning greater programs than ever before along all lines. It is most helpful and important that the young people in the Churches know and realize better just what their own Church, as a denomination, is planning and working toward. Make this meeting give as much information as possible regarding the work and proposed plans of the Christian Church and of other Churches, where their members unite in the meeting.

Undertakings of the Christian Church.

In October, 1922, there occurred in Burlington, N. C., Christian Church a great meeting. Representatives were there from Christian Churches throughout the United States and Canada. Great preachers were there who had been working in Christian Churches for many years. Far-seeing and consecrated laymen and laywomen were there because they were interested in what the Christian Church had done, and, even more, in what the Christian Church was going to do in the world. The plans made there in Burlington, N. C., were the most far-reaching ever made by the Christian Church, and in the year since, many accomplishments have been attained because of them. Among the things which we find today in the plans for the work of the Christian Church are the following. They are given briefly, but each suggests much that may be brought to the Christian Endeavorers in this meeting, and further information can be secured from copies of Church papers, as The Herald of Gospel Liberty, The Christian Sun, the Christian Missionary.

Christian Education.

The department of Christian education was established, uniting the former Sunday School, Christian Endeavor and educational boards, with Dr. W. A. Harper as the chairman.

Three secretaries are giving full time to the work of Christian education—Mrs. Fred Bullock, for children's work; Hermon Eldredge, for young people's work; Dr. H. Shelton Smith, for leadership training and organization.

Our colleges are progressing. Elon is erecting five new buildings, including administration building, library, auditorium, science building, and relgious activities building. Defiance is working for a $500,000 endowment fund. Palmer is building an addition. Bethlehem College, Wadley, Ala., has just opened for its first year.

Summer schools at all of our colleges give training to ministers and Church workers.

The Journal of Christian Education is published monthly, devoted to Christian Education.

Evangelism.

At Burlington, the Board of Evangelism and Life Service was created, with Dr. Roy Helfenstein as the chairman. Rev. McD. Howsare is full-time field secretary of this board, which stresses the importance of increasing the membership of each Church 10 per cent each year, thus doubling the membership in ten years, and is working to emphasize the importance of not only an annual revival meeting, but of an all-around-the-year program of evangelism, including personal evangelism, group evangelism, educational evangelism, bringing the Church to be constantly a winning force, bringing men and women, and boys and girls to Jesus Christ.

Stewardship.

Rev. Warren H. Denison has charge of the department of stewardship, and is working to teach stewardship of life, of service and of substance, and to lead Churches to the every-member canvass, and Christians to see the importance of proportionate giving.

Missions (Foreign).

Six young people are being sent out to the foreign field this year—two trained Japanese young men to Japan, Miss Angie Carew to Japan, Victor Rivers to Porto Rico, and Mr. and Mrs. Bruce Morton to Porto Rico. Rev. W. P. Minton, Dayton, Ohio, Christian Publishing Association, will give Christian Endeavorers information regarding the great advance steps being taken in the missionary program of the Church in both Porto Rico and Japan.

Missions (Home).

Miss Elizabeth Howsare is in training at Leavenworth, Kans., to be ready soon to take up work of teaching the American Indians for the Christian Church.

Miss Marguerite Youmans has entered the home mission work with Miss Kirkendall, at Haverill, Mass., in Americanization work.

Many great Church buildings are being erected throughout the country, including the Christian Temple, Norfolk; the new church at Versailles, Ohio; Richmond, Va.; Sunday School and social service building at Dover, and a new work is being started in Dayton, Ohio, under Rev. E. B. Flory.

Along all lines the cry is "Forward, march!" and the Christian Church, which is planning great movements for the future, "for Christ and the Church," calls upon every Christian Endeavorer to enlist under the banner of the Church, and help to make these plans realities.

The Southern Christian Convention, which is one of five regional Conventions making up the Christian Church, has a great part in these plans. It has special work for which it is responsible, in building and repairing Church buildings, in the work in Carroll County, Va., in carrying to a successful completion the great Men and Millions Campaign, in supporting our Church paper, THE CHRISTIAN SUN, in helping Elon through her great emergency campaign, in promoting our program of Christian education through all the Churches, and in every way helping to make the world better because the Christian Church is alive and working, and true to her principles, working with the other Churches to bring to pass the Saviour's prayer, "Thy kingdom come, Thy will be done on earth, as it is in heaven."

Plans for the Meeting.

Get all the information you can about the Christian Church for this meeting. Open with a brief talk on "What the Christian Church Believes," followed by "What the Christian Church Has Done." But devote most of the time to bringing out the facts regarding what the Church is doing and planning. Close with a talk by your pastor or a Church leader on "What Our Church can Do in the Great Program of the Christian Church," endeavoring to select at least one forward step in which your own society may help to join in the general program of the Church. If you have not taken your offering for the Board of Christian Education, which was to be taken September 30th, this meeting gives a good opportunity for that.

Suggested Hymns.—"The Victory May Depend Upon You," "Onward, Christian Soldiers," "Something for Jesus," "A Call for Volunteers," "Higher Ground."

JUNIOR CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC.

OCTOBER 14, 1923.

TOPIC: "What Should We Read, and What Not?"—Prov. 3:13-15.

"Happy is the man that findeth wisdom."

Where can we find wisdom?

In school, you say. Yes, but we cannot always go to school; and even there we need—books.

From older folks, you say. Yes, but they are not always ready to talk.

Yes, from books we learn many things which we could never know, and the wise man, Solomon, who wrote Proverbs, must have been thinking of them when he wrote our verses for today.

Let us ask ourselves some questions while we are thinking about our Junior Endeavor meeting for next Sunday—

What kind of books do I read most?

Do these books bring me anything good to remember?

Do I want to read the book a second time, because it seems like a friend that I want to know better?

The book that is a good friend is the one which we should read. We are never ashamed of it. We want to show it to other folks. And that is the only kind of a book that Junior Endeavorers should want to read. Tell in Junior Endeavor meeting what you like to read best, and why.

HOME.

What holy memories hover around that blessed word "home"! It matters not how imperfect it is, or was, it has its own sweetness which, in a great measure, the world does not give and which it cannot take away. I see the little paths kept bare by unshoded feet; the great oaks and gigantic cherry trees; the fields, and woodlands, and brooks; the old house, the funny old furniture, the neat white walls, and wood floors nearly worn out by continual scrubbings; and I see a busy, loving mother with a big smile beaming from her pretty red cheeks and bright blue eyes, and tears of joy welling up in them when some one of her sons had been brave and refused to do the wrong or had come truly repenting over some ugly act. I see a father, strict, industrious, frugal, always giving good advice and ever requiring strict obedience. Through all the sorrows and reverses of that old country home; through all its heart-aches and joys; through its hopes and dreams, I see the evening hour of family prayer. What is home? Home is a group of five boys and a baby sister kneeling in the light of a kerosene lamp with a mother praying earnestly for the father and sons, and the little daughter! That is my definition; yours is likely different. But whether it be different or not, it is enough alike for me to cease this poor description and say what I intended to say.

Ex. 12:13: "And when I see the blood I will pass over you."

I am not intending to exegete this text nor confine myself strictly to its historical setting. I am using it as a sort of motto text. I like to think of the homes of our present day having the blood sprinkled upon their door. When God was punishing sin and disobedience in Egypt, the blood of a perfect lamb sprinkled upon doorposts meant protection from the dread angel of death. John 1:29: "Behold, the Lamb of God, that taketh away the sin of the world." 1 Peter 1:18, 19: "Knowing that ye were redeemed * * * with precious blood, as of a lamb without blemish and without spot, even the blood of Christ." This is the blood of which I speak. This is the blood that should be sprinkled, not only upon our hearts, but on the very threshold of our homes. This home is God's at the price of blood—even the blood of His only begotten Son, Jesus Christ. Nothing less will satisfy in this great, busy world where sin abounds. We have all sinned against God, just as the Israelites in Egypt had sinned against Him in going after the strange Egyptian gods; but "kipper," the Hebrew word for redemption and meaning primarily "to cover," means protection from God's righteous judgment and protection from God's seditious enemies. With the redeeming blood upon our homes, we have this double protection.

There is peace, hope, vision in the home that is made heavenly by heaven's own power. There is heaven beneath the blood because there is heaven above it. God intended the home to be the sweetest place on earth. It may be the royal tents of righteous Abraham, or the tiny manger of Bethlehem, if true love be there, it is home. "God is love." His Son is God manifested in the flesh. Oh! beautiful homes of this fair country, how vain your pretty appointments unless we humbly, reverently, penitently bear the death and resurrection of our Lord in mind and teach it to our children! May we never forget God's command: "Take heed to yourselves, lest your heart be deceived and ye turn aside and worship other gods, and serve them. * * * Therefore, shall ye lay up these My words in your heart and in your soul * * * and ye shall teach them your children, talking of them, when thou sittist in thy house, and when thou walkest by the way, and when thou liest down, and when thou risest up." (Deut. 11:16-19.)

The above quotation indicates teaching, both individually and collectively, as a family group. There are those who advocate shifting this responsibility to some institution or system—and I say they cannot be taught too much truth by any manner of means; there are others who believe in tearing down family worship, as a family, a unit, and allowing each individual member to worship in private. To this I say there cannot be too much private devotion to God, but if the day of family worship has passed, may not we look for the day when community worship shall be out of date? Oh! God, hold us back, lest we lose ourselves in the maelstrom of man's vain theories. Tie us to Thy Book as a safe anchor in the wild sea of superior wisdom (?) that is rising like a tide all about us. "Thy Word is truth." "Stablish Thy Word."

Home is God's earthly garden of love. Here grew Mary's Child—the Son of the living God.

"Oh! little home in Nazareth, what miracle so sweet;
God's accents in the humble rooms; God's footstep in the street."

Home is the link between the eternities; home is the battleground between heaven and hell, the place where earth's greatest victories are won, where mothers and fathers are officers under the King of kings and Lord of lords. Home is the place where little fingers turn the leaves of big Bibles and learn that God is love!

How Shivar Mineral Water Relieves Rheumatism

According to the standard medical books, Rheumatism is not a germ disease, but is the result of imperfect nutrition. The food is either imperfectly digested or imperfectly assimilated. Poisons accumulate, and these irritate and inflame the delicate linings of the joints, the heart and other organs. To relieve Rheumatism, it is, therefore, necessary to stop the formation of these poisons and get rid of those already formed.

The celebrated Shivar Mineral Water acts on the stomach and kidneys. It corrects the digestion and washes out the poisons through the kidneys. This is the opinion of physicians who prescribe it. If you suffer from rheumatism, dyspepsia, indigestion, disease of the kidneys, bladder or liver, uric acid poisoning, or any curable conditions due to impure blood, read the following letter, then sign it, enclose the amount and mail it. Only two out of a hundred, on the average, report no benefit.

Shivar Springs,
Box 16-B, Shelton, S. C.
Gentlemen:

I accept your offer and enclose herewith three dollars for ten gallons of Shivar Mineral Water. I agree to give it a fair trial, in accordance with instructions contained in booklet you will send, and if I report no benefit you agree to refund the price of the water in full upon receipt of the two empty demijohns, which I agree to return within a month.

SATAN'S SATISFACTION.

Satan has his satisfactions, though they are terrible. In an old book, published in 1796, which a traveler in scotland recently purchased in the museum now established in the old home of John Knox, in Edinburgh, entitled "A Cloud of Witnesses, or the Last Speeches and Testimonies of Those Who Have Suffered for the Truth in Scotland," the martyrdoms of the Covenanters are truly traced to Satan himself. In the preface, it is said that Satan "hath no other alleviament of his inevitable misery, but to draw the race of mankind into the like ruin, which is the only satisfaction that malicious spirit is capable of. This restless adversary * * * labors by two great engines of open force and secret fraud to keep them (the faithful) to his obedience; hence the sacred Scriptures describe him both as a dragon for cruelty and as a serpent for subtility." The Covenanters lived in a day when Satan was a dragon; we live in a day when Satan is a serpent; in perilous times, indeed, not of open persecution but of secret seduction, of lying deception. One time is just as perilous (1 Tim. 4:1) as the other. Let us indeed try the spirits, whether they be of God.

Pass a box of candy to a child and he invariably will select the piece wrapped in paper or tinfoil, because the wrapper suggests mystery, uncertainty as to contents.

All children love the uncertain, the mysterious. They thrill as they unwrap packages, crack nuts, open strange doors or take watches apart to see what's inside.

Greatest of all thrills, to a child, is to explore a cave.

Child's craving to explore the unknown is an instinct that clings to all of us all through life. Curiosity concerning the mysterious unknown is back of all progress. Also, it is what makes life interesting. Life would be dull, without progress, if the future were not hidden from us.

Lloyd George's latest article describes both the rasicmo and bolshevik movements as a rebellion against "parliamentarism, its dilatoriness, confusion of aims, pettiness, costly inefficiency."

He compares Cromwell, stamping his feet and ordering grim Puritan soldiers to clear the House of Commons, with Mussolini, wiping out parliamentary government in Italy.

SOUTHERN RAILWAY SYSTEM

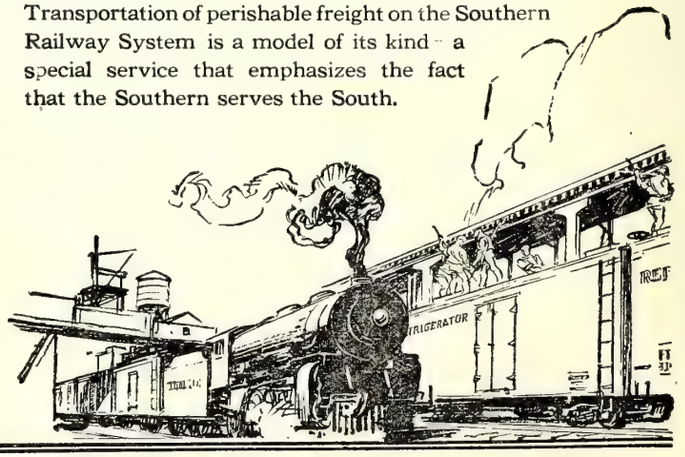
Southern produce for Northern markets

Carrying the products of Southern orchards and gardens to Northern markets has become one of the most important services of the Southern Railway System.

The tonnage of fruits and vegetables hauled is three times what it was fifteen years ago and double what it was ten years ago, and now equals the cotton tonnage.

Building up this great market for Southern produce, which increases the prosperity of the South, would not have been possible without dependable transportation, and this the Southern has provided.

Transportation of perishable freight on the Southern Railway System is a model of its kind - a special service that emphasizes the fact that the Southern serves the South.



Southern Railway System last year spent in the South $20,000,000 more than it received from the South.

Mr. and Mrs. Needham are both popular young people and are well known throughout the village of Revolution Mill, as Mr. Needham has been engaged as an employee there for many years. Only a few close friends and relatives witnessed the ceremony.

The writer joins in with their friends in wishing for them a long and happy life's career together.

Safety rules are the only rules to live by. The Erie Railroad issued a remarkable little booklet for its employees last December entitled "Safety Rules." It is full of suggestiveness not only for railroad folks, but also for all Christians. For example: "Whenever an employee, by exercising good judgment, can protect himself or others from injury or death, he should do so, for safety always is or motto!" "In all cases of doubt or ncertainty, it is required that the safe course be taken and no risk run." "When you notice unsafe things, or something that should be fixed, report it to your superintendent."

CLEMENTS.

Mrs. W. G. Clements fell asleep on September 21st at the ripe age of 74 years and 4 months. She was the daughter of James Moring, Sr., and was a sister of Prof. J. H. Moring, who preceded her to the future life by several years. Sister Clements made a profession of religion and united with O'Kelley's Chapel, Christian Church, in early girlhood; later she moved her membership to Morrisville Christian Church at the time of its organization. She has been a faithful and devout member of this Church since its organization.

On March 26, 1868, she was united in marriage to Rev. W. G. Clements, who was at that time just beginning his useful life career in the Christian ministry. To this union were born seven children—Edwin W., Joseph L., S. Irene, Mamie J., James B., A. Stella, M. Ethel—all of whom were present at the funeral, and the three sons and three of the sons-in-law acted as pallbearers.

As an expression of appreciation and sympathy, many friends attended the burial from the surrounding country, and many beautiful floral designs were added to those provided by the children, with which the grave was completely covered. Her life was a beautiful expression of the Christian religion; her patient spirit in suffering was an example of Christian fortitude, and her death was an exemplification of the triumph of Christian faith. While the family suffers from the separation, they should rejoice because of the fact that God has been good to them through the many years, for this is the first death that has invaded the home in sixty-five years.

Sixty-five years of loving companionship for the husband, and devoted maternal love through many years for the children by our beloved sister is the best token of the love of our Heavenly Father, who will continue to bless them until the family reunion in heaven.

The funeral services were conducted by the writer, assisted by Rev. W. S. Long, D. D. W. C. WICKER.

France and England should know how to prevent the final catastrophe. If it comes, it will cost France more than all the billions dreamed of in reparations. It woll be a fight to the death between Lenine and Mussolini ideas of government. To say that England will be puzzled, believing in neither and torn between the two, is putting it mildly.

Wells will now write once a week, telling about things in general. Lloyd George tells of mistakes that Europe makes, sinking deeper into the war mud. Wells will tell how to make everything perfect, simply by being what we are not, and can't possibly be for ten thousand years or more.

THE SUN'S OBSERVATORY

Improper Address.—

Every year $100,000 is received in letters at the dead-letter office of the Post-Office Department in Washington. Nearly all of this mail containing money fails in delivery because of improper address.

Executives of the Government.—

The chairman of the joint congressional committee on reorganization of the executive branch of the government pointed out that the first six Presidents to die averaged 79.6 years of age; the next ten, 68.5 years; the last ten, 61.8 years. He recommends that the President have a staff of six assistants to lighten his work. They should consist of a secretary to the President, acting as private secretary; an executive secretary, who would have four assistants, divided as follows: an assistant in charge of personnel, dealing with office-seekers, and so forth; an assistant in charge of legislation, to follow legislation in both houses, keeping the President informed; an assistant in charge of publicity, to report on public opinion, to present the President with pertinent clippings and gather material for speeches, and an assistant in charge of applications for clemency.

The Brave Fight Science is Making Against Tuberculosis.—

That the South is ready and willing to take almost any step that will increase its efficiency in the fight against tuberculosis, was the spirit manifested at the informal meeting of the Southern Tuberculosis Conference, held recently in Asheville. Two of the more important steps taken by the conference were the decisions favoring the reorganization of the Southern Tuberculosis Conference, which met last in 1920, and the organization of the Southern Sanatorium Association. The representatives which registered from nearly every Southern State agreed on all measures that meant progress and success in the tuberculosis work.

One of the most interesting and helpful discussions at the conference was that on "Standards for Classifying and Rating Tuberculosis Sanatoria." Enlightening studies of this subject, made by the National Tuberculosis Association, were given.

In the discussion of the subject, "Sanatorium Care of Negroes," it was clearly noted that great progress has been made in the South in the past few years in treating the tuberculous negro. Tuberculosis and the negro is no longer a hopeless condition. Negroes themselves are becoming interested in their problem, which fact alone is the first step leading to the solution of the problem. That the negro is seeking sanatorium treatment was pointed out to be a most hopeful sign.

Wants Positive Cure for Tuberculosis.—

To search for a positive cure for tuberculosis must be the next step taken in the campaign against tuberculosis, declares Dr. Lawrason Brown, president of the National Tuberculosis Association. Dr. Brown urges more extensive research work on the part of tuberculosis workers and deplores the fact that the long search and the scantiness of financial reward has discouraged many brilliant scientists from entering the tuberculosis field.

Much valuable research work has been done by the medical staff of the North Carolina Sanatorium during the last three years. There were no funds available for this work except an appropriation of $1,000 annually by the North Carolina Tuberculosis Association, so the most of it necessarily had to be done by putting additional burdens on the medical staff. Every sanatorium for the treatment of tuberculosis owes it to the tuberculosis cause and to the people who have tuberculosis to conduct research activities.

Dr. Brown says further: "A complete eradication of tuberculosis must follow along one of two lines. First, by vaccination, or some other method of treatment which is as successful as the administering of quinine in malaria must be discovered. Another possibility is that pulmonary tuberculosis, like leprosy and typhus, will gradually recede until in countries with a high hygienic civilization it will be of slight importance."

But till such a cure is found, emphasizes Dr. Brown, the method of cure and prevention that have already been found successful must be faithfully adhered to. He says: "At the present time, public education in disease prevention, increased sanatorium facilities, and adequate after-care, in order to prevent a relapse, are the best available means of still further reducing the mortality and case rates."

The N. C. Conference on Tuberculosis to Meet in Durham.—

The North Carolina Conference on Tuberculosis will hold its third annual session in Durham October 30th and 31st. Mrs. Gordon Finger, of Charlotte, is president of the State association; Mrs. Chas. R. Whitaker, of Southern Pines, is vice-president, and Dr. L. B. McBrayer is managing director and treasurer.

Dr. Linsly R. Williams, managing director of the National Tuberculosis Association, New York City, will be the principal guest and speaker of this occasion. He will deliver one address on the evening of October 30th, and another next day, October 31st. Dr. W. L. Dunn, of Asheville, will be present and will speak on the subject, "Shall We Desert the Tuberculous Ex-Service Man?" Further numbers of the program have not yet been given out.

The directors of the North Carolina Tuberculosis Association are the officers named above, Dr. Otho Ross, Charlotte; Mrs. Cuthbert Martin, Wilmington; Mrs. W. N. Hutt, Southern Pines; Mrs. T. D. Jones, Durham; Dr. C. L. Minor, Asheville; Mr. R. B. Wilson, Raleigh; Dr. R. L. Carlton, Winston-Salem; Dr. J. Donnelly, Charlotte; Mrs. C. C. Hook, Charlotte; Dr. W. L. Dunn, Asheville; Col. J. L. Ludlow, Winston-Salem; Mrs. Mark Quinnerly, Greenville; Mrs. S. H. Brown, Oxford; Mrs. J. M. Gudger, Jr., Asheville; Mrs. Howard Ronthaler, Winston-Salem; Mrs. C. J. Tinsley, Greensboro; Mrs. Max T. Payne, Greensboro, and Mrs. M. E. Robinson, Goldsboro.

Negro Death Rate from Tuberculosis Increasing in New York.—

Deaths from tuberculosis among the negroes in New York City are on the increase, judging from the mortality statistics of that city recently issued. In 1921 the negro death rate from tuberculosis was 299 per 100,000, and in 1922 it was 331. In North Carolina it was 186 in 1921, and 154 in 1922. The death rate from tuberculosis for white people in New York in 1922 was 92, and in North Carolina for the same period it was 90.

North Carolina is evidently a safer place than New York for both white and colored people, as far as the dangers from tuberculosis go, and a mere heartening thing is the fact that the State is growing safer each year. In four years the negro death rate from tuberculosis has decreased from 233.1 in 1918 to 154.2 in 1922. In eight years the State's death rate from tuberculosis has been cut in half, and more. In 1913, there were 4,800 deaths from tuberculosis; in 1922 there were 2,369.

A New York writer finds it difficult to explain the unusual increase of deaths among negroes from tuberculosis alone in one year. He hardly thinks it can be due altogether to the increase in negro population, which has been 7 per cent annually, or 60,758 in the period from 1910 to 1920. This rate does not include, however, the accelerated movement of negroes from the South to the North in the past two years. He is of the opinion that the negro coming from the warm and open air of the South to a colder climate, to more congested living conditions in a large city, finds himself exposed to the dangers of tuberculosis to a greater extent than his more acclimated neighbors. The writer admits that the situation of a larger negro population, with an increasing death rate from tuberculosis, is a problem requiring special effort, even for the common good of its citizens.—Press Bulletin.

NOTES-PERSONALS

We understand that Rev. J. A. Ledbetter is called to our Reidsville, N. C., pastorate for another year.

Rev. A. R. Flowers, of the Wakefield and Dendron pastorate, was in Richmond last week and made a visit to THE SUN office.

"The loss of the knowledge of God is death, but it is also true that the knowledge of God is life." This necessarily makes life (spiritual life) a thing entirely outside ourselves, and dependent on what God is."

Some man has said: "To know God as He is, is life, and all who know not God shall be punished with everlasting destruction from His presence." Then, how careful ought we to be to learn God and His truth!

The Sunday School Times is publishing, in addition to their regular lesson matter, what is known as "The Whole Bible Sunday School Lesson Course." It is prepared by the Christian Fundamentals' Association. It is good.

The infidel says when Christians seek to obey God that it is blind obedience, but there is a reason for that—the infidel is himself blind, and cannot see the truth; therefore, he thinks every one else is blind, but we are not if Christ be in us the hope of glory.

Hon. Jacob A. Long, a brother of Rev. W. S. and D. A. Long, D. D., and Judge Benj. F. Long, died at his home in Graham, N. C., on Thursday, October 4, 1923. Mr. Long was one of a large and distinguished family in the annals of North Carolina. He was a lawyer and a man of marked ability.

The attention of our people is directed to a note in this issue from Brother and Sister J. E. Harward as to the reason the Church failed to secure a pastor whom they had called and who had accepted the call, but was later prevented from making good his acceptance. The note referred to above tells why the minister could not make good his acceptance.

"The truth reveals God as He is; but the truth is connected with the revelation of perfect grace, and thus the sinner finds, to his unspeakable joy, that the revelation of what God is, instead of being his (the sinner's) destruction, becomes the basis of his eternal salvation. This is life eternal, that they might know Thee, the only true God, and Jesus Christ, whom Thou has sent. (John 17:3.) I cannot know God and not have life."

What do you think of this? "If a man be self-governed, he is really governed by Satan; and if not (self-governed, but governed by the Spirit), he is governed by God." We often hear people talk of self-governing, but that is a misnomer. The right name for self-government is government by Satan, and for the reason if we put ourselves into the keeping of self, the ruler of self being the wicked one, we are controlled by Satan. If we would avoid the control of the wicked one, we must put ourselves into the keeping of God, and then we shall be controlled by the Holy Spirit.

The Christian is expected to manifest Christ in his daily life. If that is true, and we think it is, why is it that we have so many professing Christians who do not manifest Christ? We think it must be because so many professing Christians do not feed on Christ, for if we faithfully feed on Christ, we cannot keep from showing Him in our lives. Professing His name and not feeding on Him as the bread of life will never show Him to the world. You cannot show Christ unless you have Him in your life, and you cannot have Him if you do not feed on Him—on His life and teaching.

The "Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Hand Book" of the Southern Christian Convention, published annually by the Board of Religious Education, was mailed to all pastors and Sunday School superintendents last week. This issue gives the minutes of the Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Conventions held in 1923, together with statistical reports from the Schools and Societies, and report of the work of the Board of Religious Education. Additional copies may be had by requesting them of the Field Secretary, Miss Lucy M. Eldredge, 1012 E. Marshall Street, Richmond, Va.

The Richmond brethren have been a loyal company to the work of building the new house of worship in that city for the use of the Christians. It is the opinion of some who were present at the opening service that while all, in a large sense, have done well by the work, but to Bro. John T. Kernodle and Bro. P. J. Carlton is due a high word of appreciation for their unflagging interest and devotion to looking after the building. Such men are always in demand, and they have done a noble part in this instance. The whole company of the Richmond Church is to be congratulated on the success of the work.

Jesus knew the Scriptures. We know this by the way He quoted them when Satan tried to mislead Him by misquoting the Bible. Jesus Himself kept close to Scripture: without any other weapon, save the sword of the Spirit, He stood in the conflict and gained a glorious triumph. What a contrast with the first Adam! The one had everything to plead for God: the other had everything to plead against Him. The garden, with all its delights, in the one case; the wilderness, with all its privations, in the other; confidence in Satan in the one case, confidence in God in the other; complete defeat in the one case, complete victory in the other. That is the way of the true Christian life.

That was a highly praiseworthy remark some minister of another denomination made on the occasion of the opening of the Christian Church in Richmond on September 30th, with reference to the high standing of Rev. W. T. Walters, D. D., the pastor of the Richmond Christian Church. If you would like to read it, turn to Dr. Harper's article, "A Great Day for the Christian Church," as it appeared in the last issue of THE CHRISTIAN SUN. The great value in the remark is in the brotherly spirit which it manifests among the people of God. We are glad to note the high esteem in which Dr. Walters is held by the brethren of other denominations. It is a good omen for the future usefulness of the Christian Church in that city.

IN MEMORIUM.

On August 3, 1923, Rev. J. W. Holt, of Burlington, passed to his reward. Bro. Holt was an active pastor and preacher of the Christian Church for some forty years, and during all these years was a firm believer and a faithful worker in the prohibition cause. Before the Anti-Saloon League was ever organized, Bro. Holt was fighting whiskey. We don't know just when he first gave his temperance addresses, but it was something like a half-century ago. When the Anti-Saloon League was organized in this State in 1902, Bro. Holt became its strong supporter and valuable helper. About ten years ago, when his Church was invited to elect members as representatives on the board of trustees of the North Carolina Anti-Saloon League, Rev. J. W. Holt, along with Dr. W. A. Harper, was named. Bro. Holt was faithful in his attendance upon the board meeting, and did much to help the cause along. The board of trustees will miss his wise counsel and splendid support. In the name of the board and the Anti-Saloon League at large, this editor extends to his widow sincere sympathy and assures her that her husband always did what he could for this cause.

We clip the above from the American Issue of September 29, 1923. It is a tribute to the character of Rev. J. W. Holt, who stood as leader in the prohibition movement practically from the beginning of the reform in modern times. He was a brave friend of the prohibition cause, never counting the cost of his work, but did it with courage, pay or no pay.

BETHLEHEM COLLEGE COMING TO THE FRONT.

Dear Brother Pastors of the Christian Church in the Southern Christian Convention:

I am making satisfactory success in my campaign for the five thousand dollars for Bethlehem College within sixty days. I am simply asking one thousand friends to contribute five dollars each. Now, to do this, will not be hard on any one, and it will be a pleasure for a number of our good friends to have this opportunity.

Now, Brother Pastors, will you not give your people a chance to respond to this appeal? If you will just mention the matter favorably to your Churches, I shall greatly appreciate it. I shall endeavor to write to each pastor, individually, but do not wait for that. Please consider this an individual invitation for assistance. If you have already made a pledge for Bethlehem College, we will credit your pledge with the amount you send. We need and must raise five thousand dollars for Bethlehem in sixty days.

Yours for Bethlehem College,
G. D. HUNT.

VIRGINIA CHRISTIAN CONFERENCE.

The annual business meetings of our Churches will soon be held, and at them the delegates to the annual Conference will be elected. It will greatly help the entertainment committee of the Holland Church if you will send us, as soon as you can, the names of all delegates desiring entertainment overnight. Be sure, too, to send with the names any other information necessary for our guidance in the allotment of homes.

Send communications to—
J. P. DALTON.
REV. J. H. LIGHTBOURNE.

NOW, ISN'T THIS AN ANSWER?

Some correspondent of the Western Recorder writes to its editor, asking this question: "Was the name 'Christian' contested in court a few years ago by the 'new light' people and the Campbellites, and won by the new lights as holding priority?"

To this question, the editor, or some one whose name is not given, replies: "I have so understood, but have no definite information as to the time and place, and do not know where it could be obtained."

It is a fact that the Christian Church held the name "Christian" prior to its use by the Campbellites; that is, the Christian Church took the name Christian, as the only name we need as a people of God, in 1794, while our Disciple brethren took it as late, or later than 1833, but that the Christian Church has ever contested the matter in court is, we think, without the slightest foundation. If such a thing ever occurred, we have never heard of it. All we have ever heard concerning this matter is this: We have heard some individuals say it would be a good thing to test the matter of the right to the name by the United States government by sending a registered letter, addressed to the pastor of the Christian Church in a town where there are two Christian Churches, one of the original name and one representing the Disciples of Christ, and then leave it to the government to say to whom the letter belonged; but if such a thing was ever attempted, we have never heard of it.

Courtesy is a good thing, and we had no idea that it was so scarce an article among our Baptist brethren as would appear from the way they present us to the public in that small paragraph quoted above. The truth is, we did not know that even differences in theological opinions made it necessary to use discourtesy to those holding views which differ from them, but that seems the case with our esteemed brother of the Western Recorder. If no discourtesy was meant to our people, we cannot see why they go out of the way to call us by a nick-name—a name we have never recognized, as a people, and most likely we never will. And yet, a little further, please, we fail to see why they honor our Disciple brethren, though they call them "Campbellites," with a capital "C," for their nick-name; but when they call us by a nick-name, which is wholly unauthorized, they use a small "n" and "l" to spell this nick-name. We have too much respect for ourselves to allow our typewriter to spell Baptist with a little "b," or to give them a nick-name. Indeed, we are surprised that common courtesy is so scarce among our Baptist brethren! Would the Western Recorder have humiliated itself in the eyes of the public if it had given us the name by which we have chosen to be known to the world? And would it have reflected upon its own honor if it had used capital letters in writing the name it is pleased to call us as a people? We are somewhat surprised that courtesy is so scarce in the Recorder office!

"SUFFOLK LETTER."

The employment of the above heading is to strengthen attention to this article, for a heading that has been used for twenty-seven years in one paper has power and prestige. But this article is not to be the "Suffolk Letter," but a word about that permanent part of THE CHRISTIAN SUN, so familiarly known to every reader of our Church paper.

THE CHRISTIAN SUN has been without the "Suffolk Letter" for a few weeks. I miss it, and others miss it. I am confident that I am speaking for a large, very large, number of CHRISTIAN SUN readers when I say that this weekly contribution from the facile pen of Dr. William W. Staley is missed. I express the feelings of the same number by saying that I hope it will soon resume its former place in this paper.

Doctor Staley's weekly letter is as much a part of THE CHRISTIAN SUN as any other part of the paper, no part excepted. Scores of times have I read in letters to THE SUN office this: "The Suffolk Letter is worth the price of the paper." Many letters contained only such a message with a renewal. Other ex-editors of THE SUN, as well as the present editor, will bear witness to this statement.

Doctor Staley writes of simple things and makes them great. That is the reason he is a philosopher. The bigger the man, the simpler will his subjects be for discussion. Little men, little in calibre, endeavor to handle what the world terms "big" subjects. Life is the biggest thing; and life is wrapped up, portrayed, depicted, and reflected in little things, simple things. To master and understand the small things about us is to understand and conquer all. Dr. Staley writes of the ox and the car, the plow and the plowman, the hook and the line, the cook and the washerwoman, the field and the stream, the laborer and his labors. He writes of the common man, and the common man understands him. That is why I am writing this article—I am speaking for the common, the average man, paying a poor tribute to a great personality and a great message that is temporarily silenced because of illness. May that message soon come back in its full vigor, cheerfulness, philosophical, and hopeful manner.

This should have appeared in THE SUN some time ago, as I sent it to THE SUN as soon as I closed up my work there, but for some little mistake it did not get published at that time. I have been away from home in the revival work most of the time, and did not know that it had not been published, so hope that each one will pardon delay, as I did not intend it to be so.

While I did not use the car very long, it was a great help to me while I was there, and I am sure it will add much to the work.

I very cordially than keach one for any help rendered while I was there, either in a spiritual or a financial way. This is a great work and well worthy of our support if contributed through the right source, and I ask for the workers on the field our most earnest prayers and support.

I have been in the revival work all the summer and have not had time to write to THE SUN, but have been at work for the Lord.

Praying that each one of us will be faithful in the service of our Lord and Christ,, I remain,

Yours in the Master's service,

ELISHA BRADSHAW.

ELON COLLEGE NOTES.

The three science professors—Dr. N. F. Brannock, head of the department of chemistry; Prof. A. L. Hook, head of the department of physics, and Prof. T. E. Powell, head of the departments of geology and biology—officially started the new science hall, to be erected on the Elon College campus, by breaking ground for the foundation late yesterday afternoon. There has been a change in the plans of the building committee, and the building that was started as the science hall some time ago has been taken over for the Christian education building; this new building, the fifth of the rebuilding program, will be used as a science hall.

A very simple, but impressive, ceremony was held as the first shovels of dirt were removed for the foundation. After prayer by Dr. J. Pressley Barrett, editor of THE CHRISTIAN SUN, the three science professors lifted the first dirt. Little Sarah Virginia Hook and Will Wyatt, Jr., then took a second shovel of dirt from the foundation and posed for their picture. Prayer was then offered by the Rev. J. W. Wellons, D. D., now in his ninety-eighth year. Both Dr. Barrett and Dr. Wellons have been trustees of the college since its foundation—thirty-four years. President W. A. Harper was in charge of the ceremony.

The building committee decided, after due consideration, that it would be better to exchange the location on the campus of the science hall and Christian education building from the original draft. Several reasons seemed to make the exchange desirable, so that the Christian education building would be on the south of the campus and farther away from the dormitories.

The science hall will house all the science laboratories—the physics department on the first floor, geology, biology and zoology laboratories on the second floor, and the department f chemistry n the third floor. The building is 120x64 feet, and the estimated cost of erection is $60,000. This sum is provided through cash donations and pledges from friends and alumni of the college.

Elon College, N. C.

HOW DID YOU DO IT?

We have rarely seen or heard of a Sunday School that has succeeded in keeping the children to the preaching service, but that is no proof that it ought not to be done. It is not even a hint that we should not make a most determined effort to keep the Sunday School children for the preaching service. The purpose of the Sunday School is to educate the children in the ways of truth and righteousness, but when we permit them to go home from Sunday School without staying to the preaching service we are educating them out of the Church—that is, we are consciously or unconsciously educating the children to stay away from the Church, and so be a loss to the Church, just the very thing that the Sunday School is supposed to prevent.

If the children of our Sunday Schools are educated to turn away from the Church, what has the future in store for the Church? Again and again we have pleaded with our people to correct this tendency on the part of our Sunday Schools, but we see no sign of heeding the warning we have given. If we allow this sort of a thing to go on, how long will it be before our Churches will begin to see thin congregations in our regular preaching services? The truth is, this situation is already on hand; we are even now having this sort of results shown in our congregations, and yet no one seems moved to co-operate in an effort to put a stop to this mischievous tendency.

We have read of only one Sunday School in the United States which has had real success in keeping the children to the preaching services of the Church after the Sunday School is out. We find in the Sunday School Times the following report, which is certainly most heartening, and we trust may stimulate many of our Churches to make the effort to keep the Sunday School children to the preaching service. The Times says:

"The whole Sunday School of the LaVerne Brethren Church meets before Church and goes right into the Church service. There is no thought of coming to Sunday School and leaving after that is over. As in Korea, the Sunday School and Church are practically one. We attribute this, chiefly, to the fact that the parents in almost every case come to Sunday School with the children, and then all stay through the Church service. There is a real vital interest taken in the Sunday School work by the parents when they once get started, and the same is true in the case of the children and the Church."

Now, we should like to have a report from that school as to how they succeeded in keeping the children over to the public preaching service.

It would be very interesting matter for our readers, we must think, but if we may not learn how that school did it, let us earnestly seek to find a way by which we may do it. Since it has been done, we know it may be done again, and it is certainly worth trying, for there is no greater need pressing us at this time than to get the children to remain to the Church service. We must do it, or be our own means of undoing the Church thrift which we so much need.

A Proposition.

We wish fifty of our brethren and sisters to write us and tell us of the success or failure you have had in this work of keeping the Sunday School children to the preaching service. If you have succeeded fully, tell us how you did it; it may help to encourage others to make the effort, and it is certainly most important that all of our Churches make the effort. How did you do it? And do you think it can be done in any ordinary Sunday School? Tell us how it may be done, for nearly, and perhaps all of our Churches need to know it can be done.

Let us make November a special month in which to begin an honest and persistent effort to accomplish this end. Begin at once to tell our readers what you have done or have not done, and what you think can be done by a persistent effort and the Lord's blessing to succeed in keeping our children to the preaching service after the Sunday School is out.

Do not say that the children cannot stay so long as will be required to attend both services. that is an old, worn-out plea. It can be done. That excuse is a pillow of some one who does not wish to undertake the work. The children stay much longer than will be required to attend both the Sunday School and the preaching service, and they can do it, and be the better for having done so. Let us make one united effort. Let teachers and parents stand together in the effort. Help each other, and we believe that great things will come to pass in working this reform in our Sunday Schools.

THE SECULAR PRESS MUST PUT ITS JACKET ON.

It really seems as if it should do so, if it would protect itself from the many castigations it is receiving because of its tendency to yield to every bait the devil throws out to it, seeking to make it his partner in the many corruptions of the flesh. It was only recently in these columns that we gave out some of the criticisms for their partnership in evil ways into which they seemingly so easily fall at the call of his highness, the arch-enemy of souls. Now, it comes again to be their portion to be called to account for their ways and doings in the wickedness which the devil is plotting for them, and it is the Christian Advocate (Nashville) which administers a pretty good thrashing for these offenses. That paper puts the case against the secular press this way, and we sincerely hope the rebuke administered by that paper may be effective for the good of the country, and therein for the papers themselves. The Advocate says:

The secular newspaper must sell; otherwise it cannot exist. Circulation is the life of it. It must pander to the taste of the public. It prints what the people like to read. Reporters tell us they desire stories that strike curiosity, shock the feelings, appeal to wonder, present the strange, the unusual, the amazing. They say the public wants thrills. Therefore, so the newspapers think, a color of the sensational must be cast over the news they put out. The sturdiest fact of progress in society, in politics, or in religion must have a border with "high lights" to get it agoing among the readers.

We American Methodists have recently had occasion to observe this sensational bent of the reporters. It arose in connection with the report of the joint commission on unification. The document as adopted and given to the press had in it the stateliness and solemnity that should characterize a constitution designed to guide the religious lives of millions of people through the future. The preparation and publication of this report was designated in an editorial in a metropolitan daily as the outstanding ecclesiastical event of the year. But what did the reporters do with the "news?" They simply shocked Methodists, North and South, and amused the "Philistines" by turning the whole grand enterprise of unification upon the hinge of popular amusements and made it appear that under the scheme of unification Methodist members would be at liberty to dance. Every intelligent Methodist acquainted with the history of his Church and with the report of the joint commission, knows that the question of dancing is not changed, is not even involved in the plan of unification.

The sensational turn which was given to the unification report in the press was announced to have been secured by a reporter in a conversation with Dr. Zaring, editor of the Northwestern Christian Advocate. Concerning this affair, Dr. Zaring has made a statement, and it is proper that the readers of this paper know his explanation. Dr. Zaring says in part: "We have received several letters of inquiry concerning a statement published in the Chicago Tribune of last week and evidently sent broadcast upon the possible effect of Church union upon the prohibitive amusement clause in our Church discipline. One version (possibly confusing the statement with the utterances of a certain representative of the dancing masters) makes us say that 'the constitution would allow dancing teachers and actors to join the Church.' Another statement is to the effect that we 'announced' so and so, as though any individual in the Methodist Episcopal Church could make an 'announcement.' We made no reference to dancing masters or actors. We made no 'announcement.'"

By this incident of sensational treatment of Church news, our members should be apprised afresh of the necessity of discrediting any reports in the press which seem to indicate that the kingdom of God is about to be sold out to "the world, the flesh, and the devil."

SHALL WE MINISTERS MODIFY OUR PREACHING?

That seems to be the thought of some preachers of today. If so, what sort of modification shall we make? Shall we preach a philosophy instead of the Gospel of the Son of God? Or shall we preach another gospel, other than the Gospel of Christ? Never! If we cannot preach the true Gospel, then let us preach nothing, for nothing outside of the Gospel is worth preaching as a means of saving the people from their sins. Modify the Gospel! What would you modify? Would you modify the lost condition of the sinner? Would you modify the sins of men and women? Would you modify the blood of the Son of God? Would you give men the promise of salvation by character rather than by the atoning blood of the Lamb? Would you modify the resurrection of the body? Would you leave out the miracles of grace and the thought of death eternal for as many believe not? Alas! if we leave these out, then we need not preach at all, for preaching could mean nothing if all of these great fundamental truths be left out or modified so as to signify nothing. Some one says we must modify our preaching so as to suit this age. Suit nothing! If you preach to suit this age, you may as well preach nothing. The Christian Standard, discussing this matter, hits the nail on the head squarely, thus:

An obsession that seems to have gripped many a pulpit, and affected the pew more or less, is the notion that preaching should be modified to suit the times. That the messenger should trim his message to suit the messagee, so to speak.

Now, this is true if the message is a mere human affair, and relates to matter of no great moment; but how about the Gospel that is "the power of God unto salvation?"

When Jesus gave the great commission, did He mean, "Go into all the world and so trim the Gospel as to make it tickle the ears of the whole creation?" Some of our friends would have us think so.

We are told that the Chinese people do not take kindly to the straight requirements of the Gospel, and that these requirements should be modified to suit the Oriental mind. We would like to ask, where it is recorded that the Lord cares a rap whether His orders suit the Chinese or not.

Strong and true ring the words of Isaac Errett in his summary of advice after describing the redoubtable Walter Scott: "You must project a truth or a duty into distinctness, place it four-square to all the winds that blow, thunder it in the ears of the people, wage an aggressive warfare in its behalf, and stand ready to live for it if you would succeed in riviting public attention and winning the hearts of men to it."

The preaching of those modernists who would trim, modify and sterilize the Gospel to the point of ethical insipidity is not preaching at all. It is the substitution of a pop-gun for a thunderbolt. It is an attempt to quench hell's Vesuvius with an atomizer. Let us learn that it is the business of the age to conform to the Gospel, and not make the Gospel conform to it.—Christian Standard.

THIS IS A HARD SHOT!

It seems to fall to the lot of some persons to suffer more than others for the cause to which they dedicate themselves. We see some go along and have an easy time and a good salary, and when we see others who, so far as we can judge, are just as able, just as well trained, yet they find the way difficult and the road up-hill. Day after day they toil and lay themselves out in the cause for which they labor, and, after all, the most prominent thing that we can see in them is the hard struggle, little appreciation, and long misrepresentation, and yet they keep loyal and true.

One of the most conspicuous examples of this sort, we find in the person of Hon. W. J. Bryan. He is confessedly one of the cleanest men in the public life of our country, and he is also one of the ablest. When he has met defeat, he has met it like a Christian hero and has gone right on to other fields of service, and he has gone uncomplainingly and cheerfully, and yet the people—not all of them, but some—seem never to tire in their efforts to injure his good standing before the public. No matter in what field he serves, he is traduced and maligned, and yet we have never heard one man even try to impeach his veracity, or to impugn his motives, or to show that he is not worthy. Now, why should such a man not have the high approval of his fellowmen, and why should they try to keep him from success?

Here comes one of our exchanges, showing how this man is made to suffer, even in the religious circles, for what he is trying to do for the cause of truth and righteousness. They laugh at him and ridicule him, but he is still marching on to greater victories in the service of God and truth, and yet these men, many of whom call themselves Christian gentlemen, never tire in trying to pull down the peerless Bryan, one of the bravest and truest men of his generation, especially when it comes to standing for the right and daring to do the thing that is best for the people at large. The exchange to whom we refer sees the situation as to Mr. Bryan much as we do, and it gives expression to its thought as follows:

"Poor W. J. Bryan! the newspapers have slain him again. The trouble with him is, he will not keep still long enough for them to bury him. It is, however, a strange development in his case that Christian ministers grow violent in their denunciation of a man for defending the Bible. In the meantime, the devil laughs."

This is what we call a hard shot, and especially to be aimed at some of our highly educated ministers. To think that ministers of the Gospel can be found who try to defeat the great work of this great man by denouncing him for defending the Bible! No wonder the devil laughs when he sees ministers and other Christian workers seeking to belittle such a man instead of welcoming him to the ranks of the forces of truth and righteousness. The one thing that must comfort and help Mr. Bryan is the fact that the common people are with him heart and soul and hear him gladly, even after the manner in which they heard their Master in other days gladly. Mr. Bryan is not caring for his own reputation; he has doubtless long since committed that to the keeping of the Lord. Meantime, he goes right on, and may he continue to the end a faithful servant, ever doing the will of God.

MARCHING ON TO FINAL TRIUMPH!

It looks now as though prohibition has come to stay, regardless of New York. The time was when as went New York so went the country generally, but that time is no more. The fight for and against prohibition goes bravely on. During the last few months the question of changing from prohibition to license, or questions looking in that direction, came before twenty Legislatures. They faced the problem of giving up prohibition and going back to license, or some action against prohibition, but of the twenty States so considering the question, nineteen of them, instead of repealing the law, as some wished to do, passed laws strengthening the prohibition law, and only New York abandoned her State law against prohibition. Nineteen out of twenty, standing determinedly for prohibition, and only one going back to free liquor. New York must feel lonely, being the only State in the Union to back down from prohibition. And, after all, the fact that New York has backed down, she does not gain her point, for the United States law in favor of prohibition still stands over all of New York. They dare not open up a saloon, for if they did Uncle Sam would be upon them and stop the unholy action.

Hurrah! for Uncle Sam and his determined stand for prohibition.

One of our exchanges brings a most hopeful message to the effect that President Coolidge will enforce the dry law. It says:

President Calvin Coolidge has announced his purpose to carry out the Harding policies. With Mr. Harding's strong pronouncements on law enforcement made in his Denver and Seattle addresses in mind, this declaration from Mr. Coolidge is reassuring to all citizens who are standing with the government in its warfare against the minority who are intent upon overriding one of the fundamental laws of the land.

President Coolidge is well equipped to assume the duties of the presidency. He has sat in the President's council and the Cabinet and is thoroughly familiar with the administration's program and purposes.

His attitude toward law enforcement is well known. The message he delivered on the subject when as Governor of Massachusetts he vetoed the 2.75 per cent beer bill passed by the Legislature of that State, is a classic. In that message, Governor Coolidge said, among other things:

"The authority of the law is questioned in these days all too much. The binding obligation of obedience against personal desire is denied in many quarters. If these doctrines prevail, all organized government, all liberty, all security are at an end. Force alone will prevail. Can those entrusted with the gravest authority set any example save that of the sternest obedience to law? Can Massachusetts afford to take any position which may turn out to be, which can anywhere be interpreted to be an act of nullification?"

This declaration is in harmony with the declaration expressed by his fallen chief just a few weeks ago. It indicates that under his leadership the administration will continue its policy of strict enforcement of the law.

THE "H. C. OF W."

For a time during and soon after the war we were well acquainted with the significant letters, "H. C. of L.," the adumbration of which is still with us, but now we have another representation under the letters "H. C. of W." The first set of letters were the initials of the "high cost of living," while the second set are to represent quite a different idea—"H. C. of W." now means the "high cost of work." While the high cost of living was a burden indeed, now the high cost of work is a greater burden, only not quite so wrong, than was the high cost of living.

Labor deserves a good price for its service, but the prices for many kinds of labor is now a way out of sight, and must come down, or many poor people, and many others of moderate means, will be unable to own a home, since the price of labor is so high. We have seen lately men who were laying brick at about $14 a day. In New York City, plasterers are getting $14 a day. No doubt these are examples of what the high cost of labor is in many other sections, and to the laborer we suppose it seems all right, but what can the poor people do when they need a home?

This situation is beginning to attract attention because of the injustice of the thing.

"The High Cost of Work" is the subject of a recent discussion in The Word and Way, and below are the findings: "Translated into food, the prices the farmer gets, it takes sixty-three and one-half dozen, or 762 eggs, to pay a plasterer for one day of eight hours' work in New York City. It takes seventeen and one-half bushels of corn, or a year's receipts from half an acre, to pay a bricklayer one day. It takes twenty-three chickens, weighing three pounds each, to pay a painter for one day's work in New York. It requires forty-two pounds of butter, or the output from fourteen cows, fed and milked for twenty-four hours, to pay a plumber $14 a day. To pay a carpenter for one day's work, it takes a hog weighing 175 pounds, representing eight months of feeding and care."

The question naturally arises: Why should the farmer have to work for so much less than does the bricklayer and the plasterer? Why should the carpenter and the plumber be paid a price so high for their work as to make a hardship for other people? Why should one man get $84 a week for his work, when the man who is doing harder work and working as much as twelve hours a day, be paid less than one-third of what these other men get?

Is it a matter of skilled labor? That will not do, for the labor of a farmer is necessarily as skillful as is the labor of the bricklayer, the plasterer, or the carpenter. If you were to put one of these bricklayers or plasterers to farming, we believe you would find at the end of the harvest that a skilled farmer is as necessary to successful farming as is a skilled bricklayer or a skilled plasterer to building a good house. Then why should one be paid so much more for his labor than the other?

Years ago it was said that the capitalist was grasping, and would take, labor as cheap as he could get it, that he might fill his own pockets. Was that not wrong? Certainly. But how about it now, when the laborer does the same thing? Is not the laborer putting himself on a level in grasping every cent he can get, regardless of the needs of other people? Are not the two in the same class?

ELON LETTER.

The lines have certainly fallen for me in pleasant places these latter days. Thanks to the insistence of Col. J. E. West, Mrs. Harper and I set out on a 10,400-mile transcontinental trip, and with many grateful experiences accomplished it. We started before day on August 2nd, and reached home on the return journey on August 26th. In between these days we were in every State west of the Mississippi except Nebraska and South Dakota, and for lack of them traversed Tennessee, Kentucky, Illinoise, Indiana, Ohio, West Virginia and Virginia, with Canada thrown in for good measure. We saw what volumes would not do justice to and had experiences which have made us debtor forever to the God who watched over us during those eventful days and weeks.

We saw enough corn in Kansas to feed the nation, enough oil in California to run its motors, enough wheat and live stock in North Dakota, Iowa, Minnesota, and Wisconsin to satisfy the world, it seemed to us. We saw the American desert, the Shasta Valley, the Grand Canyon, the Yellowstone Park, Puget Sound, and English life on American soil in Victoria and Vancouver. We saw Indians, Mexicans, Hindus, adobe houses, wigwams, and pueblos. We saw mountains, valleys, lakes, rivers, seas, and the Pacific Ocean. We saw fish and animals impossible to describe. We saw Long Beach, and Seal Beach, and many other beaches. We saw Hollywood and Burbank and Pasadena and San Gabriel Mission, the oldest Christian institution in the West, planted there before our nation was born. We saw the Golden Gate Park and the ostrich farm and the miles on miles of orchards. We saw the land where geraniums are as plentiful as Queen Anne's lace in a Southern field. We saw St. Louis and Kansas City, Los Angeles and San Francisco, Portland and Seattle, Minneapolis and Chicago. We saw Pacific Garden Mission and our own servants of the Publishing House at Dayton. We saw dear friends in many places and enjoyed curselves in them all. We made new friends, too, whom we shall not forget; but the sweetest memory of our entire journey was the four days we were privileged to spend with a princely family of the Christian Church in Whittier, Calif.

I knew this family in spirit before, but I had never had the pleasure of knowing any member of it personally till on Tuesday afternoon at 2:15 on August 7, I grasped the hand of Mr. M. Orban, Jr., one of the saintliest men I have ever known. Then, in quick succession, we were presented to his equally saintly wife and daughter, Miss Corine. The home of Bro. Orban was formerly in Kansas, but he has lived for several years now in Whittier, Calif. This first meeting of ours was at the Santa Fe station, in Los Angeles, but it seemed that we had known each other for many years before.

After an entrancing drive through the beautiful residential and business sections of Los Angeles, we drove a dozen or so miles to the home of our friends in Whittier. Here we met Mr. M. Orban, Sr., a grand old gentleman, almost totally deaf, but thoroughly Christian and hospitable. He is proud of his son and his family, and they are devoted to him. The mutual affection of the family group is a memory I would not exchange for any similar experience I have been privileged to enjoy. This grand old patriarch is happy in his life's sunset. Those about him who make him happy are far happier than they could be without him. The benediction of a saint like Grandfather Orban to any home cannot be computed. We instinctively thought of Uncle Wellons and the Elon students. How poor life would be without such patriarchs with their words of wisdom, their saintly lives, their cheerful anticipation of the translation experience so near at hand!

For four days this family abandoned themselves to us. Our happiness was all they could think of. Immediately after breakfast, we were in the car, with Miss Corine at the wheel. We literally traveled all the day, stopping only for lunch, and returning to find an appetizing dinner spread for us, prepared in our absence by Mrs. Singleton.

Our evenings were spent, except the first one, on which we visited the oil fields of Santa Fe and Signal Hill, in the quiet of the Orban home. One evening Mrs. Lamont, the married daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Orban, living in Los Angeles, with her husband and little daughter, dined with us. This evening was especially enjoyable, because it gave us our first and only opportunity to know the entire family as a unit.

Mr. Orban began life as clerk in a country store. He was an honest and conscientious merchant when he clerked, as later when he operated his own business, frugal and liberal at once. He married the youngest daughter of Rev. Isaac Mooney, the pioneer minister of the Christian Church in Kansas. Though his family was Presbyterian, he became a devout and loyal member of the Christian Church. His pastor tells of his often-times being the only member present at the midweek prayer service of the Towanda Church, the snow and cold deterring the less ardent.

By what many describe as kindly providence, but by what Bro. Orban calls in his humble faith the goodness of the Lord, he is now a man of wealth and large interests. His prosperity has not been his spiritual undoing. He lives in a modest home. His family divides up the household duties. He performs his daily chores. Luxury is distasteful to them, and waste abhorrent to their spiritual makeup. Bro. Orban regards himself and his family as trustees for God and brotherman. In this spirit, he administers his affairs. It is characteristic of the man to regard the Building and Loan Association which he is president of, as his most profitable business, not in income on money invested, but in enabling the poor people of his town to own their own homes. He does not hesitate to sign a release for part of a piece of property on which he holds a mortgage when he feels the person so favored will use the capital thus secured to establish himself in useful business. Many are the rich men now in his town who love him for having refused to claim what was rightly his when, in their less prosperous days, misfortune overtook them. Bro. Orban, in dealing with his neighbors and friends, is the very opposite of David Harum. And so this modest, kindly man, of simple life and few words, has, in the hearts of his fellows, carved for himself a monument more enduring than bronze. His wife nobly seconds—I had almost said, leads—him in the life of simple, neighborly helpfulness which he lives. But it would be entirely accurate to say that he and his wife are one, in their consecration of heart and purpose, to make their home inside and out thoroughly Christian in aim and ministry. Our lives are rich in the satisfaction of having known these modest Christians just as they are—happy in devout loyalty to Christ and the Church and in the good they can do with the means God has bestowed upon them. God bless the Orban family and multiply their kind.

I went to tell Bro. Orban and his wife about the needs of Elon. When disaster overtook us on January 18th, they voluntarily sent us a check for $5,000. They have stood by Palmer College when the way seemed dark and uninviting to many. I felt sure these people would want to help us complete our building program by giving us the Christian education building—the first of its kind on any college campus in the world, according to Prof. Walter S. Athearn, but the type of building Christian colleges must have if they are to discharge their duty of training leaders for the kingdom of God, leaders for pulpit and pew. This building is to house the religious and social life of the students, is to provide laboratory facilities for classes in religious education, is to contain class-rooms for the professors of Bible and of religious education, and is to have a chapel for the regular chapel exercises and the voluntary student group meetings of the college. The late Henry F. Cope gave his unqualified endorsement to the idea, as also to the building plan. So did the Religious Education Association, in session in Cleveland last April, when the idea was advanced without citing the college for which the building was being projected. The association went on record as urging all Christian colleges to include such a building in their programs of future expansion and service.

Well, we are to have the building! I had not misjudged Bro. Orban, nor his wife. They decided to give us this building and to equip it. Then they commissioned me to inform President Coffin that they would also give Palmer College $50,000, in addition to obligations already assumed. And then they handed me a check for $1,000 for our infant college—Bethlehem, of Wadley, Ala.

This princely gift of at least $101,000 surpasses anything in the history of the Christian Church. It sets a new standard for our people, and must prove epoch-making in its influence. It means the dawn of a new day for Christian education in our Church, a day whose sun arose in the West, proof positive that the day of miracles is not past. The Christian Church thus faces a new opportunity and greets a new challenge. By the blessing of God, she shall enter in and serve as she has never before served the kingdom of our Christ. This princely, this queenly gift, for it is of both genders in spirit and willing sacrifice, has made this larger service possible to us as a people.

We left our friends at the Southern Pacific station, in Los Angeles, on Friday night, August 10th, to begin the long swing homeward through San Francisco, Canada, and the Yellowstone Park. We left with light hearts, and happy for the new friends we had made and learned to love and for the new epoch just reddening the horizon for Christian education in the Christian Church. We left them with spoken words of appreciation and with prayers of thanksgiving in our hearts to God who had made this rich experience for us and this prophetic day for our Church a glad and gracious reality. The train we boarded is called "The Lark." The song of the lark was in our hearts, and will abide there.

Finally, the Christian education building at Elon College is not to be the Orban building. With characteristic modesty, it is to perpetuate the life and usefulness of that grand, good man and father of Bro. Orban's life-companion, the Rev. Isaac Mooney, the pioneer minister of our beloved Church in Kansas, and is to be known as "The Mooney Christian Education Building."

W. A. HARPER.

A BIRDSEYE OF MY FIELD.

Having work in three sections of our Church in this State, and in very able communities, I find our Churches, as well as Churches of other denominations, falling short of their duties. The discouraging part about many of our country Churches is that they are failing to undertake things. The excuse is that they are small, and they are small because they do not undertake enough to be large. The majority of such Churches are possibly putting across the program which they undertake, but they are failing to undertake enough. We possess the best Church in the world—our own Christian Church. Why will we persist in bringing a reproach upon our grand possession by the sin of neglect! God has chosen us as watchmen in the night. Why do we not launch out farther, and reach the unreached, by undertaking more in the biggest business in the world, the saving, through Christ, of men, women, boys and girls for life.

God continues to call the Church—and that means you—into a future greater than the past. We should feel it a disgrace upon ourselves, and it is, not to undertake more and really do more for the advancement of the work of our Christ, through our Church, in the coming years than we have done in the past. This is not only God's challenge, but our duty; and if your Church falls short of its duty some one will be responsible in judgment.

This year is almost gone, and a new Conference year is almost here. What are we going to do with the challenge before us? Let us turn our eyes, hearts and hands toward the upbuilding of our Church and uplifting our Christ, by making the work of the kingdom more attractive with busy servants faithfully undertaking for our God. Let our prayer be not only "Undertake for me, O Lord," but "Lord, teach me how to undertake for Thee," as well.

Belews Creek.

Our series of meetings held during the fourth week in July has added new life to our Church at Belews Creek, N. C. Rev. W. J. Edwards, of Coleridge, N. C., assisted in the meeting. He presented strong Gospel messages in a simple, forcible manner. There were twenty-seven conversions, with seventeen additions to the Church.

Out of the meeting has grown an active prayer meeting. The members have taken it upon themselves to carry out this important phase of service, and each of the services are proving to be a great success. A great and pleasing interest is being shown among the Church membership as well as the whole community.

The Sunday School is doing splendid work. A Bible class has recently been organized, and it is doing much to interest parents in having Christian homes.

We can always count on our young folks for some splendid work at Belews Creek. They are always active in work there. The Christian Endeavor Society is actively engaged in service for the betterment of the Church and community.

Mt. Bethel.

Nearing the end of another year of work at Mt. Bethel, I more and more prize the time spent with these good people. The work this year, while not reaching all that we had desired, has been very successful. At present, the Sunday School is somewhat handicapped by the loss of some of our leaders who are away teaching and attending school. We have three of our members in school at Elon this year. Despite the fact of losses, other faithful leaders of the Church are pledging themselves for a greater service, and our goal is to maintain an active Sunday School throughout the winter, which, by the way, is quite a problem for the rural Churches.

The revival meeting conducted during the third week in July has increased the enthusiasm to make our work more active. Rev. Howard E. Truitt, one of the "home boys," and one of the six ministers which Mt. Bethel has produced, did the preaching. The attendance was good throughout the whole meeting, and much interest was manifested. There were twenty-two conversions and eleven additions to the Church.

During the meeting, a junior choir was organized, and before the meeting closed we had fifty-five children of the community singing in the choir. The close of the meeting did not end this work. On our last preaching day there were about fifty members in the choir. This manifestation of interest on the part of the children is indeed inspiring, and Mt. Bethel has a wonderful future if that talent of the little folks can be developed and nurtured aright.

Berea (Alamance).

The year's work at Berea has shown some marked improvements over last year, and has at least inspired an onward look into a greater future. The revival meeting conducted the first week in July was not marked by a great oversupply of enthusiasm, but proved to be a calm revival of the Church, to the recognition of greater obligations upon Christian men and women, to move forward with a steadfast purpose, grounded in the principles for which Jesus stood. Engineer A. Richard Brothers, of Raleigh, N. C., assisted in these services. He brought some valuable messages, and in his personal touch reached some very influential citizens for Christ.

The Junior Christian Endeavor Society is proving to be a real benefit to our Church, as well as to the community.

Auburn.

Our Auburn field, I believe, is doing a great work toward Christian union. In that field there seems to be that splendid Christian community spirit among Christian, Baptist, Methodist and other denominations that is certain to lead to cooperative efforts of Christian people. During the year there, I could ask for no more cordial support than has been given me from all the people.

The revival held during the second week in August by the pastor, assisted by O. C. Johnson, a member of the Baptist Church and a member of the senior class at Elon this year, proved to be a definite accomplishment. Aside from the revival of the Church members, several influential citizens professed Christ and united with the Church.

The work this year in this field has been a great pleasure and a success, we feel. It is sincerely hoped that these good people may continue adding greater accomplishments to the kingdom. WM. T. SCOTT, Pastor.

OUR MOUNTAIN WORK.

[Mrs. Teague gave two months of faithful and loving service to the Carroll County, Va., work this summer, and knows whereof she writes.—J. O. A.]

Day and night our mountain work is on my heart.

I would that our people of the Christian Church could realize as do some who have had some experience in the work, the need of workers. Our hearts cry out for them, but we know not how to find them except through prayer to Him who knows all, and knows as well where to find those who have presented their bodies a living sacrifice to be used of Him wherever He will have them serve.

We thank and praise God for the encouraging results already achieved from what has been done. We are expecting to see still greater things accomplished in His name.

The greatness of the work staggers one who gets an insight into the need. We have felt the truth of the remark made by one of our workers to another that "What you can do and what I can do is only a drop in the bucket."

We were grieved to know that in one community, where it is our opportunity as a Church to do religious work, there had been no Sunday School since last winter. In the early summer, health conditions were such as to prevent the people coming together, but for the greater part of the time it seems that the failure was due to the lack of workers who could be present regularly to lead in the work.

There are children growing up in homes that are not Christian; shall we tarry and by providing for our work in such a limited way withhold from these the knowledge of the plan of salvation till they have become engrossed and ensnared with the things of this world?

We think of the people there as waiting for the help, the sympathy, the encouragement which we, who have found life, light and liberty through the Gospel, should be able to give them. Waiting to be convinced that God wants everybody saved: that salvation is free for all.

As I see the situation, upon us of the Christian Church lies the responsibility of giving the Gospel to this people. Do we expect any other to come in and do the work? If the responsibility is ours, shall we not be concerned to know what our work is, and hasten to do it with our might, lest hearts be crying out that "No man cares for my soul," and we be found guilty?

To any reader of these lines who would heed the words of our Saviour, "If any man will come after Me, let him deny himself and take up his cross daily and follow Me," I will say here is opportunity for cross-bearing, for real self-denial, and if as we sing "We Count it a Privilege His Cross to Bear," here is the great privilege of being workers together with God in the winning of souls for His kingdom.

Along with the need of workers and in addition to the need of a building for school and Church purpose is the urgent need of houses in which our workers may live. Until this need shall have been provided for, the work will be retarded.

I would that our people could, in some way, be aroused to see, with reference to our mountain work, that the King's business requires haste, and in proof of our loyalty to Him be ready when the calls come from our mission board to do our part, so that the King may come in and enthrone Himself in the hearts of these mountain people for whom, as well as for us, He gave His life. ADA A. TEAGUE.

Burlington, N. C.

If our friends at a distance could look in upon Elon College in its new buildings and see the student body working hard to gain that degree of scholarship for which they are striving, and then look around upon the prospect before us, when the new buildings are completed, we believe there would be real joy in many hearts. Four new buildings are in process of construction, and the fifth will be a little later. The old Elon campus will put on a new appearance. Indeed, it has already done so, and the good work goes on. Dr. Harper keeps his hands full of business, and this is true in spite of the fact that he has the reputation of dispatching business with a rapidity not common in hundreds of business houses. Elon has a fine body of students, and we wish for them the highest success possible in the good work they are now doing. Success here will mean so much to their life work in the future. May the blessings of God attend them.

MISSIONS

THE JAPANESE EARTHQUAKE HORROR.

When the earthquake shock was first reported from Japan, the writer felt very much concerned for the safety of Miss Miriam Goodwin, the amiable daughter of his long-time friend, Prof. Goodwin, of Morganton, N. C. This concern was the deeper because a message from Miss Miriam, just before leaving, was to the effect that she was to sail on the steamship Empress of Canada, which was due to arrive at Yokahama on the very day of the earthquake. Miss Miriam was among the fine student volunteers who graduated last June and has gone as a missionary from the Baptist Church to Korea. A long letter to her home people gives an insight to some very small degree into some of the horrors that attended the earthquake.

"Aboard R. M. S. Empress of Canada,
"September 4, 1923.

"Dear People at Home:

"I have thought of you hourly since the awful catastrophe. We were so afraid you would worry, after you read the papers. We tried for hours to get a cable to you, but everything around Tokyo and Yokahama was down. We were four hundred miles from shore Sunday morning when we got the word from the Empress of Australia that was in the harbor at Yokahama. All day that day we practically 'walked' along because the captain was afraid there would be danger in the harbor. We first began to feel it when the captain sent out a call for fresh water to be used as sparingly as possible. Half of the water was cut off all over the vessel, and we were asked not to wash any clothes. But the horror came to us in full force yesterday morning just after daylight when we came in sight of land. The air had been full of smoke the whole day before, and the heat had been almost unbearably intense. But as we saw the central naval base of Japan burn, the oil tanks had exploded, and several of the ships had sunk.

"The harbor had been full of warships, merchants, etc., of every nation. When the big 'shock' came, the 'Australia' hurried out of the harbor, and in doing so ran into a cable and broke her rudder, so now she is helpless, with no food supply.

"About 9 o'clock yesterday I began to realize what the word 'refugees' means. Our lifeboats began bringing loads from the Australia shortly after breakfast (she had taken on 3,000 people the night before.) You won't believe half I tell you. I wouldn't either if I hadn't seen it. But if you could have seen those boat loads of wounded, naked people, with death and horror in their eyes, you could not forget it.

"About 12 it began to rain, but the Chinese coolies and our English officers kept up and down those rope ladders in a ceaseless stream. One officer came up the ladder with a tiny baby on his back. Another came up on his hands and knees with a wounded woman on his back. A young woman came up on her hands and knees with an old man on her back who had a broken leg. And those people—you can't imagine those people! Splendid-looking American business men in a night shirt—absolutely nothing else, not even socks! One boy in a raincoat, his worldly goods; women in men's underwear, kimonos, bathing suits, a night gown, and very sparse attire. Very few of them had on stockings; their hair all down, bloody, dirty, sick and hungry.

"During the day we took on 1,400 people—Americans, Russians, Hindus, Japanese, Chinese, English and from every country, even one American negro, who is badly wounded. In twenty minutes, relief work was well under way. The ship was a perfect hospital. Our ten missionary doctors worked like Trojans along with the two ship doctors. Immediately the captain sent out a call for clothes. Everybody on board plunged in and worked until we were exhausted. Trunks were unpacked, the baggage room was raided. Every passenger took a refugee to see what he could do for him. The one I got was a lovely girl, the wife of an American naval officer. She was in the Imperial Hotel, and the horrors she tells! She fled to the canal, got into a boat with twenty Japanese coolies—the only woman in the boat. The boat capsized. She swam ashore and spent the night up to her waist in mud in a creek. The next day she got into another boat, but it burned and she was the only person on it who was saved. You should have seen her when I took her into my room. The spare clothing she escaped in was caked with mud. After she had a bath and had put on some of my clothes (she was too small for my dresses) she looked like she was of a different nationality. I gave her a tooth brush, a comb, and a box of powder. You would have given your own last cent almost.

"One of the Japanese missionaries has one of my night dresses. She is old, had not had off her clothes in four days. Another missionary had her arm broken on Saturday morning when her house fell in. She lay on the mountain-side until noon Monday, her arm still unset; then her husband carried her on his back down the mountain to the boat. Her arm was set here on the boat. She, too, has an outfit from my trunk.

"A baby was born this morning on board. You may not believe it, but I practically made a dress for it. It was a Chinese boy. About twenty women passengers were sewing furiously for it and the mother. Another baby that was brought on board unconscious strapped to a plank, died soon after, and was buried at sea today. The Spanish consul and the British vice-consul are on board. The British vice-consul was horribly cut and bruised, and was brought in on a stretcher. There were about twenty stretcher cases. An old man about seventy-five years of age had both legs broken. But I cannot go on. The conditions cannot be exaggerated. Our own men look almost as bad and as motley as the refugees do. They have given so generously. We see everything on deck, from overalls to bathing suits and evening suits. I couldn't help but laugh at one thing yesterday. One boy about twenty-one came on board, up the rope ladder in the rain, with nothing on but his underclothes and one of those gorgeous Chinese opera coats. I worked on deck all day yesterday. Ether, blood and iodine made me afraid they'd have another patient.

"I'm sending this down to Shanghai to be mailed, to escape the Japanese censorship.

"A young Japanese refugee on board, who has studied in America, has lost ten members of his family. Let the whole family see this—it is too horrible to repeat.

"Miss Edwards, a missionary chaperone, says this will affect us in Korea terribly.

(Signed) "Miriam."
J. O. Atkinson.

The Church of Christ is very near to Him. Just as Eve was taken from the side of man, very near to his heart, so the Church is very near to Christ, issuing really from the heart of the Son of God. Jesus is the head of the Church, while the Church is the body of Christ. A wonderful combination of divinity and humanity.

A SKETCH OF BETHLEHEM CHRISTIAN CHURCH, NANSEMOND COUNTY, VA.

By Wilbur E. MacClenny,
Suffolk, Va.

And read by him before the congregation on the occasion of the dedication of the third house of worship since its organization.

Part III.

At the Eastern Virginia Christian Conference, held here in 1868, the Sunday School Convention was planned for, the first session of that body met with the Church at Cypress Chapel in the following year.

A Sunday School was organized here on the third Sunday in May, 1867, Deacon John W. Turlington having been elected superintendent by the Church May 11, 1867.

In 1869, $222.80 was considered enough to run the expenses of the Church for the coming year.

In 1870, this Church gave $15.00 to help Barrett (this was Rev. J. Pressley Barrett, the present editor of The Christian Sun) and Kitchen (Rev. John T. Kitchen, now dead) to remain in school, as they were preparing for the ministry. This is the first mention that we find of anything of this kind. It was repeated in 1871, and in March, 1872, Barrett and Kitchen were asked to hold a prayer-meeting twice per month on Sunday evenings. (The members wanted to see what progress they were making, and we are glad to say both made good.) In 1872, $15.00 was donated to the same young men, and $10.00 was raised for education in 1875; and in 1876 a regular prayer-meeting was ordered held by the Church.

May 5, 1877, a committee of seven was appointed to take into consideration the building of a new Church at Bethlehem, and the following were unanimously chosen: R. J. Bartlette, Harrison E. King, Charles C. Duke, Thomas Parker, Richard Copeland, William Eley, and Wiley Redd.

August 4, 1877, Col. William Eley, R. J. Bartlette, John R. Copeland and Wiley Redd were appointed a building committee for the new Church. Here the record stops short and says nothing more of the new building. But Rev. E. W. Beale, who was then pastor, recorded in his diary, which he kept each day for years before his death, the following:

"Sunday, Oct. 12, 1879.

"A great day at Bethlehem. Dedication of the new Church. Sermon by Rev. W. T. Walker, and collection taken up to help pay the Church debt. About $200.00 in cash and subscriptions."

Rev. W. T. Walker was then the pastor of the Suffolk Christian Church, and was a great-grandson of Rev. James O'Kelly, the organizer of the Christian Church in the South. He, too, had lost an arm in the late war.

In 1879, $10.00 was raised for education, as was $5.00 in 1882.

Home missions are first mentioned in 1885 and in 1887. Foreign missions were given $3.33. In 1894, a resolution was passed that no man who makes or sells intoxicating or malt liquors shall be a member of this Church.

We will now have to hasten on and omit many interesting things, but we want to give a little retrospect of this Church forty years ago, for it was out of that band and their influence that it has been possible for this handsome house of wor-

The foundation for this modern building was laid at least forty years ago, and it was laid as all solid foundations are, with the stone of industry and the cement of thrift. We recall now the names of a great many members of this Church in those days who are now gone. Some of these we must mention: Richard Copeland, deacon and Sunday School superintendent; Mills Pruden, Thomas Parker, John W. Turlington, Col. William Eley, Capt. Charlie Duke, Wiley Redd, Aaron Archer, William Cooper, John T. Norfleet, John G. King, John H. Smith, Col. John R. Copeland, R. J. Bartlette, Harrison E. King, Robert W. Nelms, and J. Samuel Copeland.

Among the sisters of forty years ago known to me will be mentioned Ann E. King, Martha King, Martha W. Copeland, Edith E. Archer, Mary J. Williams, Camilla C. Peel, Martha Hedgepeth, Moninia Eley, Elizabeth A. Bartlette, Media Ann Powell, Nancy E. Cooper, Cornelia Hodges, Elizabeth Kellam, Virginia P. D. Portlock, Salinda Smith, Ann Kellam, Josephine F. Eley and Sarah Taylor. Had we the time for reminiscences, perhaps something might be said of the personality of each one of the above, but time forbids this, and we shall only mention three of the sisters. Mrs. Camilla Peel, a godly woman, like Dorcas of old, always seeking out the worthy needy and ministering to their needs in a very quiet and unobserved way. When the last great day shall come, many, we believe, will arise and call her blessed, for her works do follow her.

The other two were sisters, Misses Elizabeth and Ann Kellam, who lived over there near the school-house. They owned the little farm, kept cattle, hogs and poultry, and always went in an ox-cart or on foot, these being their only means of transportation. By industry, thrift and frugality, they accumulated some property, and, notwithstanding they were robbed once of some of their money, they being afraid to trust a bank, since the Commercial Bank of Suffolk failed with some of their money in it (tradition, however, says they got it all back from the cashier when they called upon him in their dresses of the style of fifty years before, and demanded it), and when they realized that they were nearing the end of life's journey, each made a will and gave the major part of their estates to the Church here. This was later sold and the proceeds placed in the bank as the nest egg for a building fund for this edifice. Then the ladies and girls took a hand in the matter, and the nest egg was added to from time to time until sufficient funds had been accumulated to warrant the beginning of the building, then the membership came together and made subscriptions and the work was started, and continued until today you have this house here like a light-house pointing the people of this community to a higher and better life.

But some may ask how was all this done? We will answer, like Nehemiah of old: "The people had a mind to the work," and each member, as it were, worked over against his own house. Those who had standing timber gave that; those who had mills, loaned the use of them for the preparation of the materials; those who were skilled in any line of workmanship, gave their best for the house of God, and so well have they all wrought that the people of Virginia now have one more handsome country Church, which will be one of the greatest assets of this community.

The building committee for the present house —W. B. Byrd (chairman), R. Wesley Nelms, W. Ermott White, E. F. Cullifer, E. L. Cullifer, J. E. Harris, Jr., and Sydney R. McClenny—have been ably assisted by the other members of the Church. The Ladies' Aid Society has done effective financial work through many years and has greatly assisted in many ways in bringing about the wonderful results we see today.

There is one peculiar thing about this Church. There are here today two brothers, one supervised the cutting of the logs for the house built in 1879, and the other sawed the bill at the mill of Messrs. Duke and Smith. When this house was begun they both took an active part, one preparing the lumber and the other aiding, and then both did their part in the construction of the building. Perhaps this has never before happened in Virginia, when two brothers have helped to build two Churches on the same spot, forty-four years apart. (After the address, both brothers, W. J. and A. J. Pierce, were brought to the platform and introduced to the audience.)

And, more, it has been done by the membership of the Church and their personal friends—no boards of the Conference or the Convention have assisted in financing the proposition. The membership should feel proud of this fact, and were more of our Churches to follow their example, they would soon have new Churches. This course has taught this Church and community self-reliance, and will in the future give them a feeling of gratitude to know that they have left this heritage to their children.

The following have been the officers of the Church: Pastors—Rev. W. B. Wellons, 1847; Dr. P. S. B. Corbin and Rev. R. H. Costen, assistants, in 1867 and 1868; Rev. C. A. Apple, assistant, in 1869; Rev. John N. Manning, assistant, in 1870; Rev. C. A. Apple, pastor, 1871; Rev. Dr. William B. Wellons, pastor, in 1874; Rev. E. W. Beale, pastor, in 1876; Rev. John U. Newman, in 1881; Rev. M. W. Butler, in 1882; Rev. Z. A. Post, 1884; Rev. R. A. Ricks, 1884; Rev. W. W. Staley, 1885; Rev. H. H. Butler, 1888 to 1912; Rev. Stanley C. Harrell, from 1912 to February 16, 1918, when he was called to the colors in the World War; Dr. I. W. Johnson, from February 16, 1918, to December, 1918; Rev. E. T. Cotten, from December 7, 1918, to November 21, 1921; Rev. W. M. Jay, from November, 1921, to 1922, when the present pastor, Rev. T. E. White, became pastor. Perhaps others preached here before and during the War Between the States whose names we have not found.

Secretaries—Those before the War Between the States unknown; Colonel John R. Copeland, to 1874; Harrison E. King, 1874 to 1887; Junius W. Folk, 1887 to the present.

Collectors and treasurers—We know nothing before 1861; Wiley Knight, 1861 to 1867; Thomas Parker, 1867 to 1879; David McClenny, 1879 to the present.

Deacons—Capt. Richard Copeland, Col. William Eley, Robert J. Bartlette, John Turlington, David McClenny, John Z. T. Yates, Mills E. Pruden, Darius King, J. W. Folk, John S. Copeland, W. S. N. Wright, William H. Holland, H. T. Taylor, W. Ermott White, and Fred C. Holland. Some may be omitted before the War of 1861.

Sunday School superintendents—John W. Turlington, 11th of May, 1867; Capt. Richard Copeland, John Z. T. Yates, Mills E. Pruden, S. J. Holland, John E. T. Yates, and since 1887 the Sunday School has been electing its own officers.

The Eastern Virginia Christian Conference has met here as follows: 1849, 1868, 1882, and 1897, and the Sunday School Convention of the Eastern Virginia Christian Conference has met here several times.

The following evangelists have visited the Church from time to time: Revs. Isaac N. Walter, of Ohio; R. H. Costen, Dr. C. J. Jones, M. L. Hurley, Wm. H. Boykin, John W. Harrell, J. F. Morgan, Dr. C. H. Rowland, and others.

It might be said in passing that at no time has the country called for help in a time of need that this community has not given a hearty and ready response. In the French and Indian War, men left here to join Braddock's army. In the Revolution, the people responded, with men and provisions. In the War of 1813, the militia from this section helped to keep the British from landing at Craney Island. In the Mexican War, one of the few veterans was at one time a resident of this community. In the War Between the States, we have seen what it did. In the Spanish War, there were men from this community with the colors, and in the late World War this community sent her quota, and some will carry the scars received in that conflict with them to the grave; and, too, they helped in other ways besides sending men. No call of the country fell upon deaf ears.

From the date of its organization to the present moment the Church has stood for the best that there was in the community, in morals, in citizenship and religion, and while some have turned back, yet we must believe that many have been blest by the holy vine planted on this hill, and her members have fulfilled their declaration that they would try to be free from sin in its many forms and that they would try to point others to the Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world. May she ever shine in the religious life of this section as a star of the first magnitude until the muse of history shall write the word finis with a pen of fire.

BETHLEHEM COLLEGE NOTES.

Since the opening, new pupils have continued to come in, and there are prospects for others. There is that cordial, co-operative spirit with teacher and pupil that will make it a desirable influence for the development of Christian character.

We thank you very much for your subscription to the proposition of the financial secretary. We were at Cragford a few days ago and brought back five checks, one for furnishing a dormitory room and four for Bro. Hunt's proposition. The Sunday School at Wadley had a fine time last Sunday when the proposition was mentioned. Thirteen gave $5.00 each, and class No. 2 decided to furnish a room. This class has subscribed $125.00 for the building fund and paid $25.00 of that. This is indeed a fine showing, and whenever the cause of the school is mentioned there will, no doubt, be found other Churches and schools will follow this noble spirit.

Three ministerial students are enrolled. These young men left good positions and are putting themselves to the task, under the blessings of God, that they may be qualified for larger and better work for the kingdom.

Efforts are being made for a good session of Conference. Many of our Churches are in fine spiritual condition. Some changes in pastorates are being made. We are expecting to be with us, and take part in the work of Conference, Prof. P. J. Kernodle, THE SUN'S managing editor; Superintendent Chas. D. Johnston, of our Orphanage, and, of course, Dr. J. O. Atkinson is coming. We would be glad if others would come also, for instance, Dr. W. A. Harper. We fear he has forgotten the way.

For our union revival this summer we were fortunate in securing Rev. O. D. Poythress, South Norfolk, Va., to do the preaching. With a deep passion for lost souls, he never became tired. He won the affection of our people of all the Churches, and has now a welcome into our midst at any time. This is true with the work at Cragford. He assisted us there also.

The District Sunday School Convention at Rock Stand yesterday was fine. The people of this community are very active in Sunday School and Christian Endeavor work. Let more of our Churches follow. E. M. CARTER.

FAMILY ALTAR

"In Thee and in Thy seed shall the families of of the earth be blessed."—Gen. 28:14.

Conducted by Rev. H. E. Rountree,
Our Chaplain in the United States Navy.
(Use this in your daily devotions.)

MONDAY.

Rejoicing in Tribulation.

Paul said to the Corinthians: "I overflow with joy in all our tribulations"; and then he explains that their afflictions were of a godly sort, and that they had worked in them repentance and salvation until they were pure in the matter, and, to them, that was the greatest comfort of the world. In it his spirit was refreshed. None of their tribulations had put them to shame, therefore he took courage in the Gospel of Christ (2 Cor. 7:4-16). To the Romans, he said: "Let us rejoice in our tribulations," because they steel us to the highest type of character and lead to no shame (Rom. 5:3-5). John tells us that tribulations are necessary, for through them we enter into the kingdom of God (16:23; Acts 14:22). It was this fact that enabled Paul and Silas to sing when they were fettered in jail. He who trusts God and makes the best of everything finds the hard places stepping-stones to something better. Count your misfortunes and brood over them and you drive away the angel of blessing.

Prayer.

We give Thee hearty thanks, dear Father, for every good example, for every inspiration we have known, for every uplifting thought, and for Jesus Christ, who lifts us now. By Thy mercy, reclaim us from worries, stir us to the higher and better things, where it is always well with the soul. Lift us from the sinking sands to the plains of light, where we may live forever. Amen.

TUESDAY.

Self-Denial and Self-Forgetfulness.

"I am your brother in tribulation."—Rev. 1:19.

The sacrifices of John, and he himself, were totally eclipsed by the transcendent glory of the sacrifice of the Lord Jesus Christ and by the great needs of the people back at home. It was this loss of self that made him a fit subject for the book of Revelation. Life is frought with the perils of selfishness, personal pleasures and what we consider "my rights." This spirit destroys sympathies, seeks not the welfare of others and denies the highest type of manhood. Are you in need? There are others, and they are needing you. Are you distressed? There are others who need your comfort. Are you sick? Pray for them and send them your blessing. Are you afflicted? There are others, minister to them. In so doing, you forget self, and the first laws of God are fulfilled. Your yoke becomes easy.

Prayer.

Our Father, we thank Thee for Thy truth. Fire our souls with its good. Open our eyes to the needs around us and send us forth to help. Help us to lose ourselves in the things of God and mankind, and press on toward the mark of the prize of the high calling, which is service for Thee. Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

Companions With Christ.

"Enoch walked with God."—Gen. 5:24.

*"Noah * * * walked with God."*—Gen. 9:9.

Jesus feasted with sinners, attended marriage feasts with his friends, visited in the homes of loved ones and those distresed, viited in the home of a despised tax-collector. Each and every one who fellowshipped him became aware of his Love for them and gloriously free from their sins. As they entered into His experiences and understood His sufferings for them, they received the power of spiritual perception and divine grace, and they themselves became distinguished from the world by the pure white. They grew strong in persecution and suffering themselves, and thereby became vehicles of His Gospel. To be a companion with the Lord is our highest privilege. He has promised never to leave us. The thought of the possibility of this companionship should excite us to increasing devotion. In Him, no amount of exile or hardship can destroy or reduce our sense of His fellowship, and we march together with power to victory.

Prayer.

Most Gracious Father, we adore Thee for the gifts of life, which cannot be bought nor fashioned, but which we may have for the asking. May we find in Thee the answer to every question, the solution to every problem, and a help in every time of need. When we find our way difficult and are about to become discouraged, help us to look to Thee, in whom to be approved is everlasting life. Amen.

THURSDAY.

Repentance.

"The goodness of God leadeth thee to repentance."—Rom. 2:4.

"Repentance" first meant "change of mind." The parable of the two sons is Christ's explanation of it. When the father had told them to do a certain job, one said that he would not. "But afterward he repented and did it." He changed his mind.

Repentance unto salvation is more than a change of mind in regards to our course, and of attitude in regards to God, and of spirit in regards to our sins, and God cannot change a man who does not change his mind to these things; but repentance means also a deep sorrow for sons and a turning completely from them to God. Therefore, we are commanded to repent (Acts 17:30), and it becomes a necessary part of our saving faith. Repentance is not limited to non-professors. The best may need it, for Job, who was "an upright man and eschewed evil, repented in dust and ashes."

Prayer.

Dear Father, we are lost without Thee. O enable us to come to Thee in true repentance and love. Reclaim us by Thy mercy, and may we daily perform and possess its efficacy for all wrong and know that we live in Thee. In Christ's name. Amen.

FRIDAY.

Abounding Grace.

"Where sin doth abound, grace did abound more exceedingly."—Rom. 5:20.

"God is able to make all grace abound to you." —2 Cor. 9:8.

You will profit by reading the following passages also: 2 Tim. 1:9; Col. 1:19, 20; Jas. 4:6, 7; Rom. 3:24.

All life is abounding life. The word "impossible" is being wiped out. We may speak through the air and the world may hear. We have yoked lightning to machinery. We have divided continents and connected the seas. We are turning the deserts into fruitful vineyards. We are reducing diseases to naught. Nothing is impossible. This is life abounding, and a development which is a part of God's scheme to perfect the world. And we are a part of it.

It is grievous to God for one to say that it is impossible to get rid of sins, for He hath promised and is ever faithful. When we balk, He weeps as He did over Jerusalem. "How oft would I * * * but ye would not." Wherever sin may be, grace is there more exceedingly, and there is no excuse for us not having it all.

Prayer.

Our Father, we thank Thee for all Thy blessings; we acknowledge our sins and beseech Thee to forgive us, restore us and give to each of us Thy grace that flows like a river and is as the waves of the sea. May we drink at the fountain of Thy love, and find in Thee the fountain of all virtue. Amen.

SATURDAY.

What Is Grace?

We are told that it is mercy, pardon, favor, kindness, the free and undeserved love of God toward a sinner. Dr. Meyer says it is "the love of God engaged in repair of the soul." In heaven, grace is known as glory; but in a world of sin and dying man, grace is the power of God that goes forth to forget our misdeeds and repair our souls unto what they ought to be. When we cut the flesh or break a bone, nature repairs it and heals it. Battle-scarred Grance and Belgium have been repaired with green grass, creeping vines, rich gardens. Nature has repaired this and brought it forth a new earth. That is nature's grace, which is God's grace for the fields. Sin and sorrow plays havoc with man's life and soul. God's love yearns to repair it and save it from its loss. All that He is, converges in a single life to accomplish this. That is His grace, and it is so exceedingly abundant for us that evil is nothing in its power. The ship is superior to the storm. God's grace is superior to all enemies of the soul.

Prayer.

Dear Father, we thank Thee for the preservation of our lives and for protecting us from harm and danger. Reveal to us, step by step, that holiness, wisdom and goodness that doth much more abound than evil, and inspire us as to how well we may do. Defend us against sin and grant that all our doings may be ordered by Thee. Amen.

SUNDAY.

The Sabbath and Us.

"The Sabbath was made for man, and not man for the Sabbath."—Mark 2:27.

These are the words of our Lord. They were said at a time when the Sabbath was being terribly misused. Sabbath desecration is no new question. Our Lord spoke and saved it from decay and confirmed it as a spiritual institution. When He set it apart, He provided for man's highest need. Man has always needed the calm of deep content, refining influences, physical reserve, mental efficiency, spiritual growth, restored balance, recreation of tired bodies and frazzled nerves, religious and spiritual instruction, divine worship and continual tuning with the infinite. From the beginning, the Sabbath has held all this for him, and Jesus sanctifies it in a way that will make us totally good, and we are forever under obligations regarding our higher life.

Prayer.

Dear Father, help us to begin this day with an eye of singleness to Thy glory and a determination to reach the best in moral and spiritual attainment. In Jesus' name. Amen.

OUR MEETING AT MT. GILEAD.

We had a very successful meeting following the second Sunday in September, the Church being greatly revived. There was a large number of reconsecrations and fifty professions. Frty of these united with the Church. We all feel very grateful to Bro. Franks for his faithful labor among us. We all wish him well as he takes up the work there another year as pastor.

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON,
Superintendent.

IT IS WORTH AN HONEST AND FAIR TRIAL

Many of our Churches and Sunday Schools are falling into old "ruts," and thereby comes a loss of interest in the opening services. Then we hear people talking of needing something fresh and helpful to make the interest good in the services. Often we resort to things of doubtful value in order to have a fresh feature in the order of the services. Now, if you must have something new, let us try to be sure that we are getting something that can, and most likely will, be really helpful and interesting to all, or as nearly as possible.

The Sunday School Times gives the following as a good form for the order of service. We wish some of our very competent schools or Churches —for it will be suitable in either service, and withal helpful—would try the following:

A "Bible" Order of Service.

A suggestive order of service for the Sunday School is the following. The general theme is "The Holy Scriptures, Our Textbook."

A moment of prayer.

Superintendent.—"Blessed is the man that walketh not in the counsel of the ungodly, nor standeth in the way of sinners, nor sitteth in the seat of the scornful." (Psa. 1:1.)

School.—"But his delight is in the law of the Lord; and in His law doth He mediate day and night." (Psa. 1:2.)

Hymn.—"Break, Thou, the Bread of Life."

Superintendent.—"All Scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness." (2 Tim. 3:16.)

Women and Girls.—"That the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works." (2 Tim. 3:17.)

Pastor.—"Prophecy came not in old time by the will of man; but holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost." (2 Peter 1:21.)

School.—"The law of the Lord is perfect, converting the soul: the testimony of the Lord is sure, making wise the simple." (Psa. 19:7.)

Hymn.—"Oh, How I Love Thy Law."

Superintendent.—"Search the Scriptures: for in them ye think ye have eternal life: and they are they which testify of Me." (John 5:39.)

Men and Boys.—"Wherewithal shall a young man cleanse his way? By taking heed thereto according to Thy word." (Psa. 119:9.)

School.—"Thy word have I hid in mine heart, that I might not sin against Thee." (Psa. 119: 11.)
